Congressional Record

U. S. Congress

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

SECOND SESSION OF THE SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS

OF

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY
NEW CASTLE, PA.

VOLUME LXII—PART 12

AUGUST 29 TO SEPTEMBER 22, 1922

(Pages 11885-13184)

WASHINGTON
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
1922

AUTHENTICATED
U.S. GOVERNMENT
INFORMATION
GPO

R 328.73

88167

FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY
NEW CASTLE, PA.

Congressional Record.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, August 29, 1922.

(Legislative day of Friday, August 25, 1922.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following Senate bills:

S. 813. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close upper Water Street between Twenty-first and Twenty-second Streets; and

S. 2597. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, and safety, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in the alleys of the District of Columbia," approved September 25, 1914.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3086) providing for the removal of snow and ice from the paved sidewalks of the District of Columbia, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11116) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1869, as amended, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. DYER in place of Mr. Walsh as a conferee on the part of the House on the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes.

COMPENSATION OF WORLD WAR VETERANS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes.

Mr. COLT obtained the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. COLT. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	McKellar	Robinson
Ball	Frelinghuysen	McNary	Sheppard
Borah	Gerry	Nelson	Simmons
Brandegee	Glass	New	Smith
Bursum	Gooding	Newberry	Sterling
Calder	Hale	Nicholson	Sutherland
Cameron	Heflin	Oddie	Townsend
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Trammell
Colt	Kellogg	Pepper	Underwood
Culberson	Kendrick	Phipps	Wadsworth
Cummins	Keyes	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Lenroot	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Lodge	Ransdell	Warren
Dillingham	McCormick	Rawson	Watson, Ga.
Edge	McCumber	Reed, Pa.	Willis

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President—

I am proud of the fact that the pensions we have voted in this House to the men who have served us well in the field and in the air and on the sea are incomparably the most generous in Europe. Ingratitude chills the ardor of service, and no State has long thriven which does not display its gratitude to those who have served it well in its time of peril. It was really one of the marked features of distinction between Rome and Carthage, and the lesson is not without its value.

These are the words of the Prime Minister of England relative to the granting of war gratuities to British soldiers and sailors; and the example of Great Britain in granting war gratuities to her soldiers and sailors has been followed by all our associates in the Great War; by France, by Italy, by Belgium, by Canada, by Australia, and by New Zealand. Notwithstanding the gigantic burdens of debt resulting from the war, all these nations have shown their gratitude by voluntary gifts to the men who served their country in time of peril. All these countries have realized that the real strength of a nation rests upon a generous outpouring of gratitude to those who have served it well in time of grave peril, and that the absence of such a sentiment of gratitude is a sure indication of national weakness and decline.

Mr. President, the fundamental question underlying the pending bill is whether the United States, upon the victorious close of a world war which threatened the overthrow of civilization, and following the example of all our associates in that war, will manifest its gratitude by rewarding the soldiers and sailors who rendered us faithful service in that war.

In the consideration of this question let us ever bear in mind that our service men were "soldiers of liberty sent overseas at a moment when the fate of the world was at stake." Let us also remember that all the service men on the side of the Allies were fighting for the same great cause. "They were brothers in arms, sharers of a common glory and a common sacrifice"; and the friendship between America and our allies, sealed in blood on the fields of France, will forever prove a most potent factor in securing the future peace of the world. As sharers in a common glory and a common sacrifice, I believe America should show the same feeling of gratitude that our associates have exhibited in rewarding those who have rendered service in the Great War. If we fail to do this we are not acting in harmony with the true spirit of America, or with the great part we played in the war, or with the commanding position we now occupy in the world.

Mr. President, there are two other thoughts which occur to me at this time. A momentous and surprising feature of the World War was the national unity of America. Made up of some 40 different races it was not believed that we were a nation in any true sense. We were compared to Austria-Hungary and not to France. And yet, when war was declared there was a national uprising unmatched, I believe, in the annals of mankind. As an illustration of national unity more than 400,000 aliens voluntarily enlisted under the Stars and Stripes. I would do nothing to mar or chill that national spirit. I would do nothing which might be interpreted as ingratitude towards our soldiers and sailors.

Again, what we term nationality, which America has exhibited in its highest form, is founded upon affinity and affection. It is something akin to the family tie. Where nationality exists it exerts a most powerful and dominating influence. As seen in America and Switzerland it may appear in a country inhabited by different races and speaking different languages. I would do nothing to weaken the ties of nationality. I would do everything to keep alive and strengthen this fountain head of national patriotism.

In contemplating the World War let us also never forget that "ingratitude chills the ardor of service," and that if our service men had not been inspired by the highest patriotism the war would have been indefinitely prolonged with all its additional sacrifice of life and increase of the national debt.

Mr. President, all our associates in the war, confronted with conditions far less fortunate than ours, have treated the expenditure called for by this bill as a necessary and indispensable part of their war expenses, and they have not hesitated a moment in assuming this additional burden. There is no use, of course, in denying the fact that it is an additional burden, although the outlays called for by the bill may be extended over a long period of years, and although we can bear this burden much easier than our associates in the war. Convinced, however, upon mature reflection that this bill involves a vital principle in our national life, most essential to the honor, good faith, and future welfare of the country, I can not conscientiously vote against it, for I believe a vote against this bill is a vote against the principle involved in the bill.

Though this bill should fail to become a law, I believe that the cause will not die, and that in the end the American people will insist upon the passage of a similar measure.

If you break faith with us who die,
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
In Flanders fields.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I am for the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill because I believe it is nothing more than a square deal for the men who did the fighting. We all cheered the soldiers lustily when they went to the depot in 1917, but now we seem to be singing a different song. All other nations participating in the World War gave their soldiers a bonus and did it promptly. The United States, by far the richest country in the world, is better prepared to do this than any other nation. I favor the bonus as a matter of right and not as charity. The moral argument for the bonus can not be ignored. It is a debt of honor justly due these men and it should be discharged cheerfully and promptly. The men for whom we ask this bonus served and sacrificed and the Nation should show its appreciation of willing service in a substantial way. It is true our Government is carrying a heavy load, but the total cost of the bonus will be less than $4,000,000,000 distributed over a period of 40 years, with a cash outlay of only $77,000,000 the next year.

This country, with all its unstinted force and power, during 1917 and 1918 unselfishly gave to the world thousands of lives, billions of dollars, and, because certain groups always profit by war, thousands were made wealthy. Thousands that were made wealthy are now the chief opponents of equalizing the opportunity and pay of thousands of men who sacrificed all ambitions and worldy goods in a spirit of patriotism never known before in any country in the world. It is being proven daily that the Government has failed even to provide properly for its disabled and the dependents of thousands who gave their lives. If this be true, it is equally true that the Government has failed to express the gratitude of the people to the men and women who served in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps during the war. So far as I know about the only thing done by Congress to express the gratitude of the people in a fitting manner was a resolution of thanks passed by Congress and presented to General Pershing, and when General Pershing accepted it, he accepted it for the men who fought under him and not for himself.

It is quite true that the Government could not attempt to pay each individual for the service that he or she rendered. The service man lost more than a year's time and his prospects for advancement, or for a complete education. Some men sacrificed their lives. Thousands are wounded or maimed for life, and many sacrificed thousands of dollars. Some are better men for their service while others will never recover from the strenuous days of their disrupted lives. But the Congress, expressing the will of the people, can in some measure during the difficult time of readjustment attempt to assist these noble men to reestablish themselves.

Mr. President, the most powerful influence in opposition to the adjusted compensation bill is the United States Chamber of Commerce. At its annual meetings of 1920 and 1921 the chamber adopted resolutions upon four propositions affecting compensation for service men. Three of these propositions were indorsed and the fourth was opposed both years.

Following this action last winter the chamber decided to hold a referendum on the propositions upon which its annual meetings have twice taken the same action, and in the ballot sent to the members with which they were to cast their votes the action of the two annual meetings was pointed out. Thus, in what purported to be a referendum to the members, it presented the policy the chamber has laid down on two successive years on the four propositions in question.

Although the fivefold adjusted compensation bill had been before Congress a long time, the chamber ignored this and took a referendum, not upon the measure before Congress but upon a measure of its own concocting which it had twice passed upon before.

Only 55 per cent of the chamber's membership voted upon the propositions, and a large proportion of these votes came from the large centers of industry, like New York and Philadelphia. In spite of this, only one proposition out of the four received less votes in favor than it did against, and of the total votes on the four propositions submitted, 4,116 votes were cast in favor of all bonus propositions to 2,657 against them.

Notwithstanding this, Mr. Barnes, president of the chamber, has just issued a letter to business organizations in every State advising them to oppose the compensation bill and stating that it will increase the liabilities of the Government beyond any point reached in the history of the country. The business men are urged to notify Congress that they oppose the soldiers' measure. The fact is, the cash bonus to which the United States Chamber of Commerce objects would not be day wages for the time the boys were in the service. But the bonus is simply a part of the "five-way" plan by which it is proposed to offer the ex-service men the choice of farm land, an education, aid in buying a home, or a paid-up insurance policy.

Mr. President, many of the opponents of the compensation bill claim that the banks can not afford to lend their money to soldiers on their adjusted service certificates. In one of its official statements the chamber of commerce estimated that these loans would total $600,000,000 for the three-year period. What is the condition of the banks of the United States to-day regarding their ability to loan money? The New York Times Annalist, in its issue of August 7 of this year, says on this point:

If the consensus of capable, competent, clear-thinking bankers is to be accepted as a forecast, money rates are to continue easy. The banking fraternity as a whole can see nothing ahead but a long period of time in which the greatest difficulty will be to find employment for funds rather than funds for such employment as may present itself.

This in spite of the fact that on July 1, in an article in the New York Times, it was estimated that—the total capital financing accomplished in this country for the six months ending July 1, 1922, amounted to $3,178,373,927.

Some other examples of financing quoted are that for the first seven months of 1922, $741,000,000 of municipal bonds were sold on the American market, or double the amount of this type of bond put out in 1920.

The Treasury offerings of $300,000,000, 4¼ per cent, four-year notes were oversubscribed four times this summer. Total rediscounts on Government and commercial paper by banks is only $400,000,000, whereas at the peak it was $2,500,000,000.

In spite of all these stupendous financial operations money continues easy, and there is to-day $500,000,000 more on deposit in the banks of New York City alone than there was a year ago.

Mr. President, I believe the war profiteers and the peace profiteers owe a bonus to the soldiers of the World War. There is no better guaranty against militarism than to require the men who profit out of war to pay for it. Those who remained at home made enough here in the United States to enable us to pay many times over the debt we owe to the men who fought our battles. Wall Street wants to pay it with a sales tax, which would be paid largely by the farmers, the laboring people, and others in the form of a tax on food and clothing and other necessities. I will never cast my vote for a sales tax or any other device which shifts tax burdens to the backs of the poor in higher prices and increased cost of living. Taxes to pay the bonus or taxes for any other purpose should be laid upon wealth in proportion to ability to pay.

Profiteering during the war produced one American millionaire for every three American soldiers killed in France. I would like to see the Government recover the hundreds of millions of dollars stolen from the Treasury by the crooks and grafters who profiteered off the Government in war contracts and then use that money to pay the soldiers' bonus.

Then there is another way we can raise the money. Let us go after the billions that the foreign Governments owe us, collect the interest promptly, and pay it to our soldiers. There is no use disguising the fact that our international bankers want us to wipe out this foreign debt. It will make their foreign securities that much stronger. If we decline to cancel this debt, these Governments probably will try to borrow more money from us to pay us what they owe. So far as I am concerned, I will never vote to cancel one dollar of that debt and I will never vote to lend another dollar of Government funds to any foreign nation.

Mr. President, the Congress has authorized the settlement of claims of all other groups suffering economical or financial loss during the war, and it is but justice that we now propose to equalize the compensation of the men who actually fought and won the war. Congress has more than once recognized the principle of adjusted compensation to equalize financial loss during the war. It recognized it in its annual bonus for Federal employees, which payments were as follows:

1918	$11,000,000
1919	18,000,000
1920	53,000,000
1921	$64,000,000
1922	42,000,000
1923	37,241,000
Total	225,241,000

Take the case of the armed forces of the country—the Army, the Navy, the Coast Survey, the Public Health Service. The Congress has recognized the propriety of an adjustment of their compensation under public law 210, which stated that it was "An act to promote the efficiency of the Army, Navy, etc." During the two and a half years in which this law was in existence an adjustment of compensation in the pay to the Navy was $70,000,000 and to the Army between twenty-five and thirty million dollars. Adding the adjusted pay of the Coast Survey, Public Health Service, and Coast Guard to this, it brings an adjustment of pay to the armed forces of the country in excess of $100,000,000 for the two and a half year period ending June 30, 1922.

Thus it will be seen that the Congress has already in these two cases adjusted the pay of its own employees $325,000,000.

Other adjustments of pay have been recognized by the Federal Government. The war contractors have received in excess of $3,000,000,000 as an adjustment of pay on their contracts. This, of course, in addition to the countless millions that the contractors made while the soldiers, now asking adjustment of their compensation, were risking their lives for a dollar a day.

The railroads also have received an adjustment of compensation. Under the transportation act, $764,271,010 has been paid to the railroads up to August 1, 1922.

Thus it will be seen that, in practically all cases, except the soldiers who bore the brunt of the war, persons and corporations have received an adjustment of their war compensation, and, in addition, that the amounts already paid out on this are in excess of the total amount now proposed to adjust the compensation of the soldiers.

What is the present financial situation of the Government? Six months ago Secretary Mellon estimated there would be a deficit at the end of the present year. But what were the facts? When the year ended there was found to be a surplus of $313,000,000 in addition to a reduction in the national debt of $1,014,000,000. We have retired $5,000,000,000 war bonds in the last three years. That sum is at least a billion dollars greater than any possible requirements for the bonus. It is obvious that the bonus would not strain Government liabilities.

What is the answer to the entire question, Mr. President? It is this: The soldiers have justly earned the compensation due them, and have waited already too long for it now. The Government has recognized the principle and has paid out to others in the meantime more than the pending legislation calls for. And still the soldier waits. I think the taxes which may result from the payment of this debt can be borne by the Government without much difficulty, and the banks of the country are in such flourishing condition that they should be eager to lend the soldier such amounts as his necessities may require upon his adjusted-service certificate as security.

Mr. President, I ask consent to incorporate in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an appeal from the Disabled American Veterans of the World War—next to the American Legion the strongest soldier organization in the country—signed by C. Hamilton Cook, national commander, asking for the prompt passage of the adjusted compensation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Kansas is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR, NATIONAL REHABILITATION COMMITTEE,
Washington, August 22, 1922.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As the national commander the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, I wish to inform you officially that at the annual encampment of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, held recently, resolutions were adopted unanimously calling upon the Congress to enact the adjusted compensation bill.

The Disabled Veterans of the World War have a membership of 120,000 men, which includes a majority of the soldiers, sailors, and marines who have survived the disabilities received during the fighting.

Speaking for the disabled veterans, I wish to state that service men of the true stripe, whether disabled or not, stick together. They stuck together over there, and they have done so over here. Before our own organization of disabled was banded together the American Legion, practically alone, fought our battles with Government incompetence and neglect.

Since the adjusted compensation bill has become an important issue before the country organizations and individuals who profited much during the halcyon days of war contracts have suddenly evinced an acute interest in our welfare.

They say America is not rich enough, big enough, and strong enough to pay what we owe to our soldiers who gave only their time, their opportunity of war profits—who risked only their lives for their country. They say, by inference, should we do justice to the well we can not care for the wounded.

I wish to say to you, Mr. Senator, that the disabled soldiers do not believe this.

The country has demonstrated that it has had sufficient to pay an adjustment of compensation to the Federal employees, to the Regular Army and Navy, to the railroad, and to the war contractors.

Has the Congress of the United States exhausted its country's resources on these, so it must tell its soldiers that peace hath its victories greater than wars; that service is more sure of recognition in the factory than in the trench?

The impending passage of the adjusted compensation bill has at last awakened the war profiteer, the man of large business and swollen income, to the plight of the disabled. That is a good thing to happen at last, and it took the adjusted compensation bill to do it. And the war cripples needed the assistance of these as much three years ago as they do now.

But these business men and organizations—where were they when the Legion was fighting for the passage of the hospital bills and for other legislation for the aid of the disabled soldiers? At no time that I can recall has the Chamber of Commerce of the United States officially appeared before a senatorial or congressional committee to ask for relief for the disabled.

Yet the interests who profited most during the war are now banded together in a concerted effort—a tremendous effort—these people who heretofore had forgotten the war wrecked young manhood of the Nation except to speak of their plight with sympathy on proper occasions—they are now striving to impress the Senate with their power and their desire to defeat the compensation bill.

And they are trying to make it appear that the disabled oppose this just bill.

It is the belief of the disabled war veterans that the men whose profit was greatest and whose risk was nothing during the war should at least have the grace now to stand aside in favor of the men who risked all and sought nothing but the safety of their country.

I have come down to Washington to help put an end to the bogy that the disabled soldier opposes adjusted compensation. This false argument has been used long enough.

I have joined Commander MacNider of the Legion here, so that all may know that we are standing firmly behind him and his organization.

The disabled soldiers want their buddies to receive justice, and they want the Senate of the United States to know that they want the adjusted compensation bill passed, and passed without further delay.

Yours very truly,

C. HAMILTON COOK,
National Commander D. A. V. of W. W.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I notice that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] is not in the Chamber. I desire to address my remarks to the amendment which he has offered.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	Nelson	Smoot
Borah	Hale	New	Sterling
Brandegee	Heflin	Nicholson	Sutherland
Bursum	Hitchcock	Oddie	Trammell
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Underwood
Cameron	Kellogg	Phipps	Wadsworth
Capper	Kendrick	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Colt	Keyes	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Culberson	Lenroot	Ransdell	Warren
Cummins	Lodge	Rawson	Watson, Ga.
Curtis	McCumber	Robinson	Watson, Ind.
Dial	McKellar	Sheppard	Willis
Dillingham	McLean	Shortridge
Fletcher	McNary	Simmons
Gerry	Myers	Smith

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon has offered as an amendment to this bill a reclamation scheme, a vast one, one that will require not only millions but hundreds of millions of dollars, and probably even billions if it is carried out according to his ideas and according to what has been stated. I am wondering if the Senator really believes that at this time we can attach his amendment to this bill, bring the bill before the President, and have it signed.

The Senator fully realizes the length of time we have been considering this bill and the efforts we have been making to eliminate from the bill provisions that the President thought were dangerous features.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MCNARY. I think I can say to the Senator, from first-hand information, that the President more stoutly approves of this amendment—this land scheme, so called—than he does of the main features embodied in the McCumber bill. On several occasions President Harding has expressed himself to governors of Western States and to Members of this body and other organizations as being in favor of this particular scheme. If the President will sign any bill for any reason, it will be simply because of the land-reclamation feature. I will say to the Senator that if he is a friend of the soldiers' settlement bill and wants the President to sign it, the surest way to guarantee that it will become a law will be to support the amendment I have offered.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am glad that the Senator has that much faith in what might be done. If that be true, however, then what of the objections of the Secretary of the Treasury and the President, as evidenced in the message of the President and in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury? Both of them based their objection to the consideration of the bill as it then stood upon the cost to the Government and its interference with the floating of the necessary bonds to take up our short-time securities. If the Senator from Oregon is right, then they are ready to add five hundred million or a billion or two billions to it, and it will be better than it was with nothing added to it. I do not agree with the proposition, and I do not believe that that is the way the matter presents itself to us.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to say to the Senator that under the agreement for limitation of debate I have but 20 minutes upon the amendment at this time. Otherwise, I should like to discuss the matter with him.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is another thing that I notice, and I think the Senator from Oregon ought to be able to see it as well. There is an old saying that when the Greeks come bearing gifts we may well beware, and when the enemies of this compensation bill come flocking to the support of the Senator's amendment I am a bit suspicious.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], in his discussion yesterday, said that he is primarily in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon. He will not vote for the bill, however, with that amendment in it; and I am wondering what his secondary view was, because that has not been expressed. It is my candid judgment, however, that if the Senator were called upon to vote to-day upon the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, standing alone, which would load from five hundred million to two billion dollars upon the American people, he would hesitate a long time before he would vote for it.

We can load these things upon the bill. I think some are voting to place this amendment upon the pending bill for the very purpose and in the hope that thereby they will load a heavy indebtedness upon the bill which will open the door as wide as possible to a veto. I do not know what the President may do, but I think we would be on dangerous, thin ice if we should overload this with anything more than we have placed upon it now.

We could not make this bill conform to the President's view by the addition of a sales tax to meet the expenditures under it. The House has to provide for any tax measure. The House indicated that it did not want any tax provision in the bill, and it would not levy a tax; but it favored the adjusted compensation bill by an overwhelming majority. The Senate can not attach a tax provision upon it, and without the power to levy a tax, the Senator from Oregon asks, nevertheless, that we add from $500,000,000 to $2,000,000,000 without one penny of tax to take care of it.

Mr. McNARY. Will the Senator be kind enough to yield at that point?

Mr. McCUMBER. Just for a question. I shall have to rush on.

Mr. McNARY. I do not ask the Senator to yield for a question. I want to correct a misstatement he has made four times.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator will have time after I get through, as he can speak 20 minutes to-day upon his amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. Again, Mr. President, how is this connected up with the soldiers' compensation bill? We go ahead and establish these new schemes of opening up lands. I think with the present condition of agriculture, when we produce a surplus of almost everything, we might well wait until we could use to profitable advantage the acres we now have before we force millions of other acres into producing. But leaving that aside, suppose it is a good thing at the present time to enter into this mighty reclamation scheme. What is the soldier going to do? He has to make his application. When? He wants to make his application for a right under this reclamation project. Where? What is he going to get? Who is going to tell him? How much is it going to cost him? Will it be profitable for him to take advantage of it? When will he know these things—this year, next year, two years hence, five years hence? In 10 years, possibly, he will begin to find out that it will cost him too much to take advantage of his rights under this scheme.

If the Senators who are flocking to the support of this reclamation scheme can put it over upon a soldiers' compensation bill and are sincerely for it, they can put it through as a separate bill, and if they put it through, then the soldier, under the pending bill, would have every advantage you are giving him under your reclamation scheme. Under this provision we give him a preference right to take advantage of any reclamation project now in existence, or which may hereafter come into existence. Therefore this amendment is not necessary, and if you want to try the good faith of those who are for this amendment, just try to put it through separately, and I think we would then understand about where we were.

I do not think we ought to load this bill with anything else. I think we ought to put it through shaved down as carefully as we can shave it down and yet do justice to the soldier, and meet the objections which were made by the Executive. I know of no amendment which can be attached to this bill without injuring it. It is satisfactory to those for whose benefit it is intended. It meets the objections made by the President and by his Secretary of the Treasury Anything we load upon it will revive those objections, in my opinion.

With that, Mr. President, I am going to leave the question of attaching this great reclamation scheme to something to which it does not properly belong.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, it is not a particularly pleasing thing to me to sound a note somewhat out of harmony with the note uttered by the two Senators who have spoken this morning on the bill, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. Those Senators undoubtedly spoke, as they intimated they spoke, from a conscientious sense of duty, and for the bill. I am bound by an equal sense of duty, and I feel it my duty to take the opposite view.

I yield to no one in appreciation of the services of the American boys who served in the World War. Whether their service was at home or whether they were fortunate enough to be sent to a foreign field, they all obeyed the call to serve in the one common cause.

No one was more anxious than myself that they should serve. I shared the anxiety of countless others for the safety of democracy and free institutions throughout the world, including our own. Our entry into the war seemed necessary to prevent the triumph of the Central Powers, and to save the best things in civilization, and to save our own country from ultimate domination by the spirit of autocracy and militarism.

We were slow in getting into the war. There were many of us who chafed at the delay, many who from the first could not be neutral in thought as well as in deed, when face to face with what we believed to be the unutterable wrong involved in Germany's invasion of Belgium, in the wrong involved in her many atrocities on land and sea, in her war of frightfulness inspired by the perfidious doctrine that treaties are mere scraps of paper, and it is might that makes right.

And so, in my heart, I cheered every American soldier that enlisted, or who, being selected for service, went willingly to the performance of a high duty. In my heart I cheered every American soldier that went overseas, knowing as well as he that it was at the peril of life or limb that he went, and knowing, too, that if he made the supreme sacrifice that which he went to fight for and defend was worth the cost, great as it might be.

And this was the spirit of the American people; it was the spirit of the mothers and fathers, of the brothers, sisters, wives, and sweethearts of the four or more millions of men, the flower of our young manhood, called into the service. It was the spirit of sacrifice, than which there is no quality or motive known to the human soul more ennobling—the willingness to sacrifice to the utmost for a cause, for an ideal. The progress of liberty, religious and political, and through these the progress of civilization itself is marked by the faith, the courage, the endurance, aye, the martyrdom of those who have been willing thus to sacrifice for a principle or a cause.

The spirit of sacrifice is not the exclusive possession of any special rank or class, and never has been. John Hampden, of English revolutionary fame, was rich, but was ready to endure persecution and imprisonment rather than pay 20s. of ship money tax for the collection of which there was no legal warrant. He died gloriously on the field of battle, a martyr to the cause of English liberty. Even so in our own America. The Commander in Chief of the Continental Army during the Revolution was the rich Virginia planter. He commanded other planters, as well as thousands of plain New England farmers and tradesmen, but all shared together the spirit of sacrifice for the cause of liberty and independence. And there was that brave and gifted young man of 20 years, of Revolutionary fame, who, when captured and condemned to die, declared his regret that he had only one life to lose for his country.

Now we have before us the so-called adjusted compensation bill, originally called the bonus bill, a name now discarded on the theory that it smacks of a "gratuity," which the self-respecting ex-service man would scorn to accept but who sees no objection to urging his claim for the same thing under another name.

Why this objection to calling it a gratuity or a bounty? In every other country with which we were allied in the World War it is called a gratuity or a bounty. Canada and Great Britain call it a gratuity. France applies the term "bonus"—this in their legislation providing for the gratuity or bonus, whichever it is called.

It is very evident, Mr. President, that the bill—call it a bonus bill or an adjusted compensation bill—was not conceived in the spirit of sacrifice, nor conceived in the spirit in which these young men enlisted for the war, nor conceived in the spirit of all that great host of kinsfolk and friends who, fired with the sense of wrongs done, of rights invaded, of liberty menaced, of humanity outraged, willingly gave them up to go to war.

Mr. President, under the pending bill the Government will incur new obligations amounting to three and one-half to five billion dollars, though some estimate it at $7,000,000,000, which the people, through years to come, will have to pay. The national debt is now $23,000,000,000, to pay which the people of the United States will be taxed for a generation to come. It seems to me now—and I would say this to any ex-service man whomsoever he is—that the question ought to be brought home to every returned soldier who admittedly served his country well in time of war, is there not an obligation resting upon him, as there is upon every citizen, to serve her well in time of peace? Is he serving her well now when to her burden of debt he would add the immense sum demanded and provided for in this bill? Mr. President, to forego this gratuity, this bonus, or, if you please, this adjusted compensation, would save the people of the country a mighty burden and would cause him, the ex-soldier, no sacrifice at all unless indeed it be the sacrifice of a desire, not worthy of him, to secure a gratuity or a recompense—and now note—of which he never dreamed when he entered the service or at any time before the great day of the armistice.

Mr. President, as I view it, the bill is not defensible and it ought to be defeated:

First. On the ground of precedent.

Second. On the ground of the country's needs otherwise.

Third. On the ground that, for the most part, the needs of the ex-service men do not require it.

Fourth. On the ground of the questionable example it would set and the evil consequences that may flow therefrom in the future.

Fifth. On the ground that the terms of the bill itself are vicious in that they violate sound business principles and, instead of encouraging thrift, invite prodigality and recklessness on the part of the beneficiaries or supposed beneficiaries of the bill.

Now, Mr. President, in considering this measure, great and important and all-absorbing just at this time, as it seems to be, we ought to consider all the circumstances surrounding us, surrounding the Nation, all the conditions which are pertinent to the measure. Among these first we place, of course always, as I have stated, the tremendous burden of debt under which the Nation is now staggering—$23,000,000,000.

Mr. President, it is to be observed that we are now in a condition, so far as labor and industry are concerned, such as has never before confronted the country. We thought a little while ago that prosperity was right here at the door. I saw a cartoon some time since which well illustrates the situation. Prosperity was about to return and enter the house of Uncle Sam. He had reached the gate, but there were two giant dogs at the gate—one labeled the coal strike and the other labeled the railroad strike—and because of these barriers prosperity was not permitted to enter and greet and be greeted by Uncle Sam. That is the situation now. We might with more reason talk about the enactment of a bonus bill if conditions were anything like normal, but we know they are abnormal and we do not know how long the abnormal conditions will continue and how much of distress and debt to the people throughout the country will ensue as a result of these abnormal conditions.

We were lately much concerned for the farmer. We enacted legislation for his benefit. But if there was any man whom we believed to be a profiteer during the war, not in the opprobious sense at all, but a profiteer, it was the farmer who was getting exceedingly high prices for his wheat and for his corn and for his hogs and for his cattle. He profited, if he did not profiteer, by reason of the war, and yet we must admit that some of the profits were more apparent than real. But what is the situation to-day? Let me read just a short letter from the president of the Association of State Banks in the State of South Dakota:

We are threshing a very satisfactory crop this year, but the low prices are causing considerable discontent among the farmers.

The letter was written August 21, 1922.

To-day oats are worth 17 cents, barley 29 cents, rye 47 cents, mixed Durum around 60 cents, and hard wheat 90 cents. You can readily see that spells the same thing it did last year.

How under these conditions can we justly impose further burdens of taxation such as this bill involves?

And to a great extent what is the present cause of it? The coal strike, the railroad strike, and because of both they are unable to get the cars in that region of South Dakota to ship their grain and stock. The threshing season is on in full blast there and the granaries and the elevators are full.

Mr. President, in this connection it is pertinent, I think, to inquire as to what we have done on the whole in wages paid during the war itself, in the bonus of $60 paid after the war to every soldier and sailor, in what we have done in the way of family allowances during the war, in what we have done for the disabled, and in the appropriations made for the War Veterans' Bureau. Is there any other nation in the world which has been so great and so magnanimous toward the men who served her in time of war as has this Republic?

Let me call attention briefly, Mr. President, to a few figures. The amount paid by us on the discharge bonus was $270,000,000, but for what period of service was it paid? For service of one year seven months and five days. How much did England give? England gave $6,000,000 more, but for a period of maximum service of four years. So our bounty in that behalf is just that much greater than the bounty of Great Britain to her soldiers.

How much did we pay our privates, the enlisted men? Thirty dollars a month——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. STERLING. But, Mr. President, I was speaking on the bill. I have not said a word about the amendment this morning and did not intend to do so. I spoke to the amendment yesterday. So I think my time is not now limited.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, Mr. President, the effect of the unanimous-consent agreement is to put a limit of 20 minutes upon each Senator who speaks when an amendment is pending. It could not be anything else.

Mr. STERLING. Is that correct, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not know what the understanding of Senators may be——

Mr. STERLING. Of course, I submit to the ruling rather sorrowfully, but, after all, willingly. However, I did not contemplate that that would be the ruling.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair during the execution of the unanimous-consent agreement on the tariff bill did not follow the rule which had been established by a former Vice President. But in the consideration of the pending bill the Chair feels impelled to follow that precedent. The ruling of the former Vice President was that when an amendment was pending the address of any Senator must be considered as directed to that amendment.

Mr. STERLING. That is a violent presumption in the present instance, I must say; but I yield to the ruling and hope for a further opportunity to conclude my remarks upon the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, may I submit a parliamentary inquiry?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand the rule under which we are acting upon the bill, the debate is limited to 20 minutes whenever an amendment is pending, but when there is no amendment pending a Senator may address himself to the bill without a limitation of time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that when there is no amendment pending there is no limit upon any Senator who addresses his observations to the bill.

REPORT OF ALASKAN ENGINEERING COMMISSION, 1921 (S. DOC. NO. 243).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the provisions of section 4 of the act of Congress approved March 12, 1914, authorizing the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, I transmit herewith the report of the Alaskan Engineering Commission covering the period from January 1 to December 31, 1921.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 29, 1922.

INSPECTION OF LOCOMOTIVE BOILERS (S. DOC. NO. 244).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the acting chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 327—which is the resolution offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] on behalf of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]—a report relative to the inspection of locomotive boilers upon the roads of common carriers engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have not seen the report, but I believe that it contains such information as ought to be available to Members of the Senate and the public. I ask that it may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, what is the request?

Mr. KING. The request is that the report made by the Interstate Commerce Commission may be printed.

Mr. CURTIS. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is so ordered.

PETITIONS.

Mr. McLEAN presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the American Legion Auxiliary of the Clinton Post, of Clinton, Conn., praying for the passage of the so-called soldiers' adjusted compensation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry widows of Civil War veterans of Unionville, Conn., praying for the prompt passage of the so-called Bursum bill, providing increased pensions for Civil War veterans and their widows, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from the Capitol Benevolent Association and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, both of Hartford, Conn., praying for the prompt passage of the so-called Dyer antilynching bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the New Haven district executive board of the Woman's Home Missionary Society, at Waterbury, Conn., favoring the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from M. L. Bickart, president of the New England Coca Cola Bottling Co., of Stamford, Conn., praying that the Federal Government assume responsibility for flood control, interstate drainage, and completion of levees in the Mississippi Valley, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CUMMINS (Mr. ASHURST in the chair), from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3940) to declare an emergency respecting the production, distribution, and price of coal and other fuel, to create an additional agency of the United States with respect thereto, to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission in establishing priorities and embargoes in the transportation of coal and other fuel in interstate commerce in order to prevent the exaction of unreasonably high prices for these commodities, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 895) thereon.

Mr. GOODING, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 470) for the relief of Emma Kiener (Rept. No. 893); and

A bill (S. 2262) for the relief of Franklin A. Swenson (Rept. No. 894).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and by unanimous consent the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 3963) granting a pension to Mary Walden; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 3964) for the relief of J. W. Anderson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 3965) for the relief of the State Bank and Trust Co. of Fayetteville, Tenn.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 3966) granting a pension to Walter L. Hammond; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FRANCE:

A bill (S. 3967) for the relief of Captain L. P. Kelly; to the Committee on Claims.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3275) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars, and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 241).

Mr. CUMMINS. I present the conference report on what is ordinarily known as the judges' bill, and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts in the chair). That order will be made.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of the United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conferences have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the following number of district judges for the United States district courts in the districts specified in addition to those now authorized by law:

"For the district of Massachusetts, two; for the eastern district of New York, one; for the southern district of New York, two; for the district of New Jersey, one; for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, one; for the western district of Pennsylvania, one; for the northern district of Texas, one; for the southern district of Florida, one; for the eastern district of Michigan, one; for the northern district of Ohio, one; for the middle district of Tennessee, one; for the northern district of Illinois, one; for the eastern district of Illinois, one; for the district of Minnesota, one; for the eastern district of Missouri, one; for the western district of Missouri, one; for the eastern district of Oklahoma, one; for the district of Montana, one; for the northern district of California, one; for the southern district of California, one; for the district of New Mexico, one; and for the district of Arizona, one.

"A vacancy occurring more than two years after the passage of this act, in the office of any district judge appointed pursuant to this act, except for the middle district of Tennessee, shall not be filled unless Congress shall so provide, and if an appointment is made to fill such a vacancy occurring within two years a vacancy thereafter occurring in said office shall not be filled unless Congress shall so provide: Provided, however, That in case a vacancy occurs in the district of New Mexico at any time after the passage of this act, there shall thereafter be but one judge for said district until otherwise provided by law. Every judge shall reside in the district or circuit or one of the districts or circuits for which he is appointed.

"SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the Chief Justice of the United States, or in case of his disability, of one of the other justices of the Supreme Court, in order of their seniority, as soon as may be after the passage of this act, and annually thereafter, to summon to a conference on the last Monday in September, at Washington, District of Columbia, or at such other time and place in the United States as the Chief Justice, or, in case of his disability, any of said justices in order of their seniority, may designate, the senior circuit judge of each judicial circuit. If any senior circuit judge is unable to attend, the Chief Justice, or in case of his disability, the justice of the Supreme Court calling said conference, may summon any other circuit or district judge in the judicial circuit whose senior circuit judge was unable to attend, that each circuit may be adequately represented at said conference. It shall be the duty of every judge thus summoned to attend said conference, and to remain throughout its proceedings, unless excused by the Chief Justice, and to advise as to the needs of his circuit and as to any matters in respect of which the administration of justice in the courts of the United States may be improved.

"The senior district judge of each United States district court, on or before the 1st day of August in each year, shall prepare and submit to the senior circuit judge of the judicial circuit in which said district is situated, a report setting forth the condition of business in said district court, including the number and character of cases on the docket, the business in arrears, and cases disposed of, and such other facts pertinent to the business dispatched and pending as said district judge may deem proper, together with recommendations as to the need of additional judicial assistance for the disposal of business for the year ensuing. Said reports shall be laid before the conference herein provided, by said senior circuit judge, or, in his absence, by the judge representing the circuit at the conference, together with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

"The Chief Justice, or, in his absence, the senior associate justice, shall be the presiding officer of the conference. Said conference shall make a comprehensive survey of the condition of business in the courts of the United States and prepare plans for assignment and transfer of judges to or from circuits or districts where the state of the docket or condition of business indicates the need therefor, and shall submit such suggestions to the various courts as may seem in the interest of uniformity and expedition of business.

"The Attorney General shall, upon request of the Chief Justice, report to said conference on matters relating to the business of the several courts of the United States, with particular reference to causes or proceedings in which the United States may be a party.

"The Chief Justice and each justice or judge summoned and attending said conference shall be allowed his actual expenses of travel and his necessary expenses for subsistence, not to exceed $10 per day, which payments shall be made by the marshal of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the written certificate of the judge incurring such expenses, approved by the Chief Justice.

"SEC. 3. Section 13 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 13. Whenever any district judge by reason of any disability or necessary absence from his district or the accumulation or urgency of business is unable to perform speedily the work of his district, the senior circuit judge of that circuit, or, in his absence, the circuit justice thereof may, if in his judgment the public interest requires, designate and assign any district judge of any district court within the same judicial circuit to act as district judge in such district and to discharge all the judicial duties of a judge thereof for such time as the business of the said district court may require. Whenever it is found impracticable to designate and assign another district judge within the same judicial circuit as above provided and a certificate of the needs of any such district is presented by said senior circuit judge or said circuit justice to the Chief Justice of the United States, he, or in his absence the senior Associate Justice, may, if in his judgment the public interest so requires, designate and assign a district judge of an adjoining judicial circuit if practicable, or if not practicable, then of any judicial circuit, to perform the duties of district judge and hold a district court in any such district as above provided: Provided, however, That before any such designation or assignment is made the senior circuit judge of the circuit from which the designated or assigned judge is to be taken shall consent thereto. All designations and assignments made hereunder shall be filed in the office of the clerk and entered on the minutes of both the court from and to which a judge is designated and assigned.'

"SEC. 4. Section 15 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 15. Each district judge designated and assigned under the provisions of section 13 may hold separately and at the same time a district court in the district or territory to which such judge is designated and assigned and discharge all the judicial duties of the district or territorial judge therein.'

"SEC. 5. Section 18 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 18. The Chief Justice of the United States, or the circuit justice of any judicial circuit, or the senior circuit judge thereof, may, if the public interest requires, designate and assign any circuit judge of a judicial circuit to hold a district court within such circuit. The judges of the United States Court of Customs Appeals, or any of them, whenever the business of that court will permit, may, if in the judgment of the Chief Justice of the United States the public interest requires, be designated and assigned by him for service from time to time and until he shall otherwise direct, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia or the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, when requested by the chief justice of either of said courts.

"'During the period of service of any judge designated and assigned under this act he shall have all powers and rights and perform all the duties of a judge of the district or a justice of the court to which he has been assigned (excepting the power of appointment to a statutory position or of permanent designation of newspaper or depository of funds): Provided, however, That in case a trial has been entered upon before such period of service has expired and has not been concluded, the period of service shall be deemed to be extended until the trial has been concluded.

"'Any designated and assigned judge who has held court in another district than his own shall have power, notwithstanding his absence from such district and the expiration of the time limit in his designation, to decide all matters which have been submitted to him within such district, to decide motions for new trials, settle bills of exceptions, certify or authenticate narratives of testimony, or perform any other act required by law or the rules to be performed in order to prepare any case so tried by him for review in an appellate court; and his action thereon in writing filed with the clerk of the court where the trial or hearing was had shall be as valid as if such action had been taken by him within that district and within the period of his designation.'

"SEC. 6. Section 118 of the Judicial Code, as amended, is hereby further amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 118. There shall be in the second, seventh, and eighth circuits, respectively, four circuit judges; and in each of the other circuits three circuit judges, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. All circuit judges shall receive a salary of $8,500 a year each, payable monthly. Each circuit judge shall reside within his circuit, and when appointed shall be a resident of the circuit for which he is appointed. The circuit judges in each circuit shall be judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit, and it shall be the duty of each circuit judge in each circuit to sit as one of the judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit from time to time according to law: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent any circuit judge holding district court or otherwise, as provided by other sections of the Judicial Code.'

"SEC. 7. All laws or parts thereof inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"An act for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the fourth judicial circuit, for the appointment of additional district judges for certain districts, providing for an annual conference of certain judges, and for other purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
THOMAS STERLING,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
L. C. DYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 11116) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1869, as amended, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3086) providing for the removal of snow and ice from the paved sidewalks of the District of Columbia, which was, on page 3, line 10, after the word "States," to insert "except the Capitol Building and Grounds and the Congressional Library Building."

Mr. BALL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This is not a conference report, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not a conference report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The bill, then, should go to the appropriate committee.

Mr. CURTIS. It is a Senate bill with a House amendment.

Mr. BALL. The bill passed the Senate and the House made a slight amendment to it. If the Senator desires to know the nature of the amendment, I will say that it exempts the grounds around the Capitol and the grounds around the Library of Congress from the operation of the bill. All other grounds are under the jurisdiction of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, while the grounds specifically exempted are under the control of the Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas will state his point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make the point of order that the bill is not before the Senate for disposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained, unless there be unanimous consent given for the immediate consideration of the motion.

COMPENSATION OF WORLD WAR VETERANS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I desire merely to make a brief statement as to the pending adjusted compensation bill, H. R. 10874. For some three years Congress has been wrestling with this measure in one form or another. It was withdrawn at one time from this body, and I supported that action because I believed with the President that conditions then would not warrant its passage; but at all times I have favored some sort of legislation that would in some way recognize the valor and services of our veterans of the recent World War. This bill in no way provides a full compensation; it in no way represents a just recognition of their supreme service and sacrifice. If, however, it is the best, under the circumstances, that is obtainable, it has my whole-hearted support. I wish we could give the ex-service men more; nothing can pay them for what they have done; yet this bill gives a recognition acceptable to them.

There is no raid on the Treasury under its provisions; it puts no premium on patriotism; in no way does it commercialize service to the Nation. Our boys asked no questions, but when the call came they responded and performed their duty as crusaders of right and justice. They were always told the Government would take care of them. They are not asking for charity; they merely ask that they be given assistance in finding the way back into normal living.

The Government, as was proper, has met the demands of business in the way of reimbursement. Our railroads, war contractors, all industries, have been or will be provided for, and, although there was no written contract binding the Government to such a program with the soldiers, there was a moral contract based upon common understanding that individually they would be cared for.

They have been patient; but that patience is now exhausted, and we are called upon here to-day to keep the faith. I for one am very anxious to embrace the opportunity, and my only regret is that we are not in a position to assist them a thousand times more than is possible under the provisions of the pending bill; but the veterans, realizing the conditions confronting the Government, are willing to accept without murmur the measure of compensation proposed to be provided. So now is the time for a grateful Nation to pay the greatest debt of gratitude incurred in the history of the world.

Mr. President, the amendment offered by my good friend the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] is one that thrills especially the South and West. For scores of years our people have clung to the desert and swamp areas with the hope that relief would come. What could be more fitting than a realization of this long struggle which adapts itself so well to the Government's plan of providing a livelihood for our veterans? It is a good omen that eastern statesmen in the main are manifesting an awakening on the subject of reclamation. Shortsighted statesmanship has been evidenced many times in this Chamber on this very subject, but we must all realize in the last analysis that one section of our great country can not progress at the expense of another. The reclamation feature proposed to be attached to the bill is in no way designed for the exclusive benefit of sections or classes. Under its provisions opportunity is afforded alike to service men from all sections. It adds the missing link, and, through its agency, millions of acres will be reclaimed for profitable enterprises, thus benefiting the whole country.

I have received hundreds of letters from ex-service men from all portions of the United States urging my efforts in the direction of having the Government sanction, in connection with the pending measure, our old traditional policy of land entry. The ex-service men do not, I repeat, want outright charity; they want assistance to enable them to get back into the real strides of life, and naturally they think of farms and homes, where the results of their efforts will be their own. For every soldier placed on a reclaimed farm there will be another given opportunity in our overcrowded cities. I have talked with hundreds of them to test their desires, and all of them interested in farming point out what Canada, Australia, and other countries are doing for their service men. No country should surpass us in efforts to promote the welfare of humanity. Our soldiers constituted the finest body of men in the world, and I hope it may never be said of our Government that it was derelict in caring for them either on the battle field or at home. Agriculture is the backbone of our country, and now we have presented to us an opportunity to turn back the tide which has been carrying our people to cities, and provide for them a field of activity suitable to their habits and inclinations. Yet, Mr. President, this can not be done unless millions of acres are reclaimed from the swamps and deserts, for practically all of our other tillable land is exhausted. In comparison with the advantages to accrue, the cost will be a mere trifle, and the benefits to our soldiers, our people generally, and to our economic welfare can not be measured. In Arizona alone 1,000,000 acres await the touch of available water to furnish permanent homes, happiness, and contentment to our victorious veterans.

Under the provisions of the amendment pending the Government becomes the lender, and the soldier citizen the borrower, to work out his own salvation on hitherto worthless lands. In the end the Government will be repaid, and the entire Nation will have the satisfaction of knowing that vast wastes have been converted into fertile farming communities, that disheartened soldiers have been the benefactors, and that its pledges have been redeemed.

Just now I received a telegram from the veterans of Arizona, speaking for more than 10,000 of them, urging the Senate to approve this proposed legislation. This appeal, I hope, will not remain unheard.

It is not necessary for me to go into details of the amendment which has been so ably presented by the distinguished Senator from Oregon, with whom, as a member of the committee, I have taken much pleasure in assisting to work out these splendid features during the past year; but, Mr. President, if the records of this body disclose nothing else to my credit, I hope they will bear testimony to the world that I did my best to help the worthy veterans of the World War obtain at least some measure of recognition and assistance at the hands of a grateful Government.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], which is now pending and which provides for extending the policy of reclamation in this country.

The distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] seems to feel that to attach this amendment to the pending bill would have a tendency to impose a load upon it; that the amendment is designed by persons who are not in sympathy with the bill and who are opposed to adjusted compensation for the purpose of helping to defeat the pending measure. Mr. President, I can not understand reasoning of that kind. The reclamation policy has been considered a sound one, and a continuation of that policy has been publicly approved by the present President; in fact, it is not so long since the incumbent of the Presidency appeared before the Congress and in specific terms in his address urged the passage of legislation along the lines proposed in the amendment.

If the policy is sound and wise and right, what harm can come from including an amendment to carry out and extend that policy in connection with the pending adjusted compensation measure? I submit, Mr. President, that the reclamation of arid and swamp land is a subject as important, as vital, as near and as dear to the ex-service man as it is to any other citizen of the country. The ex-service man is a citizen; he has the welfare of his country at heart to the same extent as has any other American; in fact, I may say that he represents the cream of our citizenship; and why should he approach the consideration of general legislation, designed for the welfare of the country, from a different standpoint than that occupied by any other element of our citizenship?

Mr. President, the policy of reclamation was first made a reality through the efforts and support of President Roosevelt, who, with all his contributions to the welfare of his countrymen and the human family in general, never performed a more noble service than when he gave his active and potent support to the reclamation policy which was formulated during his administration.

According to the statement made by the sponsor of this amendment, the Senator from Oregon, there are 118,000,000 acres of land in the United States, located in nearly every State in the Union, subject to reclamation either by the storage of water and irrigation or by the drainage of swamps. These lands when reclaimed, it is conceded, will constitute the most fertile lands within the borders of our country. The adoption of the amendment, and the reclamation work carried out thereunder, will add to the wealth of the country. When two blades of grass can be made to grow where none grew before, when there can be made available opportunities where men willing to labor and toil to provide for themselves and their families, homes, and independent means of livelihood according to the highest American standards, an important addition is made to the wealth of the country and at the same time to the attractiveness of rural life. An area of 118,000,000 acres of land divided into 40-acre farms would provide 3,000,000 homes, and, estimating the average family to consist of five, would result in 15,000,000 people being cared for, being made independent and thrifty citizens and given a chance to move from the congested cities of the Nation into surroundings and environment where the best citizenship, the backbone of the country, the citizenship upon which the Nation must depend in time of stress is developed and where they could thrive and prosper.

The statement that the adoption of this amendment would cost billions or hundreds of millions is a wild statement. There is nothing in the amendment to justify any such statement. The inauguration of this policy does not mean that in the last analysis the Government will be out a single penny. The most that might be expected to be advanced would be the amount required for the projects which would be taken up the first year, which in all probability would not exceed $25,000,000. As the projects were completed security would be given for the money advanced in the form of mortgages on the lands improved. Those securities would be placed with the public, and the chances are that at no time in the future would the Government of the United States have actual cash invested in excess of $25,000,000. The Government is simply the administrator. It is simply the trustee. It is the instrument which would carry this policy through.

Mr. President, I hope this amendment will be adopted. I am sure that it will improve the compensation bill and that it will tend to aid in its passage, and will not be a load on it.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, on June 2, 1920, I made a speech in the Senate opposing the so-called bonus bill, and nothing has transpired since that time to cause me to change my mind.

I yield to no one in my admiration and respect and esteem of the soldier. It goes without saying that the wounded and disabled should have the very best care taken of them that the Government can give them, and I have always voted consistently to that end. But, Mr. President, there are some party matters which control my vote on this proposition, if I wanted to rely upon them alone. In my State, in the rules of our party, a copy of which I have in my hand, is embraced the following, in addition to the other pledges that we have to sign, and so forth:

If the candidate is running for the United States Senate or for the United States House of Representatives, this additional pledge shall be required:

"I will support the political principles and policies of the Democratic Party during the term of office for which I may be elected and work in accord with my Democratic associates in Congress on all party questions."

Mr. President, before I was allowed to enter a campaign for a seat in this body I signed that pledge. When our national convention was held in San Francisco in 1920 the advocates of the bonus appealed to the subcommittee for recognition and for the adoption of a plank favorable to the payment of the bonus. The subcommittee turned down the proposition. An appeal was made to the whole committee, and it met a similar fate. Then an appeal was made upon the floor of the convention by the advocates of the bonus, and that was rejected; so I feel that that fixes the policy of our party, that we were against the bonus as a national policy, and that I am bound to oppose it by reason of the pledge which I signed before I was allowed to enter the campaign in my State.

Mr. President, I might stop there if I were disposed to do so; but I have never favored the bonus, and I have no objection to saying so. I feel that this proposition was not conceived in patriotism, but was conceived in politics.

Take the soldiers themselves: The national convention of the American Legion in Minneapolis, Minn., on November 10, 11, and 12, 1919, went on record as disapproving any attempt by the Legion to ask or demand of Congress a cash bonus.

I feel that I represent in part as intelligent and as fair a constituency as there is in the United States; and I have never been prouder of my constituents than I was when I read the resolutions that the South Carolina branch of the American Legion passed in 1920. I ask to have inserted as a part of my remarks the proceedings of that convention.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Columbia (S. C.) State, May 30, 1920.]

SECESSION PROPOSED FOR CAROLINA LEGION—STATE CONVENTION CALLED TO CONSIDER ACTION OF NATIONAL COMMITTEE—FIGHT FOR BONUS CAUSE OF BREACH—WITHDRAWAL MAY FOLLOW NATIONAL CONVENTION SHOULD EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE'S ACTION BE RATIFIED—SOUTH CAROLINA MEETING IN SPARTANBURG SET FOR JUNE 15.

For the purpose of considering the advisability of withdrawal from the national organization, in case the national convention should ratify the action of the national executive committee in agitating the bonus, the annual convention of the American Legion of South Carolina will be held in Spartanburg June 15, instead of next fall. This decision was reached yesterday at a meeting of the State executive committee held in Columbia. The resolution calling the convention at the earlier date characterizes the action of the national executive committee as "harmful to the best interests of the National and State organizations." The resolution says in part, in speaking of the national executive committee's fight for a cash bonus: "Its action tarnishes the honor and glory which the American soldier and sailor won on the field of battle, and its action, if ratified by the next national convention, renders the further affiliation of the South Carolina department with the national organization harmful to the future of the said department."

On Friday the executive committee decided to hold the annual State convention in Spartanburg one month prior to the national convention, but at the meeting yesterday, which was attended by the entire committee, the decision was reached to move up the annual convention to June 15.

The resolution sets forth that, among other things, the national executive committeeman from this State has not been duly notified twice of meetings of the national committee.

AGAINST BONUS AGITATION.

The South Carolina department has throughout voted that the American Legion should not take part in a bonus agitation.

The resolution says that the national executive committee disregarded the express orders of the national convention, the governing body of the Legion, and the basic principles on which the Legion was founded.

The resolution follows:

"Whereas the American Legion was formed with the express purpose of furthering all patriotic causes and not for selfish or political reasons; and

"Whereas the granting of a cash bonus to able-bodied veterans of the Great War would be admittedly harmful to the welfare of the American public; and

"Whereas a request from the American Legion for a cash bonus rightly renders that organization liable to suspicions as to its sincerity and unselfishness of motive and is debasing and inconsistent with the high ideals on which it was founded; and

"Whereas the national convention of the American Legion assembled at Minneapolis, Minn., November 10, 11, and 12, 1919, went on record as disapproving any attempt by the Legion to ask or demand of Congress a cash bonus; and

"Whereas the national executive committee of the American Legion has demanded the payment of such a bonus by Congress, thereby disregarding the express orders of the governing body of the American Legion and the basic principles on which the American Legion was founded; and

ATTEMPT TO IGNORE STATE.

"Whereas the national headquarters of the American Legion has shown a desire to disregard the wishes of the South Carolina department of the American Legion by twice failing to give due notice to the national executive committeeman from South Carolina of meetings to be held, thereby endeavoring to deprive the said department of its legal voice in the councils of the national organization: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the executive committee of the South Carolina department of the American Legion, That we disapprove the action of the said national executive committee and that we view their motives with suspicion; and

Resolved, That in our opinion the action of the national executive committee is harmful to the best interests of the National and State organizations, its action tarnishes the honor and glory which the American soldier and sailor won on the field of battle, and its action if ratified by the next national convention renders the further affiliation of the South Carolina department with the national organization harmful to the future of the said department; and

Resolved, That the adjutant, South Carolina department of the American Legion, be authorized and directed to call upon the various posts of the American Legion in South Carolina to elect delegates to the annual State convention to be held in Spartanburg, S. C., June 15, 1920, for the purpose of considering the advisability of withdrawal of the South Carolina department of the American Legion from association with the national organization.

DISABLED NEED ASSISTANCE.

The committee in a second resolution, adopted yesterday, also strongly condemned any legislation designed to give a cash bonus to the able-bodied ex-service men at this time, when it appears, the committee members thought, that no adequate provision has been made for the disabled who are really entitled to assistance. The resolution follows in full:

Whereas, it appears from statements made by Dr. W. G. Rucker, chief medical adviser of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and other Government officers that 641,900 men were discharged from the Army and Navy with disabilities, of whom 276,327 were seriously disabled, and that less than 5 per cent of the disabled have been cared for by the Federal Board for Vocational Education; and

Whereas, it is estimated by qualified experts that the proper and adequate care of those who have been disabled may cost the Government annually from $325,000,000 to $500,000,000: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the executive committee of the American Legion of South Carolina, That we strongly condemn any legislation designed to give a cash bonus to the able-bodied ex-service men at this time, when it appears that no adequate provision has been made for the disabled, who are really entitled to assistance.

That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Representative in the United States Senate and Congress and published in the State newspapers.

Mr. DIAL. They said in part:

Whereas the granting of a cash bonus to able-bodied veterans of the Great War would be admittedly harmful to the welfare of the American public; and

Whereas a request from the American Legion for a cash bonus rightly renders that organization liable to suspicions as to its sincerity and unselfishness of motive and is debasing and inconsistent with the high ideals on which it was founded.

* * * * * *

Resolved by the executive committee of the American Legion of South Carolina, That we strongly condemn any legislation designed to give a cash bonus to the able-bodied ex-service men at this time, when it appears that no adequate provision has been made for the disabled, who are really entitled to assistance.

That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Representative in the United States Senate and Congress and published in the State newspapers.

Mr. President, at this time this matter was fresh in the minds of the soldiers, and this resolution says that at the Minneapolis convention the majority of the delegates voted against a cash bonus; but, in opposition to that, the executive committee made this appeal to Congress.

I feel that that is the secret of a great deal of the propaganda that we have had here. It is a case of a few men trying to lead the great body of our soldiers to ask for something which they did not think was necessary at that time. These resolutions go on to say that the action of those violating the vote of those individual representatives tarnishes the honor of the American soldier. In fact, these resolutions speak in more eloquent terms than I can.

I am proud to know that this is the only State branch of the Legion in the United States that opposed the cash bonus. After these resolutions were passed I made a speech on the floor of the Senate—in fact, different speeches—in which I praised these soldiers, and I said that their example, both in time of war and in time of peace, ought to be emulated. It is our proud recollection that our small number of soldiers even of our small State of South Carolina—notwithstanding we had our quota—captured 6 of the 52 medals awarded for bravery. They took more medals than did the soldiers of any other State in the Union.

Mr. President, I feel that the action of these soldiers has carried out the pledges of our platform, first, of the members that represent them, and they have carried out the platform of our party, and they gave me my mandate to speak on the floor of the Senate, and I know now that they have unanimously indorsed the stand I have taken at their request. I feel, as I said before, that they are amongst the most intelligent constituents in the United States. They are a contented people. They do not want to do anything to tarnish the honor and the glory that they achieved in Chateau-Thierry and when they helped break the Hindenberg line. It is true that some people stayed at home and profiteered, but I am not going to class the soldiers along with those people. No doubt we made a mistake in not conscripting labor and conscripting capital and everything else we needed in the late war; but it was new and hasty, and what was done was done for the purpose of ending the war as quickly as possible and furnishing all the necessaries to the soldiers to make them comfortable and to make the campaigns successful as rapidly as possible.

Mr. President, as I said, I could hide behind these pledges of my party, but I know my soldiers would not have me do so. When we come to be reminded that the Government of the United States has no money except what it takes from the people by taxation, or what it raises by selling our joint notes—that is, our bonds—it is time for the people of this country to realize that it takes the labor of some one to create money and to create wealth. Moreover, when this Government has to pay or refund over six and one-half million dollars in the next four years. If we stop to think that the national debt was increased from about one billion to twenty-six billion dollars in four years, that is enough to startle any man, to make him reflect, and take stock of his Government assets and of his individual assets. If in our individual lives our debts were to increase in any such proportion within any such time, I fear we would lose our nerve and would collapse. It behooves everybody, and particularly the men who make the laws of the country, to try to keep down expenses and to see that industries are carried on.

It is appalling, when we look, to see that the per capita taxes increased from $6.79 in 1914 to $49.41 in 1920; so it is time for the Representatives of the people to look on this matter in a serious and in a sober way. If we could take the money away from the profiteers and turn it back to the soldiers, or to pay the debts which we issued bonds to cover, I would advocate it at once.

Something has been said about the foreign debt. People say, "Oh, we will take the foreign debt and pay the bonus"; but we should remember that the foreign debt is not really a debt due our Government. It is due the people from whom the Government borrowed the money; and I never thought an individual got rich by selling his assets or just collecting money that is due him and paying his debts. If we could recover that debt—and it is doubtful whether we will ever get all of it, although I advocate collecting it all, if possible—if we had it, the best thing we could do would be to redeem the Government's obligations with it.

We speak of having diminished the public debt some three billion dollars in the last two years, but a great deal of that was done by selling Government property. We are not getting ahead fast when we decrease debts by disposing of our assets. That is trying to deceive ourselves and trying to deceive the soldiers. We will not get far with such a proposition as that.

It is true, as I said before, that people profiteered in this country greatly, but those activities were for the purpose of winning the war, and a great many people received no benefit from them. We sell property that cost the Government a hundred cents for five cents on a dollar, perhaps less. I believe the powder plant down in Tennessee that cost $85,000,000 sold for $3,500,000. Frequently over the country we see that cantonments are selling for practically nothing, or for just the cost of removing them. That is where the money went.

As I said, if we could take the money away from the profiteers and do something with it, we would be glad to do so, but many people who profiteered are to-day in bankruptcy and are gone financially. So, when we issue this great debt upon the American people, it would have to be paid by the soldiers in great part. To my mind, therefore, the soldier would prefer to live in a prosperous country, where he could receive employment and where prosperity would continue to reign, rather than to have the Government burden itself and close up enterprises.

This bill is amusing to look at in one sense. I think the Senator from New York designated it properly yesterday as a kind of a "pawnbroker" proposition. I am ashamed of our committee going out and saying to the soldiers, "We owe you, but you must take our note and hawk it all around over the country." We owe them gratitude, and there is not enough money in the world to pay them. However, I never heard before of people trying to pay off debts by forcing the creditor to receive 20-year scrip. I would be ashamed if the Government would admit that they were broke and could not raise the money.

So the bill is simply a delusion and a snare, and it is unworthy of Congress to try and pass any such bunko game on the soldier. I have always been against it. I believe a majority of the soldiers in my State are against it, and I believe if the matter were discussed before them, upon reflection, probably, they would be unanimous against it. I am proud of them for having passed resolutions against it.

Mr. SIMMONS obtained the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to call attention to one matter before the Senator from South Carolina resumes his seat?

Mr. SIMMONS. If it is not taken out of my time.

Mr. FLETCHER. I take it that it will not be. This is not a party matter. The Senator from South Carolina took occasion to refer to what took place at the national convention and what was put in the platform. I want to call attention to one provision in the platform, as follows:

We believe that no higher or more valued privilege can be afforded to an American citizen than to become a freeholder in the soil of the United States, and to that end we pledge our party to the enactment of soldier settlements and home-aid legislation which will afford to the men who fought for America the opportunity to become land and home owners under conditions affording genuine Government assistance unencumbered by needless difficulties or red tape or advance financial investment.

It seems to me that would rather support the amendment that is pending, would it not?

Mr. DIAL. That would help along the amendment that is pending. I favor the amendment, if we are going to pass the bill at all. I neglected to call attention to a thought expressed yesterday by the Senator from New York, and I think it would be well for the Senate to consider it carefully.

After the Civil War we had vast territories in the West, unexplored land of great fertility, which was soon opened up, and helped pay the debt of the Civil War. We have not that kind of an asset now, and when we burden this country with this additional debt we are going to have to look to sources from which to pay it.

I think the quotation from the Democratic platform read by the Senator from Florida would help along the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. I have an amendment to his amendment, which I propose to offer, to allow the soldiers additional options not only in the swamp lands and the arid lands but in the cut-over timber lands, which I think will improve the amendment greatly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to ask the Senator, if his amendment to the McNary amendment is adopted, what, in his judgment, will it cost the country?

Mr. DIAL. I have not figured on the cost.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has been estimated that the McNary amendment will cost all the way from $5,000,000 to $2,000,000,000. Would not the Senator's amendment to that amendment more than double the amount?

Mr. DIAL. No; it will not increase it a cent. I want to give an option on a third kind of land. I am going to vote against the whole bill, but even if it should cost more, if we could get people to become home owners, they would soon be much more prosperous citizens, and would create wealth rapidly. The soldiers will have to help pay this debt, anyway.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, during the course of the Senator's remarks, as I understood him, he justified his opposition to bonus legislation on the ground that the Democratic platform adopted at San Francisco had repudiated the principle of such legislation. I merely wish to call his attention to the fact that there is no provision in the Democratic platform adopted at San Francisco touching the subject. The convention at San Francisco declined to make it a political question, and for that reason I think no Senator owing allegiance to the Democratic Party is estopped by any political declaration of his party from supporting this measure, if he thinks it right and proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The time of the Senator from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have taken the floor simply to make a statement with reference to my position upon the very important amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY].

I was somewhat surprised at the opposition to the amendment on the part of the chairman of the Finance Committee, who has charge of the pending bill, and who, I know, is a very zealous advocate of adjusted-compensation legislation. Especially was I surprised at the grounds of the chairman's opposition. He based his opposition upon two grounds, neither of which is sound, in my opinion. First, he said that on account of the financial condition of the country, Congress should avoid large appropriations for unnecessary things, and that the several hundred million dollars carried by this amendment would add that amount to the national debt. Secondly, he thought that the attachment of this amendment to the bill might lead to a veto at the White House.

I wish to say to the Senator that this is in no way a bill to appropriate public funds in the sense that we appropriate money for the expenses of the Government, in the sense that we appropriate money for the payment of a bonus to Government employees. It is the mere lending by the Government of its credit to a particular extent. Of course, in the initiation of the scheme, some cash advances will be necessary, but the bill expressly provides that when a project is completed, and it is estimated that the land is worth twice the amount of the debt, bonds shall be issued to the Government for the full amount. These bonds the Government will, of course, have the right to sell, and will sell, and from their sale, as this is to be a revolving fund, money will be obtained for the further execution of the plan. This amendment and the plan it provides will not burden the Treasury to any considerable extent in any one year of its life, and, in fact, after one or two years it will not burden the Treasury at all. The chairman's first objection I therefore regard as purely artificial and without justification or foundation in fact.

With reference to the Senator's objection based on the probability of the veto, it is loudly proclaimed that it is the purpose of the President to veto this measure in any case, and after the statement made by the Senator from Oregon with reference to the President's approval of this specific plan of reclamation and irrigation, I was encouraged to hope and to believe that possibly the addition of this amendment to the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill, instead of constituting a reason for veto action on the part of the President, might have a contrary influence with him, and that it might influence his mind in favor of affirmative action. I was inclined to think also that if the bill did meet a veto at the hands of the President, this amendment might be a substantial help in obtaining sufficient votes in the Senate to override the veto.

I am in favor of this amendment, not because I think it is exactly what we need in the South, and in all that section of the country in which the swamp lands lie, but it is a step in the right direction. It will mean something; indeed, quite a great deal. It will commit the Government of the United States to a policy that I have during my whole term here advocated and insisted upon, in committee and upon the floor of the Senate. Once the Government is committed to that plan, of course, we can amend the measure and broaden its scope, and suit it to the conditions.

It is not to take the place of the drainage laws of the several States that this plan is intended. It is merely to be supplementary to those laws. The two systems can well act together or separately, and I believe it will be found that the one will be better adapted in certain instances than the other.

I do not think the McNary amendment is perfect. Neither do I think the bill to which it is to be attached as an amendment is perfect. I think the adjusted compensation proposition in its present form is largely a makeshift. I think it will be disappointing to the soldiers. It introduces the very obnoxious principle which the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] characterized yesterday as a shop-broking proposition. I greatly fear the intended beneficiaries of the legislation will be disappointed when they go to borrow money under it. I want to see it amended and I hope it will be amended, and amended materially, before we pass it. I myself have introduced an amendment which I think would greatly improve it and furnish the means by which the soldiers could readily get all the money to which they are entitled without having to hawk their certificates about the streets. I am going to vote for the McNary amendment and I am going to vote for the bill, not because either is satisfactory to me but because both are the best I can get. After we have tried to amend and shall have failed, if we are not able to amend the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill, I am going to vote for it upon the reason that it is the best we can get, although it is not at all what the soldier is entitled to.

I am in favor of the McNary amendment for two fundamental reasons. First, I am in favor of it because I think it will be a good thing for the soldier. We call this nothing but a preference. That is all, strictly speaking, that it is. In my judgment, however, the preference given to the soldier in many instances will be more valuable to him than the adjusted compensation which he will receive from the Government under the general provisions of the bill. The preference given him in the McNary amendment will enable him to get lands at first price and, too, the best character of lands in the country.

It will give him abundant time in which to pay for them, and in that trade there will be a profit to him which, as compared with the purchase of lands outside of this scheme, would in some instances amount to many times, in my judgment, the value of his cash compensation. I want to help the soldier in every way I can. I wish we might make the adjusted compensation provision much more advantageous to him. The McNary amendment certainly makes it much more advantageous to him, and for that reason I am in favor of the amendment.

I am also for it because for long years the representatives of the section of the country from which I come have urged upon the Government the importance of its doing its duty in providing for the drainage of the overflowed lands of the country exactly as it was doing its duty respecting the arid lands through the process of irrigation. We have urged, as the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] said yesterday, that the taking of water off of the land where it was necessary to its productivity was identical in principle with the putting of water upon the land where it was essential to its productivity.

That argument has always been irresistible. There was but one answer to it, and that was that there was no constitutional authority on the part of the Government to spend money to drain the swamp lands; that the constitutional authority to irrigate arid lands grew out of the fact that the Government only irrigated where it itself owned the arid lands, and that the primary purpose was supposed to be to improve its own property, whereas the Government does not own to any extent the overflowed lands. The answer was a constitutional objection which I was never able, satisfactorily to myself, to dispute. Now, we have a proposition here which answers that fundamental objection, because when we attach to the reclamation scheme the project of the soldiers' adjusted compensation we make that an essential feature of the legislation and we furnish at the same time a constitutional ground for this drainage relief on the part of the Government.

For one I do not wish to lose this opportunity. The importance of the drainage projects to the South especially, where the bulk of the overflowed lands lie, can not be overestimated. The lands are in vast bodies as a rule. It is impossible ever to develop them under small and promiscuous private ownership, and I do not think we desire large private ownership such as the Senator from Florida (Mr. FLETCHER) characterized yesterday, referring to men each owning 100,000 acres of land. We want our lands, when they are developed, to be developed and put into small holdings. It is impossible to develop swamp lands in that way because they are in large bodies and we can not drain a part without draining the whole. That has been the problem with which we have been confronted in connection with the drainage of these areas. It is true, as stated by one of the Senators, that we have an abundance of cleared land in the country, but the swamp lands are the very best lands we have in the South; I suppose generally they are the best in the other States where they are located. They are the most fertile and the most productive when they are drained.

But there is another trouble about that which is even more serious. Wherever we find one of these great bodies of swamp lands, we find the conditions of health are bad. The swamps breed the mosquito; they breed malaria; they are a menace to the public health of any community in which they are located. From the standpoint of health alone it is extremely important that these lands should be reclaimed and brought into cultivation.

Now, Mr. President, I do not wish to say more. What I have said constitutes my reasons for supporting the McNary amendment. I am supporting it with vigor and enthusiasm because I think it is a piece of legislation which will be worth as much to my section of the country and to the country at large as any legislation of that character that we can now formulate. It would make large areas of the country fit to live in and multiply the productivity enormously.

I want to see the Government enter upon the scheme in the South, because I believe with Government assistance that it would only be a few years when the 3,000,000 acres of swamp lands in my State would be under cultivation and that this menace to the health of that portion of North Carolina would be removed. That condition constitutes a fact that has prevented us from getting the necessary immigration, and, indeed, from holding our own people. If that menace were removed, the benefits to my section would be inestimable.

It is the duty of the Government to do it. Reclamation has made gardens out of deserts in the section from which the present occupant of the chair [Mr. ASHURST] comes. But in North Carolina we have had none of the benefits of that salutary legislation, because we could not bring ourselves within the purview of the Constitution. However, now we have before us a measure which enables us to bring ourselves within the principles upon which those western lands have been made to blossom, and naturally I want, and I think every Senator from my section of the country ought to want, the benefit of such legislation.

The question has been asked, Why not wait and make it independent legislation? Mr. President, I greatly fear that if this must be accomplished by independent legislation we would find an opposition to it which would not be just in my judgment, but which would be sufficient probably to postpone the enactment of the legislation for a long time, if not indefinitely.

The time to do a thing is when the opportunity offers itself. Opportunity knocks sometimes but once, and it ought not to be waved away with the statement that the thing can be done better in another way and at another time. Now is the accepted time. Lose this opportunity and we may not get such beneficial legislation within 10 years, if ever.

Again, Mr. President, I want to say—and then I shall conclude—that I am in favor of both of the propositions, incomplete, inadequate, and insufficient as they are. I want them to be put together and to be kept together. Why? I shall be frank about it. I believe that the amendment attached to the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill will strengthen that bill, strengthen it in Congress, strengthen it with the President of the United States. I want to strengthen the adjusted compensation bill. On the other hand, I think the adjusted compensation provision strengthens and supports the drainage proposition. It may be that the McNary amendment will save the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill at the White House; and it is not at all improbable that if that bill in any case must meet a veto, then the McNary amendment may furnish us the votes here to write the bill into the national statutes, notwithstanding the President's disapproval. Therefore I shall support both propositions.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I have been intensely interested in the matter of having the National Government give recognition to the drainage projects of the South and to the policy of reclaiming the overflowed lands of the South not only since I became a Member of the Senate in 1917, but for several years prior to that time. As one of the State officers of my State, I advocated and urged that the Federal Government should not only recognize the desirability of making laws for the purpose of reclamation by irrigation of the arid lands of the West, but that this beneficent policy of the Government should also be extended to reclamation by drainage where we have vast areas of overflowed lands.

Very shortly after I became a Member of the Senate there was a bill pending, of which the then Senator from Oregon, Mr. Chamberlain, was the author, proposing to carry out the general policy of recognizing not only the arid-land projects but the drainage projects of the country. That bill came before the Senate with a favorable report. I was very much gratified that a committee of the Senate had seen proper to report favorably a measure which recognized reclamation by drainage; but upon a close study of the bill I found that its provisions were not such as to bring within its purview, to any great extent, reclamation by drainage, in my State in particular; and I think that was true in regard to other States of the Southland. I conferred with Senator Chamberlain, who, as I have stated, was the author of the bill. His bill embraced very largely the same principles and ideas that have been written into the pending amendment. He at that time agreed to certain amendments which I suggested, which would have made of that measure one that would have included in its application and in its benefits reclamation by drainage as well as reclamation by irrigation. That measure did not succeed of passage, however, prior to the retirement of Senator Chamberlain from the Senate.

I introduced a bill to take care of the arid-land situation of the West and of the drainage projects of the Southland or of any section where there were overflowed lands which were susceptible of reclamation by drainage. I do not remember the date of the introduction of that bill, but it was probably three years ago. It went before the committee having jurisdiction of such matters; the committee considered the measure, and, from information which I had received through conferences with members of the committee, I supposed they were going to report a bill which would not only include the irrigation of lands in the West but the drainage of swamp and overflowed lands in the South or wherever found. To my astonishment when the committee reported out a bill—it then bearing the name of the McNary bill—it did not include reclamation except by irrigation.

I took the position on the floor of the Senate, as the RECORD will disclose, that while I desired to see the Government assist in the wonderful development work which is being carried on in the West, until the Senate saw proper to give recognition to the policy of reclamation by drainage, I would oppose any measure that gave recognition only to the irrigation projects of the West. Although that bill had a favorable report, I opposed it at that time, as did some other Senators, not on the ground that we did not desire to see assistance given to the arid land projects but upon the ground that the measure was discriminatory; that it did not deal justly with a great area of our country which could be reclaimed by drainage; and, I may add, which could be reclaimed at a far less cost per acre than the arid lands. The result was that that bill, recognizing only one form of reclamation, did not pass at that time.

Now, I am very happy to say that the Senate committee has seen proper to give recognition to the section of the country which is entitled to recognition in the way of providing that the same consideration shall be extended to the swamp and overflowed lands requiring drainage as is given to the arid lands which require irrigation. I am very much pleased that the committee has recognized the wisdom and the justice of placing these two characters of lands which require reclamation in the same measure and giving to them the same opportunity and benefit. That seems to have been the purpose and the object, Mr. President, of the committee in recommending the so-called McNary bill, and the amendment now pending is substantially nothing more nor less than the so-called McNary bill, which was recommended by the committee, and is also to a large degree similar to the measure known as the Borah-Bankhead bill.

In a general way, those measures embrace the policy which I have advocated for more than five years, since becoming a Member of the Senate, in that they give recognition to reclamation by drainage.

I heartily approve of the general policy of the amendment. To a great extent it is nothing more nor less than the writing into the bill of a policy which I have championed and advocated with all the energy that I possess since I became a Member of the Senate; and, on one or two occasions, at least, I was one of the stumblingblocks which prevented the enactment of legislation which would have precluded and would not have given recognition to reclamation by drainage, thereby making it necessary for those who desire to carry on reclamation by irrigation to give recognition to the swamp and overflowed lands requiring the same benefits under a measure of that character.

I have offered an amendment, however, Mr. President, designed to make the proposed legislation more elastic and to render its benefits more available under conditions as they exist in my State. I have not championed, nor would I champion, big land ownership, but in a drainage project, dealing with swamp and overflowed lands, an entire area has to be reclaimed. A little tract of ten or twenty thousand acres can not be picked out when there are 250,000 acres subject to overflow within a given area, all contiguous and on which the water running down hill seeks its level on the low places. The only practical, economical, and sensible thing to do in such a case is to reclaim the entire tract.

I am not an engineer, but I have had a little experience in dealing with drainage problems, having for eight years been a member of the drainage board in Florida, which handled the great Everglades drainage project, in a district embracing 4,000,000 acres of land. Under provisions of the amendment which I seek to amend, if that district, as an illustration, desired to avail itself of the assistance here offered, at least 80 per cent of all the 4,000,000 acres of land would have to be subject to settlement upon small tracts. Ours is a great country; my State is a great State; it is prospering and it is developing. We have newcomers, home seekers, by the thousands each year, and we welcome them; we are glad to have them there; they prosper when once they establish their homes in Florida; but if we should go to work and subject 80 per cent of those 4,000,000 acres of land to homestead in small tracts of 10, 20, 30, or 40 acres there are not enough people in this country of ours who are seeking homesteads to occupy that vast acreage in 20 years. Therefore the sensible and logical business proposition is to open some of that land, as much of it as can be occupied, for settlement purposes to the home seeker, to the individual settler, and then leave an acreage that would be subject to such uses as cattle raising, sugar plantations, and developments of similar character which might be carried on on a large scale. If we shall not do that, we can never in a reasonable time sell the entire acreage in a vast area of that character.

I have had great sympathy always for the small farmer; I have always desired to lift him up and to assist him so far as I could. My public record will establish and sustain the statement that when I first became a member of the drainage board of Florida, as attorney general of the State—and I trust the personal allusion to the position which I occupied may be pardoned, but by virtue of that position I was a member of the board—we had not up to that time laid out, surveyed, and offered tracts of land to settlers; but, being desirous of developing that section, being desirous of offering the privilege of purchase to the man who could only purchase 10, 20, 30, or 40 acres of land, I prepared a resolution and had it adopted by the board setting aside some of the best land in the territory to be surveyed and to be reclaimed by drainage and to be offered in tracts of 10, 20, 30, or 40 acres to the settler. So I have been working for settlers, Mr. President, in my official capacity for at least 12 or 14 years. I desire to encourage settlement; I desire to encourage the individual homeseeker; but if 80 per cent of all the land in a given territory has to be subjected to sale by the Secretary, and can not be otherwise disposed of, what I am apprehensive of is that it will interfere with the development of many tracts of overflowed land that might otherwise be developed. I desire to see the development resulting from settlement by the home seeker, the individual settler, and also development that may be brought about by more extensive and large operations in my State, for we need both. I dislike to see a provision in the measure that might preclude the largest reclamation project not only in the State of Florida but anywhere in the United States from the possibility of participating in the beneficent features of the measure.

Therefore I have offered the amendment providing that the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, not require more than 50 per cent of the land to be offered for settlement purposes. If he thinks there ought to be 80 per cent of it offered, if there is a demand for 80 per cent, he can require it; but I desire to allow him a little latitude in order that he may exercise some judgment and business sagacity in dealing with this problem. In some sections 80 per cent might be necessary and might be desirable, while in other localities, on account of the peculiar position of the land and the peculiar problems of reclamation involved, the drainage and engineering problems, the Secretary of the Interior would know that 50 per cent of that land for new homestead settlements would be all that would, for at least many years, be occupied or taken up by the individual settler. It might be a project thoroughly worthy of Federal assistance; it might be that in that particular State that would be the only tract that could be developed. Certainly the Government should not discriminate against that State on that account, and not give recognition to that project.

Mr. President, I hope my amendment will be adopted. It will not affect the beneficent purpose and the object sought by the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, with which I am thoroughly in sympathy. His measure is in accord with the policy that I have been advocating, as I said, ever since becoming a Member of the Senate. I am gratified to know that the Senator from Oregon—who for a time did not seem disposed to recognize reclamation by drainage when I was advocating it in the early part of his and my tenure here—has come to believe that this is proper. I want his amendment adopted, but I want to make it as practical as possible and so that it will reach all of the projects of my State. I think we will get some benefits even without my amendment, but this will give more elasticity to the measure. It will not impair the Government's security; it will not interfere with development; it will not interfere with the settlement of the homesteader, but it will preserve all those policies, and in my opinion will bring about a more extended, a larger, and a more general development under the provisions of the amendment as proposed.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Mexico for a question?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. BURSUM. I desire to ask the Senator from Florida if it would not be practicable to limit his amendment so that it would apply only to reclaimed swamp lands, for this reason: There may be a great difference in the amount of land which can be successsfully farmed after swamp land has been reclaimed as compared with land which is reclaimed and must be farmed under the irrigation system.

Mr. TRAMMELL. There is a very great difference. I appreciate that suggestion. There is one point I ought to refer to about the idea of homestead development on swamp and overflowed lands. In 20 minutes you can not cover all these points. In the case of a great deal of the swamp and overflowed land of the country a man would want to farm it, but he would not want to live on it. You have a different condition entirely from that which you have in the arid regions. I should be glad to have the amendment provide that in the case of reclamation by drainage the Secretary, in his discretion, may not require exceeding 60 per cent of the land to be sold for settlement.

Mr. BURSUM. Swamp lands will not require irrigation, of course. You do not irrigate your country.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Oh, no; we do not.

Mr. BURSUM. What you want to do is to get rid of the water.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is the idea. That would be very agreeable to me. The Senators from the West know their problem better than I do, and I believe that I know the problem of the South better than they do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida wish to perfect his amendment in that respect? He has that right.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Yes; I wish to do that, so that it will read that in the case of the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands the Secretary, in his discretion, may not require more than 50 per cent to be disposed of to settlers.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, so much has been said about the question of reclamation that I shall not attempt to discuss it at length, but I desire to offer a few remarks.

It is a matter of history that reclamation was practiced by the ancients. We know what was done in the Valley of the Euphrates and of the Tigris by the Mesopotamians. We know what the Egyptians did in the Valley of the Nile, and we should know what the Chinese and other orientals have done. I do not think it is generally known that there are more irrigation ditches and canals in China, Japan, and Korea than there are miles of railroad in the United States. There are 200,000 miles in China alone. Those irrigation systems were built ages ago, and should be an example and inspiration to us.

Something has been said on this floor to-day about too much land being brought under irrigation. I resent such a statement. Coming as I do from a western State, I consider that too narrow a viewpoint for any American to take. I think by looking back into history it will be found that during the days of our colonies the thought was sent out from England that too much land was being brought under cultivation. When our colonies started along the Atlantic coast the same idea was brought forward—that we had plenty of land and there was not a great necessity for settling up the Central States. When the Central States were settled up the same argument was used against settling the far West.

Mr. President, our country is too progressive and too powerful to stand where it is to-day. We must have more reclamation projects, and I want to see the amendment of the Senator from Oregon adopted. It does not mean a gift from the Government to that western country.

This money is placed in a revolving fund, and I believe that the plan now is that about $25,000,000 a year will be spent in developing these projects. The bill calls for a total of $350,000,000. That means that it will be spread over 14 or 15 years. That means, further, that as these projects are started and developed they will furnish work for many thousands of ex-soldiers. It is a sensible and necessary thing to do, to provide wholesome, profitable out-of-door work for them.

The argument has been used on the floor to-day that these projects may not be ready for them for a number of years; but these soldiers are young, virile men. They will welcome an opportunity to settle on the land, even if it is several years from now. It is not expected that they can go on a new project immediately. Rome was not built in a day. They will watch with eagerness and patience, and many thousands of them will be helping in doing this development work and in position to take advantage of these tracts of land when they are opened for entry and settlement. By looking back into history you will find that Solomon stated that men should not purchase as much land as they desired. He favored the small unit; and to-day our great western country needs more small farms, and it needs thousands and hundreds of thousands more of them.

I hope this amendment will be adopted. It will help in carrying out a great national policy. China had that national policy generations ago, and we should at least do as much as China. We can not begin to do for generations what China has done in this way, but I say now is the time to start.

Another thing that these various reclamation projects will do will be to encourage the elimination of the tenant farmer. We want the soldiers on the land. We want more independent, individual farm units. We want the veterans to go on the land and take their families there, and the country is greatly in need of them for this great work.

It might be well at this time to warn the people of this country against the calamity that befell ancient Rome. When the decay came to that country it was caused largely by too much luxury. The people became affluent and lost interest in agriculture, and this was the beginning of the fall of Rome, when agriculture fell into disrepute.

Mr. President, let us in America pay more attention to agriculture and new reclamation enterprises and thus prevent such a calamity happening to us as befell Rome. Let us give what encouragement we can to these reclamation projects in the West, and above all let us dismiss from our minds any idea that there are too many acres of land under cultivation to-day. To those in the East I suggest that the greater the prosperity that comes to the West by the starting of reclamation projects the more business will come to the eastern manufacturers.

The success of the whole of our country means the success of all of its parts. Let us to-day, when we have the opportunity, help that great western empire which needs help, and in helping that empire we will be doing a service to the soldiers of our country, to whom we owe more than money can ever pay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], which the Senator from Florida has perfected, and which will be stated by the Secretary.

The READING CLERK. In the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, which is to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon, on page 3, line 15, after the word "agreements," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That in his discretion the Secretary may require, in connection with projects for the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands by drainage, not exceeding 50 per centum of the excess lands within the project to be subjected to disposal, by authority of the Secretary, to settlers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, we should have a quorum to vote on this important amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	Nelson	Shortridge
Ball	Hale	New	Smith
Brandegee	Heflin	Newberry	Smoot
Broussard	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Stanfield
Bursum	Kellogg	Oddie	Sterling
Calder	Kendrick	Overman	Sutherland
Cameron	Keyes	Pepper	Townsend
Capper	King	Phipps	Trammell
Colt	La Follette	Pittman	Underwood
Culberson	Lenroot	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Curtis	Lodge	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	McCormick	Rawson	Warren
Fletcher	McCumber	Reed, Pa.	Williams
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Robinson	Willis
Gerry	McNary	Sheppard
Glass	Myers	Shields

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to say just one word about the amendment of the Senator from Florida to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon. As I understand it, it commits the Secretary of the Interior to undertake a project when only 50 per cent of the excess land has been signed up for disposition. I think that would be very unwise from almost every standpoint, and I hope the amendment to the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is perfectly clear from the trend of the debate that the Senate has lost sight of the adjusted compensation bill. The Senate has converted its proceedings for the consideration of a measure for the relief of the American soldier into an effort to pass a comprehensive reclamation bill. I have no fault to find with the principle underlying the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], with whom I usually agree, justifies in part his support of this amendment on the ground that it is calculated to strengthen the adjusted compensation bill. I believe every Senator present, and I am sure fair-minded citizens who are not officials of this Government, will agree with the proposal that the adjusted compensation bill ought to be determined on its own merits or demerits. For more than a year this question has been before the country. Some Senators have advocated it, sincerely believing that the men who fought the battles of this country and won its victories during the late war are entitled to some substantial recognition. They have maintained that merely because we are unable by any legislation we can pass to do all for the American soldier to which he is entitled we are not justified in refusing to do anything for him.

The Senator from Oregon has presented an amendment which is in the nature of a separate bill. It deals with a subject remotely related, if at all, to the questions under consideration and which is not properly involved in determining the merits of the adjusted compensation bill. The amendment contemplates an appropriation of $350,000,000 for the purposes of reclamation, notwithstanding the statement of my friend the Senator from North Carolina that no appropriation is involved.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I know that the Senator wants to be fair. He is usually accurate, I may say uniformly so; but the statement that this does appropriate any amount of money is not founded upon the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I read from the bill itself, or from the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, page 7, line 17:

There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $350,000,000, to be transferred from time to time to the national reclamation fund and appropriated upon estimates made by the Secretary for carrying out the provisions of this title.

It is true that under the new rule adopted by the Senate this amendment on this bill could not carry an appropriation, but this is an express authorization of an appropriation of $350,000,000. I am in sympathy with well-considered plans for the reclamation of arid lands and for the reclamation of swamp lands and overflowed lands, but I submit to Senators that the just and fair way to determine legislation of that character is to consider it and determine it on its own merits. After having considered adjusted compensation legislation for a year and a half, we do not need to strengthen it by a proposal involving the expenditure of enormous sums for reclamation. If the American soldier is not entitled to the benefits of the adjusted compensation bill, have the courage to vote "no" on the passage of the adjusted compensation bill.

We have all known that the measure would pass the Senate whenever a vote was taken on it. We have all realized the fact that the danger to the measure lies in an Executive veto. Some Senators justify their votes for the McNary amendment on the ground that the President will be deterred from vetoing the adjusted compensation bill if the reclamation amendment is put into the bill, and other Senators, those who have been foremost in leading the opposition to any bill for adjusted compensation, are supporting the McNary amendment in the hope that the President will veto the entire bill when it reaches him.

That is not the way to legislate. It is not just to the American soldier. The representatives of the American Legion do not want this bill amended in this or any other important particular. They are satisfied with the bill as reported by the Finance Committee. They will be glad to see that passed and become a law, and the President of the United States ought to be given an opportunity to determine the question of veto or approval on the merits of the adjusted compensation bill.

These questions are separate in their nature. They are not intimately related. There are many measures—and this is one—which, considered separate and apart from the adjusted compensation bill, I should be glad to vote for, but I shall decline to vote for this amendment, because I believe it imperils the passage of the adjusted compensation bill and because I believe the American soldier is entitled to have his rights settled independent of any question of reclamation of dry lands in the West or wet lands in the South.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am generally in accord with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and I am very sorry that we do not look at this legislation in the same way. The Senator is basing his argument largely on the ground that this amendment is an ulterior matter, that this land-settlement amendment is foreign to the subject of this bill. In that I contend he is entirely mistaken. He has absolutely forgotten the history of this legislation.

Every bill that has ever passed the House of Representatives on this subject has had a land-settlement provision in it. Every one of these bills that has been presented to the Senate by the Finance Committee has stricken out of it the land-settlement provisions. The Senator says the soldiers are satisfied with the bill as amended by the Senate committee. How does he come to that conclusion? Is it because some of the politicians in the Legion have told him so? I remember when the officers of the American Legion stated that the soldiers of the country were opposed to any adjusted compensation, and I remember when a convention was held subsequent to that time, attended by delegates from every post throughout the country, the delegates repudiated the statements of those so-called leaders and elected other leaders. If information has been given to the Senator by the present officers of the Legion to the effect that soldier boys are satisfied with this emasculated bill as presented to the Senate by the Finance Committee, then at the next convention of the Legion there will be some new officers elected.

The only proof as to what the soldier boys want is a consideration of what was presented to the House of Representatives. Take the bill now under consideration by the Senate and turn to page 28, title 8, land settlement. That provision of the bill as it passed the House takes up 12 pages of the bill, over one-fourth of the entire bill. It is a comprehensive reclamation and land-settlement project—just as comprehensive as the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

As a matter of fact, it goes more into detail with reference to the settlement of arid lands and swamp lands by veterans than does the McNary amendment, which we are now considering. It goes further than that. It requires an estimated expenditure of over $2,000,000,000, while the expenditure under the McNary amendment is limited to only $350,000,000.

How can the Senator from Arkansas say that the land settlement proposition submitted by the Senator from Oregon is foreign to this bill, when the bill before the Senate, as it stands, contains a land-settlement proposition just as comprehensive and four times as expensive? It is true the Senate has stricken out that provision of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The land-settlement provision which was originally in the bill, and which was stricken out by the Senate committee, contemplated elaborate machinery and process for bringing the soldier to the land. In contradistinction to that is the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon, which is primarily, on its face, a reclamation proposal and which is only incidentally related to the interests of the American soldier. He is given, I believe, a 60-day preference, which in most instances he would have no opportunity to exercise, by reason of lack of detailed information, none being furnished by the bill, and no process being provided by the amendment to furnish it to him, and he would have no opportunity to avail himself of it.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not see yet the distinction the Senator is drawing. I think he was taken by surprise. I think he actually forgot that the bill as it now stands before the Senate had the land-settlement provision in it, to which I have referred.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator will surely do me the credit to concede that I have some little knowledge of the history of this legislation. I recall very well the efforts and proposals of Mr. Secretary Lane in connection with this subject. But the point I am attempting to make, if the Senator will permit me, is that this bill has been converted into a reclamation proposal, whereas under the original House provision reclamation was incident to the adjusted compensation proposal.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is what I say; I can not understand the difference between what the Senator calls the primary in one case and the incidental in another. The part that was "incidental," as the Senator says, in the bill pending now, and which the Senate has stricken out, contains 39 pages, with a contemplated expenditure of $2,000,000,000, and the primary reclamation measure, as the Senator calls it, which is now offered to take the place of that stricken out, takes up about four pages, and contemplates the expenditure of only about one-fourth as much money to settle the soldiers on the land. The House provision provides a new machinery to settle the soldiers on the land. The McNary amendment adopts the present machinery of the Government to settle the soldiers on the land. It gives the soldiers exactly the same rights accorded them under the House provision through a prior right of entry. It also gives the soldier prior right of employment on the reclamation projects. The only difference is with regard to the expense of the matter.

Mr. LENROOT. He must exercise the option within 60 days.

Mr. ROBINSON. And it provides for him to obtain the knowledge and information necessary to the exercise of the option, so the result will be that the soldiers who do not live in the immediate vicinity of a reclamation project, unless some organization is effected, will never have an opportunity of availing themselves of the benefits of the act, if there are any benefits to them. For that reason I say again that it becomes a reclamation bill rather than an adjusted compensation bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am rather astonished at that line of argument on the part of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, the Senator understands I am not responsible for his mental processes or for his astonishment. I can not give him understanding, nor can I detract from his astonishment.

Mr. PITTMAN. If I had known the Senator was going to get so heated about it, I should not have allowed him to take so much of my time to excite himself.

Mr. ROBINSON. I hope the Senator understands that I am in the utmost good humor. If the Senator understands my remark in any other spirit I shall certainly ask leave to withdraw it.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think I understand the Senator's frame of mind. As I said, as a matter of fact, he did not know what was in the House bill. As a matter of fact, some time yesterday afternoon one of the leaders of the Legion told him the best thing was to take a chance on the President's vetoing it like it is, and so he got scared to death and ran into this mistake. As a matter of fact, if 60 days' time is not enough for the soldiers, I suggest that those who are afraid of it make it six months. That is the way to get at that proposition. But, as a matter of fact, there is a law on the statute books at the present time which gives the soldier 60 days' preference right upon the opening of any project, and the soldiers have had no trouble in finding out about when those projects were to be opened. It is a perfectly absurd thing to say that the soldiers are not going to ascertain or know when such projects are opened up, projects which are for their benefit.

As to the question of veto. Is it the fear of the veto that is urging some of the Senators to vote against any land-settlement proposition for the soldiers? They have already voted against the land-settlement poposition contained in the House bill. Now, are they going to vote against every land-settlement proposition? If they vote against the McNary amendment now under consideration, they vote against the only land-settlement proposition proposed for the soldiers. Is it because they are afraid the President of the United States will veto the bill if it carries a land-settlement provision? Where do they get that idea? Every such bill that has been passed by the House has contained a land-settlement provision and the present bill as passed by the House contains such a provision. It is estimated that the land-settlement provision contained in the House text would cost over $2,000,000,000, while the land-settlement provision contained in the McNary amendment would only cost $350,000,000.

Is there any Senator who has ever heard of a public or private utterance by the President of the United States that would indicate that he was opposed to the land-settlement provision contained in the House text? Never one, and yet that bill would require $2,000,000,000 while the McNary amendment only requires $350,000,000. The President has stated on what grounds he would veto the bill and that statement does not contain any reference to the land-settlement provision in the House bill. As a matter of fact, the President has affirmatively approved the McNary Reclamation Act which is now offered as an amendment to this bill. The President has stated that he would veto the bill unless it carried a tax provision sufficient to pay its obligation. Has he changed that statement? He has not that I know of. Is there anyone here prepared to say that he has changed that position? His veto of the bill does not depend upon the land-settlement provision because he has approved such a provision, but it depends upon the question, if he has not changed his mind, as to how to raise the money to meet the cash bonus.

As a matter of fact, unless the President changes his mind he will veto the bill on his statement that he would veto any bill that did not carry a provision within it for the payment of the obligation created by it. If he is going to veto the bill, then the ultimate passage of the bill does not depend on whether it contains a land-settlement provision or not, but depends on whether or not we have a two-thirds vote in this body to carry it over his veto. I believe we have the two-thirds vote to carry it over his veto, whether he vetoes it on the ground of the land settlement or on the grounds which I have already stated. I do not believe, if he vetoes the bill, that it will be by reason of the fact that there is a land-settlement provision in it for the soldiers. Such an act would be too inconsistent.

I have not known of anyone opposing the land-settlement provision for the soldiers if there is to be a bill passed. Why, the matter has been fought out in the House of Representatives. The soldiers by their resolutions have stated that they consider one of the most valuable functions of the legislation is the power which the House bill gives of placing soldiers upon the land. In spite of the action of the Senate on several occasions in striking out the land-settlement provision the House again sends the bill to us with a land-settlement provision in it. We of the West have offered an amendment to the bill since the land-settlement provision of the House has been stricken out by the Senate committee, and our amendment accomplishes the same purpose as the House text, but at one-fourth the cost. There is no excuse to vote against the McNary amendment. The argument that the soldier boys are satisfied is without foundation and without anything in fact to sustain it, as is proven by the action of the House of Representatives. I can not understand why a Senator from a State which has hundreds of thousands of acres of fine lands, which are subject to being prepared for settlement of the soldiers within his State and other States, can oppose a measly appropriation of $350,000,000 for the purpose of furnishing the boys with fine homes. It is said that primarily it is a reclamation act. Anyone could call any land-settlement provision primarily a reclamation act. It is only one of the five provisions of the measure for the benefit of the soldier. As I said, it is only one-fourth as expensive as the land-settlement provision contained in the bill as it passed the House.

I have listened to-day to a distinguished Senator on the other side of the Chamber crying about the debt of the country. Why, Mr. President, there is such a thing as extravagance and there is such a thing as investment. No great business man ceases to do business simply because he has been forced into debt by reason of peculiar conditions. The ordinary business man with half of all the gold of the world in his safe would not sit idly down and cry by reason of the fact that he was in debt and cease to develop the resources that he had. That is the trouble with this administration. It is surrounded by gold. Its papers are crying out every day about the tremendous prosperity that is coming down on top of us, and yet Senators cry here on the floor every day if anyone proposes any constructive action whatever, because perhaps it will cost a dollar or two. This country is the richest in the world and has 11 per cent indebtedness against all the wealth of the country, and yet the Senator having this bill in charge is afraid to invest $350,000,000 for the purpose of putting under cultivation the richest agricultural lands of the West and the South and furnishing homes to boys whose health will not permit them to do confining work.

Now is the time to enact some constructive legislation. Do not be frightened off because some politician tells you that it may bring down a veto of the President. Do not be any more frightened than when he told us three years ago that the soldiers did not want readjusted compensation. The same men who misrepresented that fact to you when their convention met were thrown out into utter darkness, and the same men who come to you and say the soldiers are satisfied with this bill as presented by the Finance Committee of the Senate will be thrown into utter darkness the next time their convention meets. There is no question about that. Stop listening to the politicians of these organizations and listen to the resolutions and the letters from your home boys. You will find that they are more interested in a good land-settlement proposition being incorporated in the bill than they are in the cash feature of it. At least, I know that is true with regard to my own State, and I think it is true with regard to a great many other States.

Do not tell me that the boys are satisfied with this butchered bill. Why, the bill has been pared off and chipped down until it is only about one-half of what it was originally. Do you think that the boys here are entirely satisfied with the bill, when we are constantly told that it is by reason of a fear of veto that we have to keep taking something away from them, cutting out some benefits from any bill that comes up, while the only statement with regard to the veto is that the President will veto any bill that does not carry within its limits a provision for the payment of the adjusted compensation? Amendments have been offered time and time again to provide for that. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] offered an amendment to make the $10,000,000,000 of excess war profits pay it, and that was voted down. Oh, yes; we had $25,000,000,000 excess profits during the war, but the use of none of that for the payment of the soldiers is provided for in the bill. Why, as a matter of fact, the situation is this: The President has said, "If you do not incorporate in the bill a provision providing the method of raising funds to pay for the obligation which it creates, I shall veto it." The leaders on the floor of the Senate do not dare to attempt to incorporate a provision for taking care of it, because they know such a provision would be amended by the Senate that the burden would fall upon those who made the enormous excess profits during the war. The whole legislative procedure has been a fraud upon the soldier boys of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], which the Secretary will state.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, line 15, of the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon, after the word "agreements" insert the following proviso:

Provided, That, in his discretion, the Secretary may require, in connection with the projects of the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands by drainage, not exceeding 50 per cent of the excess lands within the project to be subject to disposal, by authority of the Secretary, to settlers.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, for the reasons so well stated by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] I shall not vote for the amendment. The proposition involved in the amendment of the Senator from Oregon is important enough to be considered separately upon its own merits. I can well understand how any Senator who is opposed to the adjusted compensation bill may favor the amendment in the hope that by the adoption of it a veto of the bill may be made more possible; but I can not understand how any Senator who really believes there is some danger of this bill coming back to us with a veto can support this amendment, however much he might be in favor of it as a separate and original proposition.

We are told by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] that this is a soldiers' proposition, but at the same time he admits that under it the soldier is given no greater preference than he is given under existing law with reference to public land. We are told that the soldier will be the beneficiary of this amendment, but in almost the same breath we are told that while there is an appropriation authorized of $350,000,000, that appropriation will not be made for many, many years to come, at least not any substantial portion of it. If that be true, Mr. President, if the appropriation is not to be made, then how is the soldier to benefit by the terms of the amendment? If the appropriation is to be made, how do Senators escape the conclusion that it will give to the President an additional reason or a reason, if Senators please, for vetoing the bill?

It is well understood that the President of the United States favors the principle of this bill and that the only question in his mind is that of meeting the payments that will be required under it. For the next year the payment will be approximately $76,000,000, and about the same sum will be required the following year; but if this is a soldiers' bill, if $350,000,000 are to be expended for the benefit of the soldiers, there is just $350,000,000 additional reason for the President to veto this bill if the proposed amendment becomes a part of it. I see no escape from that conclusion.

I am unwilling upon a measure of this character, which is so important to the West—and I am quite in sympathy with the purpose of the amendment as an independent proposition—to ride it on the backs of the ex-service men of America. Those who propose it, those who vote for it, who are in favor of the adjusted compensation bill, must take some measure of responsibility in defeating adjusted compensation for the soldier if a veto comes back here because of the expenditures that are involved in the bill, the adjusted compensation for the soldier, plus the appropriations that are authorized to be made in the bill out of the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of reclamation.

Mr. President, no one ought to be deceived. This reclamation feature is not primarily for the benefit of the soldier; it is a reclamation proposition, pure and simple, with merely a preference to the service man, which the service man now has under existing law.

Mr. McNARY. Will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. What the Senator from Wisconsin states is true only of the unentered public domain; it has no application whatsoever to the great body of land which is known as excess-acreage land.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, Mr. President, I desire to make another suggestion. Is it fair to the ex-service men of America to hold or to argue that this amendment is for the benefit of the ex-service men of America as a whole? The ex-service man in my State with a family is not going to take advantage of this bill if it shall be put into force. The ex-service men in the particular States where the reclamation projects may be carried on probably will do so, and to that extent it will give those ex-service men a direct advantage and a greater advantage than it gives to the ex-service men in general, not because of the terms of the proposed law but because of the circumstances of those who will avail themselves of the opportunity offered.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Would it surprise the Senator from Wisconsin to be told that the majority of the settlers upon reclamation projects in the West came from the East, and not from the immediate locality?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not know whether that is true or not; if the Senator says it is true, I accept the statement; but, nevertheless, the fact remains that, if it is true, if the ex-service men in the particular States to be benefited will not avail themselves of this privilege in a larger percentage than those in other States, it must be because the project itself is not attractive to the soldier in the locality, for he will have an opportunity, without great expense, of learning of the project and knowing just exactly what it is, while the average ex-service man in the great section east of the Mississippi River has not the money and can not afford to go out and inspect the land.

As an independent proposition, Mr. President, I make no comment upon the amendment, and I should be very glad to take it up as an independent proposition when we get through with the coal bills which are now pending, but, in view of the fact that the amendment may be adopted, I should like to call attention to one or two of its provisions, and I should like the interpretation of them from the Senator from Oregon. Section 806, on page 5 of the amendment, provides:

That unentered and unpatented arid and semiarid lands of the United States susceptible of reclamation may be included in a district—

May be included by whom? I take it for granted by the State authorities which create the district—

may be included in a district and may be subjected to the provisions of the act of August 11, 1916—

Which I believe is the Steenerson Act. Under that language all unentered and unpatented arid and semiarid lands susceptible of reclamation may be included in a district, and when included in a district are subject to the provisions of the act referred to. Mr. President, does that include land withdrawn from entry for mineral purposes? Does that include coal lands if they are susceptible of reclamation? It is provided later on that such lands can only be acquired by homestead entry. Under this paragraph has the Secretary of the Interior any discretion or anything to say about what lands shall be included in a project? He has under the act to which reference is made, the act of August 11, 1916, but under that act only unentered and unpatented lands subject to entry may be included in a project.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I may remark to the Senator that before the Government of the United States has anything at all to do the arrangement must be entirely satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior; else he will not make a contract. So he can dictate his terms so far as the public lands are concerned.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not think the Secretary has any discretion under the amendment in that respect.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But he has discretion to enter into a contract or not as he sees fit.

Mr. LENROOT. I think that is a limited discretion. If it is feasible to reclaim the lands, upon investigation, the Secretary is authorized to contract with the district to construct the necessary works for their reclamation. I think his discretion is as to the feasibility of the project, and that is all. He has no discretion under that language to say "this tract of land shall go into the project, and this other tract of land shall not." The Senator from Montana can not find any such authority in the amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I invite attention to the fact that it is not necessary. He is at liberty to enter into a contract to perform the reclamation work or not as he sees fit, and he will not enter into a contract unless the conditions are satisfactory to him.

Mr. LENROOT. Again, I say the question for him to determine is the feasibility of the project; but he is not given any discretion to refrain from entering into a contract because he thinks that some lands which the bill says shall be included within a district should not be included within a district.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Does the Senator believe that the Secretary could be mandamused to make a contract?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not say that, but I say that in the performance of his duty under the law, in my judgment, he would not be permitted in his own discretion to say "this tract of land shall be included in a project, and this other tract shall not be," when the amendment says they shall all be included.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Where does the Senator find any language that would compel the Secretary to enter into a contract?

Mr. LENROOT. I am speaking of the discretion upon which the Secretary may act in the making of a contract, and I am pointing out that he has no discretion to say that one tract of land shall be taken out of a project or another put in. He has under the act referred to in the amendment, but that act applies only after the lands are included in a district.

Mr. President, this raises a very serious question, and, while I am not prepared to offer any amendment to clear it up, I do bring it up at this time, for, if the amendment of the Senator from Oregon shall be adopted, go to conference, and finally be agreed upon that matter certainly ought to be cleared up; it ought to be just as specific as is the act of 1916 referred to, where the language is clear and definite that only lands subject to public entry can be included in a project, and then it is within the discretion of the Secretary as to what lands shall be included.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I do not think it is fair to the soldier to saddle the adjusted compensation bill with this amendment. I do not think it is fair, on the other hand, on the part of those Senators whose only objection to the adjusted compensation is because of the expense involved to vote for this amendment which involves an additional expenditure of $350,000,000. As for myself, I could not reconcile my action if I should so vote, in refusing to vote for the adjusted compensation bill because of the condition of the Treasury and then vote for an amendment involving the same identical question, proposing to appropriate $350,000,000 from the Treasury.

Mr. President, an amendment involving the question of reclamation, one of the most important that Congress can consider, ought not to be attached to a bill of this kind. The service men of the United States, if this bill shall pass the Senate and the House and go to the President, are entitled to have from the President of the United States, his judgment on their proposition and not have it bound up with another question which may give him reason for vetoing the bill.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I offer two amendments to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts in the chair). The amendments to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2 of the printed amendment of the Senator from Oregon, in line 5, after the word "dikage," it is proposed to insert the words "or otherwise"; and on page 6, line 14, after the word "construction," it is proposed to strike out the words "but not", and insert the word "and."

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I ask that both amendments be voted on at the same time.

The object of the amendment of the Senator from Oregon is to include arid lands and swamp lands. The object of my amendments is to include cut-over timber lands. That is the only purpose that I have in view, and I think the language of my amendments broadens the amendment of the Senator from Oregon to include this character of lands. My idea is that the soldiers would not care to go into the swamp country, or perhaps the arid country where it would be necessary to irrigate the land, there being plenty of land of other characters which would cost much less to prepare for cultivation. Therefore I think they should have an opportunity of acquiring that character of land.

That is the only reason I have for offering the amendments. There are plenty of lands which could be bought, perhaps, much cheaper, and could be prepared for cultivation with much less expense to the soldiers. They could stay in their own communities or their own States, where they would much prefer to be than to go to some distant part of the country.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, as an independent proposition I am thoroughly in favor of the McNary reclamation proposition. I had hoped to be able to support it under any circumstances and under any conditions. I participated in some of the initial conferences of those interested in the measure. After weighing the matter carefully, however, I can not reach any other conclusion than that announced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. I am unwilling to vote for any measure which may complicate or lessen the chances for the enactment of the adjusted compensation bill. I think it will be found that a number of Senators who are opposed to the adjusted compensation measure will vote for this amendment, with the hope of loading the former down, of embarrassing it as much as possible, who, if the McNary bill were offered as an independent measure, would vote against it. I take this opportunity to say that I shall vote against all other amendments that may seem to me by any possibility to affect the final fate of this bill.

The issue has been fully presented by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and others. Let us have a final vote on the compensation measure with as little delay as possible.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, no one realizes, I think, more keenly than I do the serious nature of both of the propositions which are here submitted, namely, the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill and the bill for the reclamation of arid and swamp lands. I feel that it is necessary for me to say just a word, although what I have to say has been stated heretofore more forcefully than I can do.

I feel that combining these two projects in this way is going to embarrass both of them. I can not see it in any other way. If the bill should be vetoed because of the provisions of the compensation law, it would necessarily carry with it a veto of the irrigation law. On the other hand, if the irrigation proposition loaded the bill so as to embarrass the President on account of the cost to the extent of causing him to veto it, then both measures would fail; at least, unless a two-thirds majority of the Congress overruled that veto.

I agree with what has been said recently by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. The soldiers' compensation bill is a very serious one, about which there is legitimate cause for difference of opinion. I have not always been clear in my own mind as to what was my duty; but after hearing it discussed and after I have considered it long and carefully I believe that it is my duty to support the compensation measure. I think the Congress has pledged itself to do this on many occasions, and as a result of that I think the soldiers themselves believe they have been promised the passage of this bill.

So far as I am concerned, I will not break the Government's faith to the soldiers. I am satisfied that they will regard this as a breach of faith on our part if we fail to pass the bill, and the fact of the matter is that I do not believe that this bonus proposition originated with the soldiers.

I am satisfied that the friends of the soldiers, some Members of Congress, originated this plan, and that the soldiers, I repeat, have been led to believe that this is a right which they possess under promises made by the Congress of the United States. I will not have them lose faith in Congress if I can prevent it, but I do not wish to load up this proposition with anything that is foreign to it. I want it to stand on its own merits, and it will do this if we eliminate these reclamation propositions and all other propositions which only by a great stretch of the imagination can we connect with the real issue involved in the compensation bill.

I want to discuss the reclamation bill when it comes up. I am in sympathy with it as a general thing. I am not clear, however, that the proposition now before us does not contain a scheme for the purpose of selling privately owned land. That land is to be reclaimed under certain conditions, of course. It is reclaimed largely for private owners, as only a portion of it can be taken for homestead purposes. Do you tell me that that does not imperil the compensation bill? Furthermore, if we are to have the reclamation project in connection with these things, I want it to cover cut-over lands, as we have many thousands of acres of those lands in Michigan and Wisconsin and Minnesota. I am not prepared to urge that upon the consideration of Congress at this time, but when this reclamation bill is up as an independent measure I want to present the merits of that side of the case to the Congress, and I would have a right to do it; but if I inject it here into the consideration of this bill I not only delay action upon it but I actually imperil its passage. That I will not do.

I am willing to vote on this compensation bill as it comes to the Senate, but I will not offer any false hopes to the soldier and put on this bill a measure which may defeat it if it should be adopted. Let it stand on its own bottom, and then the President and the country can have an opportunity to decide the merits of the case.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] for a moment? In the speech which the Senator from Oregon made on yesterday he gave some figures relative to the amount of swamp land in this country, and in the State of Ohio he gives the amount of that swamp land as being 200,000 acres. My understanding is that all of that so-called swamp land—and there is some of it there—is privately owned. Does the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon authorize the drainage or improvement of that land?

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, first let me correct the figures. I said that there were in this country practically 96,000,000 acres of swamp or overflowed lands susceptible or feasible of drainage, these figures being estimates made by the Reclamation Service, and in that 96,000,000 acres there are not included swamp lands not susceptible of drainage.

Mr. POMERENE. That does not answer my question.

Mr. MCNARY. No; but that is the first statement I wanted to make. Some of this swamp land is on the public domain. Part of it is in private hands, and when an irrigation district is organized the private lands and the public lands both come within the provisions of this bill, as is true to-day of reclamation projects. Of the 2,000,000 acres of land now watered by Government projects 1,800,000 acres are on the public domain and the rest of the water is applied to the lands of private users.

Mr. POMERENE. Then, if I am right in my assumption that all the swamp land there is in Ohio is privately owned, of course there will be no opportunity for relief under this bill.

Mr. MCNARY. Absolutely. I am giving the Senator an illustration of cases where there are swamp lands, privately owned, associated and connected with the public domain; but if it is all private land they can organize a district and issue their bonds, and if the project is found to be feasible the Secretary of the Interior, in whatever State it is located, can go forward with the construction.

Mr. POMERENE. That probably means that no Ohio land would be improved under this proposition.

Mr. MCNARY. Why does that proposition affect Ohio any differently than it does any other State?

Mr. POMERENE. I do not think there is enough of the land, and certainly it is not so advantageously located that a district could be organized. That would be my judgment about it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the question addressed to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] prompts me to say that this bill is framed primarily upon the theory not that the lands are public lands but that they are held in private ownership. Then a provision is made for the case of a district in which some of the lands are public lands, the property of the United States. Provision is made for a case of that character, the lands belonging to the United States not being subject to taxation, as they would be if all the lands in the district were held in private ownership. So the fact that the lands in the State of Ohio to which the Senator refers are held in private ownership would be no obstacle whatever to the owners thereof availing themselves of the provisions of this bill.

As to their character, I find that a study of the lands in the State of Ohio was made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in the year 1919, when it was found that there were susceptible of drainage in that State swamp lands to the extent of 257,000 acres, 30,000 acres of which were intensively studied and reported to be available for improvement under the provisions of a measure of the character of that contemplated in the amendment now before us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon the amendment, in the way of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, it has been suggested that some Senators are going to vote for this amendment in order to defeat this bill or to lead the President to veto it. It seems to me that a suggestion of that kind is unworthy of the Senate. I can not believe that any Senator will allow his vote to be cast from such motives as that.

The question as to whether or not the President will veto this bill has been discussed very extensively on the floor of the Senate. Personally, I do not think that that ought to influence us one way or the other. It will be the President's responsibility, when this bill reaches him, as to what course of action he will take upon it. Our responsibility is in the consideration of this measure now, and I propose, as far as I am concerned, to vote upon this bill, and upon every other bill, without any consideration whatever as to what the President is likely to do in reference to such a measure. I shall discharge my responsibility in the way I should, and I am satisfied the President will discharge his responsibility as he thinks he should.

The Senator from Wisconsin said that the soldiers' proposition ought to be sent to the President so that they can get his expression upon it. Yet he does not propose to send to the President the soldiers' proposition. As the Senator from Nevada pointed out, every bill that has come up and passed the House on this subject, and which has come up in the Senate, has contained a land-settlement proposition. That is a part of the soldiers' compensation proposition.

The Finance Committee of the Senate has stricken that provision out, and the Senator from Wisconsin proposes to keep it stricken out, and so far as the Finance Committee is concerned the bill would go to the President without that proposition in it. It would not go to the President as the soldiers' proposition in such a condition. Many of the soldiers have talked to me with reference to this bill, and the great majority of them have been in favor of the land-settlement proposition. They desire homes if it is possible to get them, and they would like to have the aid of the Government in securing them. They believe that the provision in the bill as it passed the House would help them to get it. So, if we send the bill to the President without any provision of this kind in it, we will not be sending to the President the soldiers' proposition at all.

What does the Finance Committee propose in the place of the provision stricken out of the bill? Practically nothing but a preference right, which the soldiers already have, for entry on public lands, lands which may be reopened, either on Indian reservations or elsewhere. Every man from the West knows that there is not a foot of public land in the United States which, without reclamation, is fit for homestead purposes today. So when you hold out to the soldiers the hope that under the preference right which he has under the law now, or which you will try to give him under this bill, he will get a homestead, you are holding out an empty shell, you are deceiving him. It would be almost criminal to encourage any man to take up a homestead upon any unreclaimed public land remaining.

The House sent to us a land-settlement proposition. I do not propose to discuss its terms. I think the committee has been wise in striking it out. It is not only an impracticable proposition but it is one which would lead this Government into untold millions if not billions of expenditure, without accomplishing any very great result. One proposal in it is that the only settlers upon a project shall be soldiers. I do not think the soldiers want anything like that. They do not want to be herded into a community by themselves. That spells failure to the proposition right from the start.

We present this proposition as a substitute for the House provision. We feel that something ought to go to conference which can be considered in the conference aside from the proposition of the House. Remember, if you do not adopt any other proposition the proposition in conference will be the House proposal, and that alone. If the Senate is opposed to that, let it substitute something else for it which can be considered and which it will propose to the House conferees. The Senator from Oregon has presented this proposition, not to load this bill down but to strengthen the bill if possible.

I want to say to the Senate that I propose to vote for this bill whether this amendment is put on or not. I am not supporting this proposition to embarrass the bill. I do not believe it will embarrass it. I am supporting this amendment because I think it will improve the bill.

The Senator from Wisconsin said the amendment would mean the expenditure of $350,000,000 in addition to the expenditures under other provisions of the bill. He overlooks the fact that provision is made in this bill for the payment of that $350,000,000.

I understand the position of the President is that he will veto this bill because it does not provide for the payment of the compensation. Provision is made in this amendment for the payment of this $350,000,000, so that if that is the objection of the President to the other provisions of the bill it would not apply to this amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the President's position is that no means is found in the bill for the raising of the revenue to make the payments. Will the Senator tell me where in this amendment there is provided any means for raising the $350,000,000?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, it provides for its repayment to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LENROOT. The objection is that there is no provision for payment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The main objection of the President to the compensation provision, in my judgment, is that there is no way under which the Treasury may be reimbursed, or the money be paid to it or furnished to it. In this bill, of course, we do not provide a tax to raise the money in the first instance, but we do provide a way by which every dollar of this money will come back to the Treasury, and come back within a very little while. That is something that is provided in very few cases where appropriations are authorized. Every dollar of this money will come back.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield for a question.

Mr. POMERENE. This plan, as I understand it, gives to the soldier a twofold advantage. First, he has priority if he desires to work on a project; secondly, he is given priority if he desires to take up some of this land.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was just coming to that. Under this bill there are three substantial rights given to the soldier. First, his preference right to enter these lands, granted that he has that already. There is a second substantial right or preference given now for employment upon every project that is undertaken. Just a year or two ago we were urged to engage in public works in order to give the soldiers employment. We are going to need something of that kind during the next winter or the next year. This measure provides for that, and that is a most substantial proposition.

Another, and, to my mind, one of the most substantial provisions in this amendment which would aid the soldier, is the provision under which he will get these lands, if he desires them, at reasonable prices. Suppose a soldier goes out to buy land now. He will buy it at the price at which the owner holds it, taking into consideration all the conditions that surround it. He will have to pay a high price for it and on short time. But under this amendment, before any project is taken up, the owners of excess lands must agree with the Secretary of the Interior that their excess lands will be sold at certain prices. Those prices will be fair and reasonable. The chances are the land will be sold at much lower prices than those at which the land could be purchased by men who go in and purchase through private negotiations with the general prospects of reclamation. Long time will be given and a low rate of interest. This will be a most valuable right.

We had this system applied in the Yakima project in the State of Washington. The reclamation people said to the owners of private lands, "We will not go into this project until 95 per cent of you sign up and place in our hands the disposal of your excess lands."

The owners did not want to do it, and the owners did not do it for a long time. As long as they had hope that the Government would take up the project without requiring them to enter into that agreement they did not enter into it; but when they became convinced that the Government would not take up that project unless they did sign that agreement they signed it, and the settlers who went in there got those lands at a much lower price than they would have been able to get them for if the owners had been allowed to go on in their own way.

I want to call attention to some of the benefits which come from the reclamation of these lands in the few minutes I have left.

It will not only be a benefit to the soldier but it is a benefit to the whole country. Here is a map showing a little corner of the United States away up in the Northwest. There is a 30,000-acre tract of land. A few years ago that land would not produce anything. It was absolutely worthless as far as productivity was concerned—30,000 acres of land, at Wenatchee, Wash. There was no Wenatchee there at that time, except a river, with water flowing through it that was available for private capital if it should come in and reclaim the lands there. Private capital went in and reclaimed 30,000 acres of land. It took of the water of that stream and put it upon that sagebrush land. Orchards grew up. Beautiful homes were established. Cities, towns, and villages sprang up and thousands of happy people found prosperity there. Does any benefit come to the rest of the country? Listen:

In 1920, 8,244 carload lots of produce were shipped into that 30,000 acres of land. These lines, with the figures, show the carload lots coming in from the different States of the Union. Going away up into this northwest corner of the State, there came from Maine 1 carload, from Massachusetts 2 carloads, from Connecticut 1, from Wisconsin 82, from Michigan 82, largely automobiles; from Wyoming 531 carloads, coal, and so on. I have not the time to call them all off, but I would be glad if Senators would examine them. Over 1,500 carloads of the products of the farms and factories of other States were bought and consumed by this community.

There is a Government project in the State, the Yakima project. I expected to have a map of this kind with reference to that project, but it did not arrive. However, I have some figures. I have a telegram received this morning from the representative of the Northern Pacific Railroad, which road runs through that project, in which he said:

> Information as to number of carloads shipped by us into Yakima Valley for year 1919; total number cars shipped to Yakima Valley 16,022, of which 12,969, according to our records, originated in the State, leaving 3,053 shipped in from points outside.

Then I have a telegram from the Union Pacific, which road also goes through that project. It carried into that project 3,861 carloads. In other words, into that one project, a section of the country where a few years ago nothing but jack rabbits could exist on the land which was an absolute desert waste and wholly unproductive, the people who are now living there brought from the outside 20,000 carloads of produce, and that does not take into account the partial carloads or the parcel freight. I have the figures as to the values of the produce brought in, as follows:

Automobiles, tires, etc	$5,825,000
Hardware and building supplies	2,300,000
Canned goods, groceries, etc	4,150,000
Farm machinery	1,250,000
Ready-to-wear clothing	3,500,000
Shoes	2,000,000
Furniture and household goods	2,700,000
Cotton and woolen goods	2,200,000
Drugs and sundries	2,350,000
Millinery, notions, etc	1,950,000
Insurance premiums paid to eastern companies	6,200,000

Or a total of $34,425,000 of business coming in from the outside into that desert country.

I have here on the wall a chart which shows the cost of the projects, the population under them, the value of the crops raised during the last five years, the amount of money which the projects cost, the amount that is due, and the amount unpaid. The suggestion has been made that we will never get our money back.

The statistics show that the cost of construction has been $130,000,000. Of that, under laws passed by Congress, there has matured $15,000,000, and the amount unpaid is only $2,300,000. In other words, our people are paying back the cost money as it becomes due. In the Yakima project, which I mentioned a while ago, nearly $3,000,000 has been repaid to the reclamation fund by the people who settled upon the land. If we had not extended the time to 20 years those people doubtless would have paid a much larger sum than has been paid. Of course, they have taken advantage of the 20-year limitation. On the various projects the crop value for five years was $328,000,000, with an expenditure by the Government of $130,000,000, with the money coming back into the Treasury practically as fast as it becomes due.

Mr. President, independent of the soldier proposition, the proposition advanced here means, as the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] stated yesterday, a real construction measure that will increase production. Every dollar of the money that is expended will come back to the Treasury of the United States. It will be multiplied many times over in increased production, in increased resources for the payment of taxes for the benefit of the Government of the United States.

From the Yakima Valley, as from every other project throughout the country, where a few years ago there were but a few scattering shacks with a few settlers, there came at the call of the Government thousands and thousands of men to fight its battles and to save civilization. There came from its settlers vast millions of dollars to help defray the expenses of the Government. Millions and millions of dollars' worth of Liberty bonds were taken by those people. If those lands had not been reclaimed there would not have been a single soldier to answer the call of the Government in its hour of need. There would not have been a single Liberty bond bought. There would not have been a single dollar of income tax coming to the Government. Mr. President, from every standpoint, from the standpoint of the soldier, from the standpoint of the welfare of the country, the amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat will he enlighten me on one point?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Gladly, if I can do so.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Has the Senator at hand the figures showing the amount of money which the Government has furnished to the reclamation projects and the amount that has been repaid?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; the figures are given on the chart to which I have referred. The construction cost was $130,000,000, which has been advanced since the reclamation acts were passed. Of that, $15,000,000 has matured. The first payments were made under the 10-year plan, and then Congress enacted a law extending the time of payment to 20 years. There has been a maturity of $15,000,000, and it has all been paid except $2,300,000, and the chances are that by now a good part of that $2,300,000 has been paid.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Is it the Senator's opinion that all the moneys will be repaid?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is no question in the world about it. Every dollar of it will come back to the Treasury.

Mr. President, if this amendment should not be adopted or fails to become a law, I trust the Senator from Oregon will move to take up his bill and pass it at the first opportunity.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending amendment, which is intended to obtain the same result as was the amendment which was offered a while ago by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], that of including in the pending amendment cut-over or logged-off stump lands. The object is sought to be obtained by a somewhat different wording than the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the proposed amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 5, strike out the word "or" where it occurs between the words "drainage" and "dikage" and insert in the same line between the words "dikage" and "with" the words "or clearing of stumps, rocks, brush, or undergrowth."

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I hope this amendment may be adopted. There are in the great Northwest, also in the South and other sections, millions of acres of as fine land as lies out of doors, stump lands, which have been cut over, logged off; fertile lands, capable of supporting thousand of people and adding immensely to our food production. I think they should be included in this bill, along with arid and swamp lands. I will state that if this amendment to the amendment be adopted, I shall follow it with another amendment to another part of the bill which would perfect the whole bill to suit the enlarged idea of including cut-over and logged-off lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MYERS. As the amendment to the amendment, just offered by me, was not adopted, I shall not offer the other amendment along the same line which I had intended to offer, as it would now be useless; but I now offer as an amendment to the pending amendment, to go at the end of the pending amendment, to be added to and become a part of it, the language which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon insert:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $9,819 to Katherine Macdonald, of Butte, Mont., for losses sustained by her through the building of the Corbett Tunnel, a Government project, and through which losses the Government was benefited.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the money sought to be appropriated by the amendment just read is due to the party named in the proffered amendment, on account of the defalcation of the contractor upon a Government reclamation project. It grows out of and is connected with a reclamation project instituted and carried on by the United States in the State of Wyoming, wherein the contractor failed to meet his just obligations. The money is fairly, justly, and honestly due the woman named, Mrs. Katherine Macdonald. In the form of a bill it has many times passed the Senate but it has never passed the House. There has never been any opportunity to get it before the House; at least no Representative who was interested in it has ever been able to have it brought squarely before the House and have it passed upon by a vote of the House. Owing to the habitually congested condition of the calendar in the House and slow action of the House committees it has never been brought to a vote. Therefore, it has never been rejected by the House, but it has many, many times been passed unanimously by the Senate. I seek this method, if it may be possible, of getting it before the House. It seems to be the only possible method. Nearly all of you, Senators, know all about this matter. I know the most of you are thoroughly familiar with it. Time and again it has been favorably reported, in the form of a bill, identical with this amendment, by committees of the Senate and indorsed as just. Time and again it has unanimously passed the Senate in the exact wording in which it is now offered as an amendment. You have nearly all voted for it as a bill. This bill, a bonus bill, is an appropriate bill to which to offer this amendment. I appeal to you to vote for it again and let us do this good woman justice. Let us adopt this amendment, and in this way get this matter before the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. Not knowing how he would vote on this proposition, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (after having voted in the negative). I understand the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has not voted. He is necessarily absent. I am paired with him for the day, but I find I can transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER], which I do, and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CALDER. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 7, nays 62, as follows:

YEAS—7.

Ashurst	Cummins	Heflin	Reed, Mo.
Bursum	Dial	Myers

NAYS—62.

Ball	Hale	New	Smith
Borah	Hitchcock	Newberry	Smoot
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Stanfield
Broussard	Kellogg	Oddie	Sterling
Cameron	Kendrick	Overman	Sutherland
Capper	Keyes	Pepper	Townsend
Colt	King	Phipps	Trammell
Curtis	La Follette	Pittman	Underwood
Dillingham	Lenroot	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	Lodge	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	McCormick	Rawson	Warren
France	McCumber	Reed, Pa.	Watson, Ind.
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Robinson	Williams
Gerry	McLean	Sheppard	Willis
Glass	McNary	Shortridge
Gooding	Nelson	Simmons

NOT VOTING—27.

Calder	Harreld	Moses	Spencer
Caraway	Harris	Norbeck	Stanley
Culberson	Harrison	Norris	Swanson
du Pont	Johnson	Owen	Wadsworth
Elkins	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Watson, Ga.
Ernst	Ladd	Poindexter	Weller
Fernald	McKinley	Shields

So Mr. MYERS's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to give notice that I shall offer my amendment in the Senate when the bill reaches that stage.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I offer an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3 of the printed amendment, line 6, after the word "Government," it is proposed to insert the following:

The provisions of this act shall also apply to any irrigation or drainage district which may desire its existing works to be completed or extended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I think it is probably the intention of the author of the amendment that any existing drainage projects or irrigation projects should come within the provisions of the pending bill; but it is to make that "double sure" that I have offered the amendment to the amendment, for I doubt, as the language of the amendment now stands, that it would include existing projects. I have, therefore, proposed the amendment which specifically states that existing projects shall come within the purview of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. ASHURST. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to propose another amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, line 15, of the printed amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], after the word "agreements," it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That in his discretion the Secretary in the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands may require not exceeding 55 per cent of the excess lands within the project to be subjected to disposal by authority of the Secretary to settlers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, the amendment which I have just offered to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon is similar to an amendment which I previously offered, except that it provides that the percentage of land which is to be turned over to the Secretary of the Interior under agreement for sale shall be at least 55 per cent of the total acreage within the district instead of 50 per cent, as proposed in my previous amendment, which, by a small vote on both sides of the Chamber, was declared to have been voted down. I am very seriously interested in the reclamation of waste lands and in the idea and policy embodied in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon, but I think if the benefits of the proposed measure are to be extended to the drainage projects of the country as well as to the arid land projects of the West that the measure should be so formulated that the drainage projects will come within its provisions or that they will have, I may say, as easy an opportunity of being included within its provisions as the arid land projects.

Senators representing the States where there are large areas of overflowed lands, of course, are very much pleased that in the amendment the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands by drainage is recognized; but, Mr. President, if there are undue restrictions prescribed before swamp and overflowed lands may be included so as to enjoy the benefits provided by the measure, then what will it avail many of the districts where it is desired to reclaim swamp and overflowed lands? My contention is that the swamp and overflowed land reclamation project presents a different problem from that which is involved in arid land reclamation. The arid land proposition is one of irrigation while reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands is that of drainage. If there is a given territory of, say, 250,000 or 300,000 acres, which is submerged by a watershed we know that it is impracticable to go there and try to reclaim a part of that land; yet that 250,000 acres may constitute a great deal more than is desired merely for the small-home owners or farmers; but under the provisions of the pending amendment it will be necessary for 80 per cent of all the land in that territory to be surrendered to the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose, exclusively, of sale to settlers in small tracts. What would be the effect of such a provision?

The Secretary, upon investigating a project of that kind, even if the owners are willing to subject 80 per cent of the area to sale, may say, "This scheme is impracticable; we have a drainage project here involving the reclaiming of 250,000 acres of land, but so far as settlers are concerned, on a basis of 40 acres or 80 acres or 100 acres to the home, in that locality in the State in question we will not need, at the most, over 50,000 or 100,000 acres. We do not have any hope that it will be settled within 10 or 15 or 20 years in a larger area than that." The result will be that the project will be brushed aside as not being feasible or practicable and that area will not be reclaimed. On the other hand, if we adopt the amendment I propose, then if the Secretary regards the project as furnishing good security and considers that the bonds will be amply protected, that the land has value and possibilities for agricultural purposes, and that it will be utilized not only by small home owners but it will be utilized in large tracts for farming on a larger and more extensive scale, he then will say, "This is a good project; we can adopt this project; we will give our soldiers the opportunity of settling upon lands of this character in that locality; the Government will be amply secured and the larger tracts of land will be utilized for farming carried on upon a more extensive scale." So I have proposed an amendment which is in the nature of a proviso that if the Secretary, in his discretion, does not see proper to require that 80 per cent of the land be turned over to him for sale to settlers in small tracts, he may reduce that to not less than 55 per cent; in other words, that he may exercise his discretion to the extent of requiring that not exceeding 55 per cent of the lands shall be subject to settlement in small tracts. The amendment of the Senator from Oregon makes the requirement 80 per cent, but in exceptional cases he would have the discretion and privilege of reducing the percentage.

I think a provision of that kind is necessary for the aid of those sections where there are large areas of swamp and overflowed lands under an ownership which is considerably diversified. However good may be the intention of the author, and however beneficial may be the relief afforded for the arid-land section, his amendment will not in its operation, restricted as it is, prove of any great benefit in the matter of providing aid for reclaiming lands in the swamp and overflowed sections. That is the only kind of lands we have in my State and in the Southern States generally needing reclamation.

We are great believers in reclamation in the South. In Florida we have the largest drainage project in the United States, embracing 4,000,000 acres of land within one district, and, in addition, there are other smaller districts ranging in area from 50,000 to 200,000 or 250,000 acres.

Seven and a half million dollars have been expended upon this one project up to the present time. The land has proven productive and fertile, and where it has been reclaimed the farmers are prosperous, and are progressing wonderfully well in building up their homes upon that land; but when you come down to the question of having 80 per cent of all of a section of that magnitude subjected to settlement upon small tracts of land, you can realize the impracticability of it.

I hope that the Senate will agree to my amendment, and allow the Secretary, in his discretion, to reduce the proportion from 80 per cent to not less than 55 per cent, if he deems it proper to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. ASHURST. On that I demand the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, it is only for a few minutes that I shall tax the patience of the Senate by expressing my reasons for being in opposition to this form of what is called a soldiers' bonus.

Senators will remember that from the very first, and upon every occasion, I have advocated with all the earnestness of my nature the giving to the returned soldier, and the soldier who was ready to go, a bonus somewhat in keeping with the extraordinary nature of his services, somewhat in keeping with his patriotism, his sacrifices, his losses. On several occasions I have stood for the principle of a bonus that would relieve the soldier—what soldier? The soldier who is in distress; the soldier who is in need of immediate relief; the soldier who goes in want of the necessaries of life; the soldier whose family may live within a week of starvation.

That is the class of men that I have had in mind, particularly in speaking of a soldier bonus—the needy, the man whom the Government took from the streets, the highways, and the byways, and sent 3,000 miles from home to fight battles in a foreign land—a bonus for that man, to reinstate him in civil life, as far as possible, as well as he was situated before he left home.

Mr. President, in considering the several bills now pending before the Senate I can see no immediate relief to any soldier whomsoever, North or South, East or West, white or black, city or country.

One of these bills proposes that the Government shall virtually issue a promissory note upon which the holder can go to a bank strong enough to lend for three years at 4½ per cent interest, compounded annually, the payments by the Government to begin on January 1, 1926. I can see there a picnic for the strong banks, but I do not see much of hope for the soldier who needs immediate relief.

Another one of these bills proposes a sales tax on every article that can be mentioned, the tax to be repeated every time the article is sold. For no such bill could I vote.

The others propose reclamation schemes reaching over years and years. I can see the glories of the West becoming brilliant and ever more brilliant under the hundreds of millions of dollars poured into irrigation dams, holding back the waters of the great rivers in the reservoirs and pouring out on the parched fields through irrigation ditches the living waters that shall make the desert blossom as the rose; but if the soldier is to-day in want, if his family is in need, can he wait until the irrigation scheme shall have been agreed on, the dam built, the irrigation ditches laid out, and then the door of hope is opened and the soldier told to come from the South or the East or the North or the Middle West and enter into the farm which Uncle Sam has opened up to him after five years of devotion to the task? During those five years what will the needy soldier do for something to eat? What will he do for something to wear? What will he do for something in which to live and in which to shelter his family?

Swamp and overflowed lands in the South—where are they? How long would it take to make a farm out of the overflowed lands of Louisiana, lower Alabama, and Georgia? Five or 10 years, at least, according even to the estimate of my good friend the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the Senator such information as will enable him to answer me what proportion of the overflowed lands of Mississippi and Louisiana and Alabama and Florida are public lands, and what proportion are in private ownership?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I frankly admit to the Senator from Mississippi that I do not possess that information. I am unable to tell him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not expect the Senator to possess it in the accurate sense, but I am informed that the great majority of those lands are in private ownership. This bill would require the private owners to give up 80 per cent of their lands in order to have them drained.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to say that if there are any Government-owned wet lands in Louisiana, I do not know it. I think all of the wet lands of my State are in private ownership, as the Senator suggests. I do not think any of them still belong to the Government. They are either in private ownership or owned by the State of Louisiana.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There are a few acres in the State of Mississippi that are still upon the public domain; I do not know how many, but very few indeed. Just to take one instance—is the Senator speaking under a limit of time?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Yes; but that is all right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I will not ask him to yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. That is all right. I am glad to have the Senator make his statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a plantation of 1,750 acres, 1,400 of it in cultivation in cotton and corn, undrained; then I have 300 acres of annually overflowed land. It is in cypress timber and in red gum and in various other timbers, and I need every acre of it for wood for the plantation. A drainage district comes along and is formed, and I am forced into it by a vote of the majority of the people around me. I do not want the land drained. I do not care whether it is ever drained or not; and this bill will require me to give to the Federal Government 80 per cent of the woods that I need for my niggers to burn in their cabins in the wintertime, simply because a drainage district has included me within its boundaries. It is perfectly absurd.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, the Senator from Mississippi is evidently unapprised of the provisions of this amendment. He is not obliged to give up anything unless he desires to. It is perfectly voluntary.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, this bill proceeds upon the idea that every soldier who was enlisted for the war, who either went abroad or stayed at home, has suddenly become a would-be farmer; that every one of the men who wore the uniform has been bitten by the same tsetse fly and is filled with fervor to farm. He wants to leave the store and go out there as owner and become a farmer. He wants to leave the Boston pharmacy and go down to the Okefenokee Swamp in Georgia and fight alligators and moccasins there for four or five years. Every soldier has lost his inclination to become a lawyer or a doctor or a storekeeper or a preacher, and he wants to be a farmer, and is willing to wait anywhere from 5 to 10 years for Uncle Sam to fit him up a farm.

Mr. President, if he is that well off, he does not need any bonus. This bill ignores the lure of location. It would pull the man of the highlands to the swamps. It would pull the man who loves New England into the West. It would pull the man who loves the Middle West, perhaps, into the South. My own State, with her beautiful mountains, sent into the Union Army during the Civil War some of the best soldiers who served with Sherman and Thomas and Grant and some of the best that served with Lee and Johnston and Forrest. You go to one of those mountaineers who enlisted in the World War, did his full duty, and came home to meet the reward of an appreciative people, and tell him that he must leave old north Georgia, whose mountains reach up amid the stars, and whose streams are as purest crystal, and whose beauties are to him what the grandeurs of nature were to the bards of Scotland, and he must go away from those glories of the mountains and valleys of north Georgia and make a living in the Okefenokee Swamp.

Why, Mr. President, I can not see any soldiers' bonus in any of these bills; but I can see the shadow of the land speculator over them all, and in every one of the waters stirred up by these bills it seems to me I can see sticking up the dorsal fins of the land shark.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to state that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] consists of several parts; and, if there be no objection, the part of the amendment or amendments which proposes a substitute for Title VIII will be first voted upon.

Mr. McNARY. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understood the Senator from Oregon to present his amendment as one proposition to be voted on. Having presented his amendment as one proposition and no Senator having demanded a division, we can vote upon the amendment as a whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senate orders that these various amendments——

Mr. ROBINSON. It is not necessary to make an order. That is the point I am making. The Senator from Oregon proposed his amendment as one proposition, and unless some Senator exercises his privilege under the rule and demands a division of the question we should vote on it as a whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at the time the amendment was offered, but the Chair does not understand it as stated by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McNARY. In order to clear up the parliamentary situation, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be voted upon as a whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the question is upon agreeing to the amendment by a single vote. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROUSSARD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], who is away. I transfer my pair to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] and vote "yea."

Mr. KEYES (when his name was called). On this amendment I am paired with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. I understand that if present he would vote "yea." If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], who is absent. If present he would vote "yea," and if I were at liberty to vote I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAPPER. On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. If he were present he would vote "yea," and if I were permitted to vote I would vote "nay."

Mr. CALDER. On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following pairs:

The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY]; and

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that my colleague, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK]. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay," and if the Senator from South Dakota were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to announce that if the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] were present he would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], if present, would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD].

Mr. McKELLAR. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], if present, would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—43.

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Overman	Simmons
Borah	Jones, Wash.	Pepper	Smith
Broussard	Kendrick	Phipps	Smoot
Bursum	King	Pittman	Stanfield
Cameron	McNary	Pomerene	Sterling
Dial	Myers	Ransdell	Trammell
Edge	Nelson	Rawson	Underwood
Fletcher	New	Reed, Mo.	Wadsworth
France	Newberry	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mont.
Gooding	Nicholson	Shields	Warren
Heflin	Oddie	Shortridge

NAYS—26.

Ball	Gerry	McCumber	Townsend
Brandegee	Glass	McKellar	Walsh, Mass.
Colt	Hale	McLean	Watson, Ind.
Cummins	Kellogg	Robinson	Williams
Curtis	La Follette	Sheppard	Willis
Dillingham	Lenroot	Sutherland
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Swanson

NOT VOTING—27.

Calder	Fernald	Ladd	Page
Capper	Harreld	McCormick	Poindexter
Caraway	Harris	McKinley	Spencer
Culberson	Harrison	Moses	Stanley
du Pont	Johnson	Norbeck	Watson, Ga.
Elkins	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Weller
Ernst	Keyes	Owen

So Mr. MCNARY's amendment was agreed to, as follows:

On page 1, line 7, after the word "veteran," insert a comma and "except in Title VIII."

On page 6, line 19, after the semicolon, insert "or."

On page 6, line 21, after the semicolon, strike out down to and including line 23.

On page 8, line 7, strike out "or land settlement aid."

Strike out Title VIII and insert in lieu thereof the following:

TITLE VIII.—LAND RECLAMATION.

SEC. 801. That when used in this title—

(a) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

(b) The term "board" means the Federal Farm Loan Board.

(c) The term "district" means any district organized under the law of any State to provide for the agricultural reclamation of lands by irrigation, drainage, or dikage, with authority to issue bonds which shall be a general charge against all lands within the district, and to contract with the United States under this title as provided herein.

(d) The term "farm" means an area of land within a reclamation project sufficient in size, in the opinion of the Secretary, to support a family, but not exceeding 160 acres of reclaimed land.

(e) The term "excess lands" means all lands in a single holding in excess of one established farm.

(f) The term "veteran" means any individual, a member of the military or naval forces of the United States in the war with Germany, the War with Spain, or in the suppression of the insurrection in the Philippines, and honorably discharged therefrom or placed in the Regular Army or Naval Reserves.

SEC. 802. That the Secretary is authorized to investigate the feasibility of reclaiming the lands within any district in any State under contract with the district. One-half the cost of investigation shall be advanced by the district and one-half by the United States. Upon determining that reclamation is feasible, the Secretary is authorized, under contract with the district, to construct the necessary works for the reclamation of the lands involved and to operate and maintain the project so long as such operation and maintenance are necessary, in the opinion of the Secretary, to safeguard the interests of the Government. The total cost of construction and of operation and maintenance, which shall include a just portion of overhead expenses, shall be paid by the district to the United States.

SEC. 803. That before construction of a project is commenced the sizes of farms therein shall be established and agreements shall be made effectively, subjecting not less than 80 per cent of the excess lands within the project to disposal by authority of the Secretary to settlers at prices and terms fixed in advance in such agreements. Such prices and terms shall be determined with the view of placing a bona fide and competent settler upon each farm of the project with the least possible delay.

SEC. 804. That when, in the opinion of the Secretary, a project has been fully completed and successfully operated for one season the Secretary shall fix the construction cost thereof, which shall include the total cost of investigation, the expense of selling district bonds under section 805, interest at not exceeding 5 per cent per annum upon all sums advanced by the United States in the construction thereof, and the cost of operating and maintaining the project to the date of fixing such cost. This total cost the district shall agree to pay to the United States within a period not exceeding 40 years, with interest thereon at not exceeding 5 per cent per annum: Provided, That upon receipt by the United States from the proceeds of district bonds, as provided in section 805, of such total cost with interest, the obligation of the district to the United States for construction shall be satisfied: Provided further, That upon the receipt of such total cost the moneys advanced by the district for investigation of the project shall be returned to the district. So long as the Government operates and maintains a project the district shall also pay to the United States annually, upon terms to be fixed by the Secretary, the total cost of operation and maintenance.

SEC. 805. That preceding any expenditure by the United States on account of construction of a project bonds of the district equal in face value to the amount of the proposed expenditure shall be duly issued and delivered to the United States. If at any time it should appear to the Secretary that the original bond issue is insufficient to cover the cost of the proposed work, he may either curtail the work or require the district to issue additional bonds, and when the total cost of the completed project has been determined under section 804, all bonds issued in excess of such cost shall be canceled. The bonds shall be in form approved by the Secretary and shall run for a period not exceeding 40 years, bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary not exceeding 5 per cent, payable annually, and be issued in denominations of $25, $50, $100, $500, and $1,000. These bonds shall be deposited with the board, and when the project cost is known and the value of all of the property of the district subject to assessment for the payment of the bonds shall reach twice the par value of the bonds as found by the said board, the board shall offer the bonds at public or private sale at not less than par under terms and conditions to be provided by rules and regulations to be made by said board. The moneys received from the sale of the bonds shall be credited upon the district contract. Prior to sale of the bonds the board shall collect all moneys due thereon, and the same shall likewise be credited upon the district contract.

SEC. 806. That unentered and unpatented arid and semiarid lands of the United States susceptible of reclamation may be included in a district and may be subjected to the provisions of the act of August 11, 1916 (39 Stat. p. 506), in accordance with the terms of said act: Provided, That the final proviso of section 1 of the act shall not apply: Provided further, That while the unentered public lands within a district constitute more than 50 per cent in area of the lands therein, the Secretary shall have the right to appoint upon the district board such number of persons to represent the interests of the United States as shall constitute a majority of the board. Unentered public land withdrawn under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. p. 388), and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, may, in the discretion of the Secretary, be included in a district. All unentered public land so included in a district shall be opened under the provisions of the homestead law and also, so far as applicable, of said act of June 17, 1902, as amended and supplemented.

SEC. 807. That the United States may acquire lands hereunder for construction, but not for agricultural purposes: Provided, That the Secretary is authorized to accept, by gift, deed in trust, or otherwise, land within any district and dispose of the same upon terms and conditions to be agreed upon with the grantor or later fixed by the Secretary.

SEC. 808. That in the construction of every project under this act the Secretary shall, so far as practicable, utilize the services of veterans. In every opening or sale of land by authority of the Secretary under this title veterans shall have the exclusive right, for a period of 60 days, to make entry or otherwise acquire the land: Provided, That in the event such an entry shall be relinquished at any time prior to actual residence upon the land by the entryman for not less than one year, lands so relinquished shall not be subject to entry for a period of 60 days after the filing and notation of the relinquishment in the local land office, and shall, after the expiration of such 60-day period, be subject to entry by the first qualified applicant.

SEC. 809. That the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. p. 388), and all amendatory or supplementary acts shall hereafter be known as the national irrigation law, and the fund provided for by said law shall hereafter be known as the national irrigation fund. This title and all acts amendatory or supplementary to such title shall be known as the national reclamation law, and for the purpose of carrying out its provisions there is hereby established in the Treasury a fund to be known as the national reclamation fund. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $350,000,000, to be transferred from time to time to the national reclamation fund and appropriated upon estimates made by the Secretary for carrying out the provisions of this title. All moneys received by the United States under this title shall be paid into the national reclamation fund, and all moneys at any time in said fund shall be available for appropriation for the purposes of this title.

SEC. 810. That the Secretary is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this title.

On page 42, line 9, after "VI," insert "or."

On page 42, line 9, strike out "or VIII."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I address myself to the bill generally. I shall take only a few minutes of the time of the Senate to discuss the bill which provides for adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War.

The country demands the immediate passage of this bill. The Senate, by a very large majority, is in favor of its immediate passage. The veterans themselves are satisfied with the bill and demand its passage. Were it not for the assertion frequently made that the President intends to veto it, there would be no occasion to spend even a moment's time in discussing it.

My only objection to the bill is that it is too meager in the provision it makes for our soldiers of the late war. It does, however, recognize the country's obligation to these men, and it does something toward meeting that obligation. For that reason I shall vote for it.

This bill merely applies a principle that we have recognized since our Government was established. That principle is that the financial disadvantage suffered by our soldiers as the result of military service in defense of their country shall be equalized in so far as reasonably possible by some monetary allowance made to the soldiers by the Government.

Even before constitutional government was established, during the French and Indian wars, it is familiar history that the Colonies rewarded with land grants the soldiers who gave their time and risked their lives fighting the common enemy for the protection of the frontier settlers.

George Washington received a grant of 3,000 acres of land from his native State of Virginia and shares in the Potomac Canal Co. valued at $10,000 for his military services. And later he received by an act of Congress $64,415 as adjusted compensation for his services during the Revolutionary War.

Lafayette, by a special act of Congress, received $200,000 and 200,000 acres of land over and above the pay otherwise due him on account of his services in aid of our struggle for independence.

Bounties to private soldiers who enlisted in the colonial armies during the Revolution were the rule. In 1779, at the request of Washington, $100 extra was allowed to every soldier who had enlisted early in the war, in order that his compensation might more nearly equal that of the men who came in later and who received larger bounties.

Every soldier who enlisted in the Mexican War for 12 months or more, in addition to his regular pay, was entitled under the law on honorable discharge to $100 in interest-bearing Treasury scrip or to 160 acres of land.

We are all familiar with the history of the large bounties paid to enlisted men during the Civil War, particularly during the latter period of the war.

Abraham Lincoln applied for and received compensation for his military service in the Black Hawk war.

Yet no one claims that those men dimmed the glory of their achievements by demanding and receiving compensation for their services.

The amount of adjusted compensation received by our soldiers in previous wars, when measured by its purchasing power at that time, far exceeded in value the amount of the compensation proposed in this bill.

Why is it, Mr. President, that it is now proposed in some quarters to reverse this time-honored precedent of our country? What is the objection to treating the soldiers of the late war at least as fairly as we have treated the soldiers of other wars? By every principle of justice the soldiers of the late war have a greater claim to compensation for their services than had the soldiers of any previous war.

Remember, sir, that in all other wars, except for a period near the close of the Civil War, our soldiers always determined for themselves whether they would go to war or not. It was a matter of individual choice and a matter for individual decision. The general draft was unknown in those days.

But in the late war all this was changed. The soldier was no longer permitted to decide for himself whether or not his first duty required his presence on the firing line. Some one else decided this for him. Whether he believed that decision was right, and whether it was right, in fact, made no difference. His Government commanded; he had no choice but to obey. Surely, sir, the principle of elementary justice and fair play which has led the Government to compensate the soldiers for the financial disadvantage they suffered in voluntarily engaging in military service applies with much greater force to the soldiers of the late war, who had no choice in the matter at all. In other wars men were allowed to consult their own judgment and the welfare of their families and to enlist for a definite period, thus reserving some power to protect their own interests and occupations in civil life.

In the late war the draft followed so closely upon the heels of the declaration of war that almost before the country realized that it had been plunged into war millions of our young men were suddenly withdrawn from civil life and thrust into the Army, with no opportunity to choose the character of their service and with no knowledge of even its probable duration.

But that is not all. In the late war, for the first time in our history, we raised an army and sent it across the sea to do its fighting in foreign lands thousands of miles from home. In no other war were our soldiers ever called upon to make such sacrifices or to divorce themselves so quickly and completely from friends and families and the occupations of civil life as in this war.

Surely, Mr. President, the principle of honesty and fair dealing which has led this Government throughout its history to make up to its soldiers something of the monetary loss they suffered as the result of their military service applies with greater force to the soldiers of the late war than to those of any other war in which this country has ever engaged. To deny to the soldiers of this war at least the measure of compensation that has been accorded to soldiers of our other wars would be a national disgrace and an insult to every man who wore his country's uniform in this foreign war.

Mr. President, why is it that everyone agrees that the soldier of the late war who is disabled by wounds shall be provided for at the national expense? It is simply this: That he, having been placed at an economic disadvantage in comparison with his fellows as the result of his military service, shall have financial compensation for that disadvantage. If his disability is only partial, his compensation is less; if it is total, then the compensation is greater. That is the accepted rule. The purpose simply is to relieve the former soldier in so far as possible from the handicap under which he labors as a result of his service to his country.

Now, sir, exactly that same principle applies in the case of a soldier who, while escaping physical injury, nevertheless suffered great financial loss and injury as the result of his military service. What difference does it make, so far as the principle is concerned, what difference does it make, excepting in degree, whether a man sustained physical injury in the service of his country or whether he lost one, two, or three of the most precious years of his life in military service? In both cases he suffered a handicap which sets him back financially for the balance of his days as the result of his service to his country. In both cases even a rudimentary sense of justice requires us to recognize the handicap under which the soldier has been placed and to compensate him for it in so far as possible.

Mr. President, what are the objections urged against this bill? No one has claimed that the soldiers of the late war did not equal in courage, heroism, and devotion the soldiers of any other war. No country ever received more devoted and heroic service from an army than this country received from its soldiers in the late war. Every voice that is raised against allowing the veterans of the late war even the scant compensation provided in this bill first pays a glowing tribute to the courage and heroism of the soldiers. It is even said that the debt which we owe these young men is too great to be paid in money; that it is an insult to offer them the pittance granted in this bill.

I agree that the compensation provided in the bill is not enough, but it does not follow, because we do not pay in full, that we should pay nothing on account.

I agree with those Senators who say that the wealth of the country would not be sufficient to fully compensate these boys for the service they rendered their country in the World War, but I do not accept their conclusion that therefore the boys should receive nothing at all.

This is not a question of patriotism or of sentiment. It is simply a cold, hard fact that we suddenly took more than 4,000,000 of our finest young men out of civil life at the very time they were entering upon their careers and sent 2,000,000 of them overseas in the military service of their country. We kept them out of civil life from one to two and even three years. We put them that much behind their competitors who stayed at home and profited during an era of high wages and great profits such as neither this nor any other country ever before experienced.

With the war over they came back to civil life, not to find their former positions waiting for them as they had been promised when they were sent away, but to find their positions filled by others. Then came deflation, depression, unemployment, and distress, even for those who had not been in the Army.

Is it any wonder that in this situation a million ex-service men were out of employment last winter? Even more will probably be without employment next winter if present conditions continue. Three hundred thousand are out of employment to-day, according to the records of the American Legion alone.

Now, all that is proposed by the bill is to give these men a chance. It is to lessen just a little the handicap they were placed under as the result of their military service. If we are grateful, let us show our gratitude in a practical way, not merely by words but by deeds.

But, Mr. President, I am aware that it is said that this country can not afford to do anything for the ex-soldiers now. They say it will cost three or four billion dollars to carry out the provisions of the bill. Why is it, sir, that three or four billion dollars look so large to some people when the money is going to the soliders of the late war and was an insignificant sum when it was being squandered for other purposes? We loaned something like $10,000,000,000 to the governments of Europe within the last few years, and anyone who dared to protest against it was denounced as a traitor to his country by the same interests and some of the same individuals who now say that three or four billion dollars paid during a period of years to the former soldiers would bankrupt the Nation.

Since the end of the war we have had plenty of money to pay gratuities to the railroads. We have compensated the war profiteers not only by allowing them to keep the larger portion of the unholy profits they made out of the war but by paying them for the profits they claimed they would have made if the war had continued longer, or at least a portion of them. As soon as the election is over the present administration proposes to pass a ship subsidy bill, and the administration which now pleads poverty in order to defeat compensation for the soldiers will be urging millions in bonuses to the shipping interests.

I have observed in the news dispatches that Secretary Weeks now has before him and is carefully considering a plan for subsidizing the munition plants of the country. After election I have no doubt that the proposition to subsidize the munition plants will be brought forward and pressed to passage by the same interests which are now opposing adjusted compensation for the soldiers.

No, Mr. President, it is not that we are unable to raise the money, spread over a term of years as it is, to pay our soldiers adjusted compensation; it is that the money is desired for other purposes and for other interests.

There need be no difficulty about raising the money required to furnish the adjusted compensation provided in the bill. It is the opinion of the chairman of the committee reporting the bill, as set forth in the report accompanying it, that during the next three years at least no additional taxation will be required to meet the payments called for by the bill. But I am not satisfied to let the matter rest there. It is my hope and shall be my endeavor when the bill becomes a law to see a plan of taxation provided which will raise all the money necessary to carry out the provisions of the bill. Restore and improve the excess-profits tax so recently repealed, and if that does not provide money enough, increase the tax on excessive incomes and raise the inheritance tax on vast fortunes, many of which were made out of the war, and we would have enough and more than enough money to give the soldiers their adjusted compensation without burdening the industry of the country with any additional taxes.

But even if the finances of the country were in the deplorable condition claimed by the opponents of the bill, why make the common soldier bear an undue share of the country's misfortune? The time to have counted the cost of the war was before it was declared. The time to have thought about the burden of taxes was when we were appropriating the people's money by the hundreds of millions of dollars to swell the incomes of war profiteers, and refused to impose an excess-profits tax one-half as great as that levied by Great Britain. It is a little late to plead lack of funds now when the only class comes forward that has a real claim to compensation and asks for a little payment on account.

Mr. President, there is no danger of the common soldier ever receiving more than is his due. I have been in public life over 30 years and I never voted against a pension or other relief measure for a private soldier, and I am proud of the fact that as a Member of the House of Representatives I voted to pass more than 300 pension bills over the veto of President Cleveland. If there are interests in this country to-day strong enough to bring about the veto of the present bill, I shall certainly do all within my power to pass the bill over that veto.

I wish to call attention in conclusion to just one other point. It seems to be assumed by the opponents of the measure that the compensation to be paid our soldiers is so much money lost; that it is like money loaned to foreign Governments which will never be repaid, or money spent for battleships which soon become obsolete, or money otherwise wasted or destroyed in the business of war. The very opposite of this is true. Every dollar to be expended under the bill goes to help some young, heroic ex-soldier get on his feet and to become a producing member of the community instead of being one of the army of unemployed. Every dollar of this money will be spent here at home for food and clothing and necessaries of life, for vocational training, for the improvement of the farms and the homes of the country. Why, sir, if it were a mere matter of dollars and cents, if it were a mere matter of increasing the wealth and prosperity of the country, there could not be a better investment made with an equal amount of money than to expend it as provided in this bill. To the majority of the ex-soldiers who have come home and been able to get some foothold in civil life again, precarious though it be, this bill will be an aid and support. To that other army of ex-soldiers who have not yet been able to find permanent occupations in civil life, the bill comes in the time of their greatest need to rescue them from unemployment and want and to assist them in getting back into the useful and productive occupations of civil life.

The bill simply recognizes the existence of an obligation to the ex-service men and provides for some slight payment upon that obligation. Not the former service men alone, but the whole country will benefit as the result of the passage of the bill.

The honor and the self-interest of the country both require that the bill be promptly enacted into law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to enter my protest against the latest utterance upon the floor, an utterance to the effect that the two or three years spent by our boys, who obeyed the call of their country to go to France or to Flanders or to go to camps here to prepare to go to either place, were years "sacrificed" and which "put them at an economic disadvantage" with other people. They were not years of sacrifice at all. They were years glorified, and more than that, they were years sanctified. There is no compensation except that which God Himself can give in enternity that measures up to the sanctification of that sacred calling. The speech of the Senator from Wisconsin seems to have been made more against the selective draft than in favor of the pending bill. That I can understand from his past position in American politics.

Mr. President, when a young boy, with warm blood in his veins, answers the call of his country, whether as a volunteer or as the subject of the draft, and goes out to fight for civilization against military autocracy, I scorn the suggestion that he has sacrificed the number of days, months, or years that he has devoted to that purpose. I wish that to weigh in, to weigh in deep, that the heart and the mind may catch it. It has placed him at an economic disadvantage with his fellows, some Senators tell me. All history proves that that is not true. After the Civil War the soldier who wore the blue and did his duty as he understood it was not placed at an economic disadvantage with regard to his follows unless he was wounded or disabled; and when wounded or disabled he was taken care of, as we are now better than any Nation on the globe taking care of those who were wounded or disabled, and of the widows and the dependents of those who died upon the field of honor. That is not the question, although very frequently gentlemen find it to their interest to confuse it with the question. The man who would hesitate for one moment in going to the limit in caring for the disabled soldier or the soldier who had become diseased in consequence of service or the widow or the dependents of the dead man who might otherwise become dependent upon public charity because he made himself by his love of country economically disqualified would not be fit for a seat in this body or in the other body or even for American citizenship; and, so far as I know, there is no one, however mean and selfish and contemptible, who to-day in America dares place himself in the class of opposition to that sort of legislation. That is not this question.

I heard a Senator here the other day say that this was not a bonus. What is it then? What greater right has the man who, being in the class required for active service for military defense, goes forth in response to the call of his country to perform his duty, to demand a bonus for having obeyed the law and having performed his duty than the man who paid his war taxes during the same time, war taxes which sometimes were so onerous that he could hardly stand them?

I am talking about the young men who came back sound and hale and hardy and healthy, with what amounted to a university education added to their life growth, with improved physique and improved intellectuality. I was not one of them, and I doubt if I would have been worthy to have been one of them if I had been of their age; but I know them; I know the blood and the breed whence they come; and I have not been able to get my consent to the statement that a majority of them even are attempting to take advantage of this sort of legislation. But whether they are or not—

> But och, mankind are unco weak,
> And little to be trusted.

And the majority of men, perhaps, with an opportunity to take a few dollars out of the United States Treasury very naturally and very thoughtlessly say, "Yes, give it to me; I need it. If I do not need it for board or for clothes or for food, I need it for cigarettes; I need it for something, and just hand it over." So there may be a majority who, in this thoughtless way, are in favor of this legislation; but I doubt it.

Mr. President, men generally are braver than other men think they are; and that is not all. A man himself is as a rule braver than he thinks. It takes the test to satisfy even himself that he has the courage to do his duty under fire, and not only under military fire but under political fire or any other sort of fire that is directed at him.

The Senator from Wisconsin says that he agrees that "the compensation offered is too little." Well, as compensation, of course it is. There is not a number of dollars in the world that can compensate me for offering my heart's blood, my life, and yet there are other things besides dollars that can compensate me and do compensate me all the time—honor among my contemporaries, reverence by posterity.

However, if a majority of these boys—somewhere between 2,000,000 and 4,000,000 of them—want this bill, the Senator need not disturb himself about their not getting "all that is coming to them." They will be back again in about two or three or five years for just about this amount once more; and then they will be back in five years after that for more.

The same class of politicians who dare not risk their office-holding or their office seeking to protect the country against the greed of men—granting that a majority of these boys want this now, mind you—will also be here, and they will not then present any front against such a raid upon the Treasury. The places which they hold are too precious; the places which they hope for are even more precious, and when the "boys" present themselves the next time for another three billion or five billion dollars the same people here in Washington will give it to them. We have been through all that long years ago; we know something about it. The Senator from Wisconsin just boasted of his part in acceding to that sort of raid upon the Treasury; and many other people boast of it, too.

Mr. President, I did not rise to argue this question; I rose in order to voice my protest against the assertion that my two boys and my two nephews and the other boys who served in the Army of their country "sacrificed" from two to three years of their lives. I rose merely to say that they did not sacrifice those years; they glorified them; they sanctified them in the eyes of God and of men and of good women. I rose merely to protest against the general idea that a man's honor may either be bought with money or when devoted to his country's cause may be compensated with money. The sublimest inscription that can be written upon the tomb of any man is that "he died upon the field of honor."

We compensate the soldier's widow and his dependents because the glory was not theirs; the sanctification was not theirs; it was his, while the loss was theirs, and they can be compensated for that loss, and they ought to be. But, Mr. President, who would measure in dollars my love for my wife or her love for me? Who would measure in dollars the sweet love of a father for a daughter, living or dead? Who would measure in dollars, or attempt to measure in dollars, the dear love of a man for his native land? I do not pretend to go quite so far in that direction as some people; I frankly confess that my country is dearer to me than my State, and my State is dearer to me than the Union; but, whatever a man may measure his native land to be the man who is not willing to die for that native land according to his measurement of it, is not fit to live, and the man who wants to be paid for his services in dollars and cents is mistaken in the value which he gives to his own services and the sacredness of the affection which he has professed for his country.

We are told that George Washington and various gentlemen in the early days received gifts of land and various other things for having served their country, and that Lafayette also received compensation; but, Mr. President, they received it many years after the struggle, when they were growing old and when they were not well able to take care of themselves.

I have forgotten the number of years which passed by after the Mexican War before there was a general service pension law for Mexican War veterans; but I know that the Mexican War took place in 1846 and that the first service pension act for Mexican War veterans was passed after I became a Member of Congress in 1893, which was a considerable length of time afterwards—a generation, or perhaps more. I know that the first pension act for Revolutionary soldiers was after pretty nearly a generation had passed and the men who were entitled to it had become old and those of them who were entitled to pensions had become almost helpless. I know that even in the case of the Civil War—and pensions were asked sooner after that war than any other—some 9 or 10 years elapsed after the war before a general pension bill was passed, and much longer than that before a general service pension bill was passed. My recollection is that the first general service pension bill applicable to the Civil War veterans was passed in the nineties.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the first general service pension bill applying to the veterans of the Civil War was passed, as my recollection is, in May, 1911.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, it was still later than I thought. The pending measure is not only a general service pension bill, but it is a general bonus bill. We have already given the soldiers of the World War one bonus. I voted for it because I thought it was necessary to enable them to take care of themselves until they could get home. We gave them $60, or two months' extra pay, because we realized that the service men needed more than merely rations and uniforms in order to get home and to live until they could get something to do, until they could find occupations.

Now, as to the "economic disqualification": My experience in the South was that the old Confederate soldier asked no odds of any man. If he came back alive and healthy he not only asked no odds of any man, but his fellow-citizens said to him: "You need not"; and when it came to electing Congressmen and Senators, governors, legislators, sheriffs, and clerks, the Southern people filled one House full of them here so that they called it the "House of Confederate brigadiers and colonels." So far from being an economic disqualification, it was an economic advantage to have served with honor their country, and it is now to have the good war record behind you, and to be able to display it to your fellow-citizens. Not only was that true of the Confederate veterans, but it was true of the veterans who wore the blue. One or two of them are here yet; and in the times past when they were in the heyday of their health and strength, at one time a majority of this body, nearly two-thirds of it, was composed of ex-Confederate and ex-Federal veterans, most of whom owed their places here to the fact, and to the fact alone in some cases, that they had worn their uniform creditably and bravely and honorably.

It is not "an economic disadvantage." I know not how it was all over the country, but in the South for a long while the man superior in intellectual qualifications, superior in education, superior in equipment, could not beat an old Confederate veteran for an office, and up North you could not beat an old Federal veteran for it, either; and that was not only true in politics, but it was true in business. Business men, when they came to get clerks and other people to attend to their affairs, other things being anywhere nearly equal, employed a veteran because he appealed to the public sentiment of their customers.

It is not true that those of my blood who passed through the Argonne and through the fights connected with it—those long eight days of constant marching and constant fighting and constant danger—sacrificed that time. Sacrificed it, lost it, a thing gone out of their lives without any compensation to them or their father or their mother or their sisters. What an absurdity! I thank God that they did not die while they were doing it; but if they had died I would not have worn mourning, and when they do die some time, if I am living, there shall be put upon the grave: "He served in the Argonne; he was at St. Mihiel; or he obeyed the call of his country in the German-American War," just as there is now upon the tombstone of my father the words: "Died upon the field of honor on April 6, 1862."

"Sacrifice?" Oh, the thought is debasing! My only hope for each of you is that the opportunity may present itself some time, when you come to die—and all of you must come to die—to die in a cause that may add glory to death. Pneumonia will not do it. Tuberculosis will not do it. Fatigue from listening to Senators' speeches will not do it. I only pray that there may be an opportunity for you, when you die, to die in some cause so worthy that it may glorify your death and sanctify it, just as these boys' lives were glorified and sanctified by their services, and just as the death of their comrades, left behind them on Flanders' fields, was glorified and sanctified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Mississippi has expired. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I understood there was a substitute pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a substitute for the whole bill pending.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the amendment that is pending now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is striking out Title VIII. The committee had a substitute for Title VIII as printed in the House bill, and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] had a substitute for it; and the question now is upon agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM].

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the substitute would substitute the whole bill of the committee, as perfected, I desire to modify the substitute which I offered by including the reclamation feature in my substitute, and to take the place of Title VII.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from New Mexico. The Senator from New Mexico modifies his amendment——

Mr. BURSUM. My substitute.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the very point I am trying to ascertain—whether or not the Senator has offered a complete substitute for the bill.

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; a complete substitute.

Mr. ROBINSON. And in the Senator's original substitute he has incorporated the McNary amendment?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; in the original substitute. I am incorporating it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the substitute, as originally offered, did not include the amendment known as the McNary substitute.

Mr. BURSUM. That is true.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico now modifies his substitute by inserting as Title VII the McNary amendment in lieu of the matter originally contained in his substitute.

Mr. ROBINSON. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico has already been read, with the exception, of course, of the modification made to meet the action of the Senate in incorporating the McNary amendment.

Mr. BURSUM. Oh, yes; it has all been read, and has been considered by the Senate, so that outside of that amendment the substitute will be as it was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, proposed by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate, but I should like to have some sort of notion about what we are voting on. A substitute has been offered and debated at length for a day or two. Then an amendment is offered to the bill, not to the substitute, while apparently the substitute was pending—a parliamentary situation that I am unable to grasp—and this amendment to the original bill having been agreed to it is now proposed to tack it on to the substitute. I should like to have an explanation of it.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I think I can explain the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from New Mexico will allow the Chair to clear up the parliamentary situation, it can be done in a very few words.

The committee reported a bill with certain amendments. Those amendments were adopted. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] offered a substitute for the entire bill. It was then within the parliamentary right of any Senator to offer an amendment either to the original bill or to the proposed substitute. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] offered an amendment to the original bill, and any amendment can be made to that bill with the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico pending. The Senator from New Mexico now proposes to modify his amendment by striking out Title VII and inserting in its stead Title VIII as found in the so-called McNary amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I assume that before we vote on the substitute we ought to perfect the bill by voting upon the various amendments to the bill. I sent to the desk on yesterday afternoon an amendment and had it printed. I should like to offer that amendment to the bill before we vote upon the substitute of the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment may be offered at this time either to the proposition represented by the bill reported by the committee or to the proposition represented by the substitute offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that; but I prefer to offer it as an amendment to the bill, because I do not know that I would care to offer it as an amendment to the substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 42, after line 22, of the bill it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 905. There is hereby appropriated such amount as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of Titles IV and V of this act, to be paid out of and to be a first charge upon the interest received by the United States on obligations of foreign governments. If at any time the amount of such interest is not sufficient to meet the appropriation hereby made, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue certificates of indebtedness under section 5 of the second Liberty bond act, as amended, to be redeemed, so far as practicable, out of interest payments on such obligations of foreign governments, or with the consent and approval of the President, to sell, with or without the indorsement of the United States, such of the bonds of foreign governments then held by the United States as he may deem necessary and apply the proceeds as far as required to the payment of such deficiency.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, just a word.

I do not desire to discuss this amendment, because it was offered to the soldiers' compensation bill when that bill was offered as an amendment to the revenue bill. At that time it was, I think, somewhat elaborately discussed, and I think it is understood by Senators and by the country, and therefore really does not require any further extended discussion.

The purpose that I have in offering this amendment is to relieve the Treasury, especially during these times when it is in more or less financial straits and difficulty. This bill does not provide, it is true, for cash payments, except in cases where the amount of compensation due the soldier is, I believe, not more than $50. I understand that the Senator in charge of this bill, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], has made an estimate of the annual cash payments that will have to be made during the next four or five years. The sum, while not large as compared with the ultimate cost of this legislation, is nevertheless considerable. For the first two years it will run up to more than $100,000,000, I believe. Undoubtedly foreign governments will pay us before the first payment falls due interest far in excess of that payment.

It is understood generally that Great Britain will pay us some time during this year an installment of the interest upon its obligation, and that that installment alone will probably be sufficient to meet the first two cash payments, as estimated by the chairman of the Finance Committee that reported this bill.

I assert that this is not a proper time for increasing taxation. I do not mean to say that the cash payments provided in this bill necessarily would require any additional taxation, but I think that it possibly might be so, and this amendment would provide a way of meeting this draft upon the Treasury without further taxation.

Business men throughout the country have formed an unfavorable judgment with reference to this legislation, largely because they fear that the amount of cash which the Government will have to pay out will embarrass the Treasury and may call for additional taxation. I can conceive of no better way of making these payments, taking all the financial situation of the country and the Treasury into consideration, than the way proposed in the amendment which I have offered. It provides that the annual cash payments shall be made out of the interest received by this Government upon its foreign loans. It provides that if in any one year that interest is not sufficient to meet the payments, the Secretary of the Treasury may issue temporary certificates of indebtedness, to be redeemed out of the next interest payment. It provides, further, that if there should be an insufficient amount realized from the interest payments, and the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the President, should reach the conclusion that it was not advisable to issue certificates, he may, with the approval of the President, sell sufficient of the foreign bonds to meet the obligation.

But I have no idea that it would ever be necessary to issue certificates or sell the bonds, because the amount to be realized from Great Britain alone, if none of our other foreign debtors are able to meet their interest charge, would be more than sufficient to liquidate and discharge the annual payments provided in the bill as now drafted.

Of course, if the substitute is adopted, and we are to settle this compensation in cash, then there might be necessity, under certain conditions of default on the part of our foreign debtors, of issuing these certificates, or of selling some of these bonds. Therefore I have left that provision, which was in the original amendment offered by me to the revenue bill, in the amendment which I now offer.

Mr. President, I wish only to add that it is said the President of the United States has declared he will veto the bonus bill if the means for its payment are not provided in the act itself. This amendment provides those means and therefore meets the President's requirement. Again, apprehensions have been expressed by certain business interests of the country that should this bill become a law it would require additional taxation. If this amendment is adopted it would quiet their fears in this behalf. I have introduced this amendment because I think this a logical way of settling this war obligation and because I think it would to a large extent at least meet both the objection of the President and the apprehension of the business world.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I will detain the Senate only a moment. I very sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina may be adopted. It is substantially the same amendment I offered to the revenue bill last November when that bill was before this body. It is a use of this foreign indebtedness which I have been advocating in this body for several years.

It must be evident to the people of this country that the adjusted compensation bill will pass sooner or later. It is just a question of time, and the only real question about it is the way to finance its payment. Manifestly, the best way to finance it is out of the foreign indebtedness. We are taxing the people of the United States enough already. We have already appointed a commission to collect the foreign indebtedness to the extent of getting bonds and making arrangements for the collection of interest. Great Britain has already made a statement that she is going to begin paying her interest in November, and there is no reason in the world why we can not pay this adjusted compensation out of the interest payments to be made.

The amendment also effects another very important result. There is a propaganda going on in this country, as we all know, for the cancellation of this foreign indebtedness. If we by this bill turn over a portion of the indebtedness for the settlement of this adjusted compensation for the soldiers we will settle that matter for all time. In other words, it will at once be apparent to our debtors that we are not going to cancel the foreign indebtedness but that we are going to collect it and utilize it for our own purposes.

I think this is exceedingly important. I think it would greatly facilitate the collection of our indebtedness if we should turn over a portion of that to the soldiers, or at least by law to provide that this shall be a fund to pay the soldiers. This is the only real way to finance the adjusted compensation for our soldiers. Whenever we take this step the adjusted compensation will be financed this way. It is the only reasonable, the only logical, the only businesslike way to finance it.

It is the most feasible way to do it. It is the most sensible way to do it; we have not the money in the Treasury to pay it, but we do have this indebtedness. Under these circumstances manifestly we should use the indebtedness for this purpose.

We do not need to tax the American people more. We ought not to lay any further taxes on the American people. We ought to collect this indebtedness. We have done enough for our European allies already. They have collected every dollar we have owed them, we have paid it to them; yet we have collected nothing from any of them. Our Government ought to be a business Government. We ought not to be hard on our debtors. We ought not to press them too much, but there is no reason why we should not take their bonds, and require at least such of them as are able to pay the interest, and substantially all of them are able to pay.

It is said by some here that they are not able to pay the interest. Most of them have already paid their soldiers a bonus. England has paid her soldiers a bonus of something like $100 each. Canada has paid her soldiers a bonus of something like $400 or $500 each. Australia has paid her soldiers a bonus of something like $500 each. Even New Zealand has paid a large bonus to her soldiers. It is very remarkable, it seems to me, that while we loan those great sums to our foreign allies, and they pay their soldiers bonuses out of these loans or by reason of these loans, no one in the United States thinks there is anything wrong in these foreign countries paying their soldiers bonuses; but when it comes to paying our soldiers a readjusted compensation, objection is made to it, and made right here on the floor of the Senate, and many of these same gentlemen want us to cancel this entire indebtedness and give it to our allies. I would much prefer to give it, or at least a part of it, to our soldiers, rather than give it or even a part of it to our former allies. Altruism is a fine attribute of national character, but we should do justice at home first, and especially should we do justice to our soldiers.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I remind the Senator from Tennessee that private interests in Wall Street have collected from France and England $1,700,000,000 of private debts since the war ended.

Yes, and England and France are amply able to pay the interest on their debts to the United States, and I believe will pay it.

Mr. McKELLAR. But I am basing my argument purely upon the matter of justice to our soldier. The foreign countries have paid their soldiers a bonus, and the United States is the only real first-class nation that has not paid her soldiers a bonus.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the President has said that he would veto this bill unless some method for paying the bonus were provided. This amendment provides that method.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator for that suggestion. I want to say, further, that the President not only said that but he suggested last fall that the consideration of this bill be postponed until we might utilize the foreign indebtedness for this purpose. Since that time a commission has been appointed to make a settlement and to take bonds from the foreign countries, and to make arrangements for the collection of interest, and one of them, at least, Great Britain, a nation that boasts of standing by her obligations, as I believe she will, has already indicated her willingness to pay the amount of current interest, and when she pays it, it will be enough to finance the adjusted compensation provided in this bill.

Why should we not do this obvious thing? Why should we not take this course of utilizing this indebtedness? It is so plainly the thing to do that it seems to me that anyone can see it. At least $200,000,000 a year which will come from England alone, and according to the proponents of this bill, through the chairman of the Committee on Finance, there will be but one year when we will need over that sum to finance the payments. The first year we will need only $77,000,000; the second year, $92,000,000; the third year, $73,000,000; the fourth year, $370,000,000; fifth year, $148,000,000; sixth year, $137,000,000; the seventh year, $92,000,000; and thereafter decreasing very rapidly.

The interest due from Great Britain alone will be more than sufficient to pay it, and if the Senate agrees to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina that will answer the President's proposition, namely, that we must provide some method in the bill for financing it. This gives the method, and this gives that arrangement which the President himself suggested.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I will say that it ought also to quiet the fears of the business men of the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course. Mr. President, I can understand how the business men feel about it. They do not want to be taxed additionally, and they ought not to be taxed additionally. The tariff taxes about to be imposed are certainly going to be a great burden on business and all other men, and we ought not to tax them any further. If we just handle this according to business principles, we can pay the adjusted compensation out of the foreign debts without taxing the American people any more, and we will settle once for all the question of collecting our foreign indebtedness. The passage of this simple amendment will settle that question for all time. It is the duty of Congress to take bonds for all of that foreign indebtedness, and collect the interest, and whenever we show this spirit, whenever we take the position firmly and fixedly that it is the purpose of this Government to take bonds from those who were formerly our allies, the question of that foreign indebtedness will be settled, and all of the foreign nations will pay interest on the indebtedness as and when it falls due, and in the end pay us the principal.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, is it not true that when the United States Government sold the bonds and got the money to lend to foreign governments our Government pledged those bonds to the payment of the debt?

Mr. McKELLAR. Some such suggestion was made in one of the acts, but not in all of them. I have read them very carefully. I do not think they pledged the money at all. I think Congress has the right to use the bonds, or the money collected, just as it sees fit. It is not a pledge.

I sincerely hope that the very excellent amendment of the Senator from North Carolina will be adopted by the Senate and that this matter will thus be settled. For several years I have argued on this floor for the collection of this foreign indebtedness. I have offered amendment after amendment to various bills; have also offered various bills and resolutions looking to that end.

I have also urged that this foreign indebtedness be not canceled, but that bonds be taken for it and that the interest be collected and the proceeds applied to the payment of an adjusted compensation for our soldiers. I am delighted to see that so many Senators apparently are now in favor of this course. This provision will doubtless cause the President to feel more kindly inclined toward the bill and, I hope, prevent his veto of it. It will assure the taxpayers that they will not be additionally taxed for this purpose. It will put our foreign debtors on notice that we do not intend to cancel the indebtedness due us. It will settle this much-vexed question. It is good legislation; it is good business; it is good politics; it is good sense. It is the only clear way to solve this difficult problem.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the amendment will be unanimously adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am very sure that neither the Senator from North Carolina nor the Senator from Tennessee would desire to take any action which would invalidate this bill; yet it seems very clear to me that if the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina should be adopted it would render the bill unconstitutional. I think that the method for the raising of revenue to make the payments provided for in the amendment is the proper method. I wish that we did have the opportunity and the right to vote for such an amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator state what method is the proper one if that is not? I have overlooked it, I must admit.

Mr. LENROOT. I would not have said what I did if I did not intend to follow it up and point out the particular matter. It was entirely proper to offer the amendment to the revenue bill because that was a bill providing for the raising of revenue and originating in the House. This is an amendment which provides for the raising of revenue and is proposed as an amendment to a bill coming from the House which has nothing to do with the raising of revenue.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will let me say in reply to that statement that the revenue has already been raised from the American people and can be utilized. It is an asset of the Government, and it is an asset which the Congress can use as and when it sees fit. The revenue is already arranged. This is not a tax; it is the use of a fund which the Government owns.

Mr. LENROOT. The purpose of the amendment is to raise revenue to meet the payments which are provided for in the adjusted compensation bill. There are two methods provided in the amendment by which it shall be done, and one of them is the borrowing of money, the issuing of certificates of indebtedness. If that is not raising revenue, I do not know what language can be used that would raise revenue.

This question has been repeatedly before the Congress from the very beginning of the Government.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The amendment tendered by the Senator from North Carolina is in the nature of an appropriation bill, not a bill for the raising of revenue. It reads:

There is hereby appropriated such amount as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of Titles IV and V of this act, to be paid out of and to be a first charge upon the interest received by the United States on obligations of foreign governments.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, read further, if the Senator will.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well:

If at any time the amount of such interest is not sufficient to meet the appropriation, the Treasurer is authorized to issue certificates.

Mr. LENROOT. And that is raising revenue, is it not?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That part might be open to the objection the Senator makes.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the whole point I am making.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. In addition to what the Senator from Wisconsin has said, there are no funds in the Treasury now from the foreign obligations. Therefore the Government would have to resort to certificates.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; all the certificates of indebtedness given to us by our former allies are in the Treasury and subject to the use of the Government.

Mr. CURTIS. There is not a dollar in the Treasury paid by a foreign government that could be used for this purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the certificates of indebtedness are there.

Mr. CURTIS. There are no certificates of indebtedness there. They are obligations for the payment of a debt, but there is not even provision made for the payment of interest.

Mr. McKELLAR. However that may be, they are certificates of indebtedness.

Mr. SIMMONS. May I ask the Senator from Kansas, who is a member of the Finance Committee, when the first payment under the bill would fall due?

Mr. CURTIS. In October of this year.

Mr. SIMMONS. By that time, by the time the soldier is about to make out his claim, we would have the first installment from Great Britain.

Mr. CURTIS. We have no definite assurance.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think we have.

Mr. CURTIS. The bonds have not yet been agreed upon between the commissioners representing Great Britain and the United States.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is not necessary for them to be agreed upon for the purpose of paying the interest. The interest is due independently of the execution of the bonds.

Mr. CURTIS. For that matter, the interest has been due for two or three years. But the previous administration, as we understand, entered into an agreement that it would not be called upon for payment for two or three years. That is my recollection of the testimony.

Mr. REED of Missouri and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LENROOT. I can not yield much more or my time will all be gone.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is my recollection that the Senate authorized the issuance of the certificates of indebtedness by the Treasurer before the House had made any such authorization. The Secretary of the Treasury under the present law has authority to issue certificates of indebtedness for the purpose of securing money to defray the expenses of the Government. The authority is already invested in him and the amendment simply proposes that he shall exercise an authority which now exists.

Mr. LENROOT. It is true that the Secretary of the Treasury now has authority to issue certificates of indebtedness which would cover any appropriation that must be made during the next several years under the bill; but the Senator overlooks the fact that his amendment is an additional authorization to the Secretary of the Treasury over and beyond any authorization which now exists.

Mr. SIMMONS. There was nothing in the original bill conferring authority upon the Secretary of the Treasury that confined the issuance of the certificates to the payment of appropriations. We gave him blanket authority. At one time, I think, he had authority to issue certificates of indebtedness up to something like $11,000,000,000.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course that is true; but the Senator's amendment creates an additional authority in the Secretary of the Treasury to issue additional certificates of indebtedness under the provisions of section 5 of the second Liberty loan act. That clearly is raising revenue. Also, it seems almost equally clear that the provision for the sale of the foreign bonds is the raising of revenue.

As I said a moment ago, this question has been before the Congress a great many times from the very beginning of the Republic, but so far as I have been able to investigate the precedents—and I have them before me—while controversy has arisen over the right of the Senate to enlarge upon a House bill which did raise revenue, where the Senate enacted amendments touching an entirely different scheme of revenue, it has been conceded that the Senate under the Constitution could not make amendments to House bills which had nothing to do with the raising of revenues under the Constitution of the United States. I have before me one report made by the Finance Committee of the Senate, made by Matt Carpenter, and John Sherman was a member of the committee. I shall not take the time to read it except to say that it was conceded in the report that the Senate could not propose an amendment raising revenue to any bill coming from the House, but only to a bill raising revenue. It will be conceded that the bill coming to us from the House and which is now under consideration has no provision in it for the raising of revenue.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to take more than a moment of the Senator's time, for I know his time is limited. Suppose the bill proposed to appropriate out of moneys in the United States Treasury, whatever was necessary to pay the bonus, the Senator would not think a provision of that kind was unconstitutional?

Mr. LENROOT. That would be constitutional, of course.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Suppose we were to say that the money was to be paid out of any moneys now in the Federal Treasury or any moneys which might hereafter come into the Federal Treasury, would that be constitutional?

Mr. LENROOT. Very well.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Now, suppose we say that the bonus can be paid out of any moneys coming into the Federal Treasury from the foreign loans, why does not that fall exactly within the two illustrations which I have given?

Mr. LENROOT. It does, and I make no point upon that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Is not that what is stated here in the proposed amendment?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no; that is a part of it, and only a part of it. It provides for the issuance of certificates of indebtedness if the money coming in is not sufficient to meet the payments in the first place, and then authorizes the sale of the foreign bonds.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That point, of course, is the much more difficult one, but I thought the Senator was addressing himself to the other phase of the problem.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no. I concede our right to make an appropriation. I concede our right to provide that an appropriation shall come out of a specific fund, or that a fund coming into the Treasury shall be used for a specific purpose; but I contend that the Senate has no right to attach an amendment to this kind of a bill which provides for either the borrowing of money or the raising of any money in any other way.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator was present when I made my statement a little while ago, he will remember that I stated that in my judgment, if no other foreign government paid us any interest except Great Britain, and there were assurances that she would pay, that would be amply sufficient to meet the cash payment provided for in the bill. I stated that I had as a matter of precaution added the other provisions, but I did not think they would ever have to be exercised; that I had inserted them simply in case of a contingency which might require something of the sort. I am not particularly concerned about those two latter provisions with reference to the issuing of certificates and the sale of bonds. The other part of the amendment will accomplish all that I have in mind.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not think the Senator would agree that it did accomplish all that he has in mind, because I do not want to vote to limit the payment to the service men out of the interest only that may be received from foreign governments and, if not sufficient interest is received, that they shall receive no pay. Neither does the Senator wish that, I am sure.

Mr. SIMMONS. No I would not, but the present bill makes no provision for that. It does not interfere with the right to sell if they want to sell.

Mr. LENROOT. The pending bill makes no provision whatever for raising one single dollar, but I do say to the Senator that the Secretary of the Treasury now, under existing law, has authority to borrow under certificates of indebtedness, without any additional authority, all of the money that would be required for the next several years under the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then why is it necessary, if that is so, to put in this provision? Why is it illegal to put it in here if the Secretary already has authority to do it?

Mr. LENROOT. Because the amendment creates additional authority. That is the trouble, and the amendment, therefore, raises revenue.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator was entirely wrong when he said there would be no way of paying the soldiers if the two provisions to which he objects were stricken out of the amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Let me ask the Senator a question. If we enact a provision saying that the soldiers shall be paid out of the interest money paid by a foreign government, does he think that there could be any other money used for that purpose?

Mr. SIMMONS. There could be none other, if the interest did not go far enough, unless Congress legislated or unless the Secretary exercised his authority which the Senator says he now has.

Mr. LENROOT. But he could not do so under the Senator's amendment, because the Senator has limited the payment to the interest money.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I have not. I have simply provided an additional method for raising the money.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I favor entirely the amendment. I am entirely in sympathy with its purpose. It seems to me that the last part, beginning in line 5, as the Senator from Wisconsin has pointed out, is clearly unconstitutional. If we leave only the first part, as the Senator from North Carolina said he was willing to do, I fear it would be found—and that is what I want to ask the Senator from Wisconsin about—that the bill would be so framed that we could not use any other money except that arising from the sale of the bonds. We have no bonds, we have no money, we have no negotiable instruments, and, therefore, we can get no money from that source now, and the proposed amendment would limit the bill to that source.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. That difficulty, if it exists, may be easily removed by changing the language of the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] so as to make the interest which is due the Government on the foreign debt available for the payment of the claims as one of the processes by which the obligation may be met. The amendment could be very easily adjusted to meet that difficulty.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Could it not be amended, commencing in line 5, so as to read:

If at any time the amount of such interest is not sufficient to meet such appropriation the same shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the Senator from Michigan has suggested language which will accomplish the purpose of all of us who are in sympathy with the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator from North Carolina may modify his amendment as I have suggested. I shall not offer to amend it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am willing to accept the suggestion which has been made by the Senator from Michigan; I have no objection to it. I merely desire to have this fund appropriated for the purpose of discharging the debt in order to avoid the very danger which the business interests of this country seem to be so apprehensive about; besides, I wish to meet the President's objection to signing the bill unless it shall provide some method of payment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I merely desire that the amendment as now agreed to be modified by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], at the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina desire to modify his amendment as suggested?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I will so modify the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the Secretary report the amendment as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolino has not as yet modified his amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask the attention of the Senator from Michigan while I state the amendment as I understand it is proposed to be modified by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not catch what the Senator from Michigan said.

Mr. ROBINSON. As the Senator from North Carolina did not catch the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, and as the Senator from North Carolina probably can not easily read my writing, I will now read the amendment as I understand it is proposed to be modified by the Senator from North Carolina:

There is hereby appropriated such amount as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of Titles IV and V of this act, to be paid out of and to be a first charge upon the interest received by the United States on obligations of foreign governments. If at any time the amount of such interest is not sufficient to meet the appropriation hereby made, the same shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That was my idea.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that he modify his amendment in conformity with that suggestion.

Mr. SIMMONS. I modify my amendment as suggested. That really carries out the idea that I had in mind, but, as I said before, I did not regard the other provision as likely to be called into action.

Mr. LENROOT. With the suggested modification, I shall be very glad to support the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, as now proposed to be modified.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 905. There is hereby appropriated such amount as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of Titles IV and V of this act, to be paid out of and to be a first charge upon the interest received by the United States on obligations of foreign governments. If at any time the amount of such interest is not sufficient to meet the appropriation hereby made, the same shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I am going to support the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, first, because there is no fund that could be more appropriately employed than the money received in interest on foreign loans for the payment of the soldiers' adjusted compensation. I supported an amendment of exactly similar character which was offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], as I recall, to the revenue bill. The situation then was just the reverse of what it is now in the manner of the presentation. Then we were engaged in enacting a revenue bill, and the Senator from North Carolina proposed to add the bonus bill as a rider to the revenue bill and to devote the interest received on the foreign loans to the payment of the soldiers' bonus.

Prior to the offering of that amendment by the Senator from North Carolina I had offered an amendment proposing to retain the excess-profits tax and to pay the soldiers' bonus out of that tax, and had added the soldiers' bonus as a rider to the revenue measure. Both of those propositions were then defeated. In my judgment the fund ought to have been provided to pay the bonus from the excess-profits tax, but Senators defeated that. Next, however, to the excess-profits tax, which it was estimated would have yielded $450,000,000 this year, is the particular fund covered by the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

I am glad to see manifested a change of heart on the part of Senators. If they had been as willing when the revenue bill was before the Senate as they appear to be now to devote the interest on the foreign loans to the payment of the soldiers' bonus, we might have passed the pending bill or one very similar to it many months ago. I only regret that under the Constitution I can see no way to propose here and now the reinstatement of the excess-profits tax and the devotion of that tax to the payment of the charge which we are apparently about to create. Of course, we all understand that an amendment proposing to reinstate the excess-profits tax would be directly in conflict with that clause of the Constitution which provides that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, the excess profits being gathered in this country are nearly all the direct result of the war. They are nearly all being husbanded by those gentlemen who find it possible to demand such charges as will realize these profits simply because of conditions growing out of the war. There would be nothing so equitable and just in the world as that those excess profits, largely springing from the war, should be devoted to the payment of the so-called bonus, which is really the payment of a war expense which has been laid over and which ought to have been paid long ago. But we can not reach excess profits now, and I am glad that there is at least apparently in the Chamber a sentiment in favor of devoting a part of the interest on our war loans to the payment of this charge.

Mr. President, there is another reason why I am not only reconciled to the devotion of the interest on our foreign loans to the payment of the bonus but am enthusiastically for it. Under the amendment the interest on the foreign loans will be devoted, so far as necessary, to the payment of the soldiers' bonus, and I think if we shall adopt the amendment we will have heard the last of the clamor for the cancellation of the foreign debt.

Two sets of individuals have been advocating the cancellation of the foreign debt. One class embraces all those gentlemen who have invested large sums in foreign securities, plus a considerable number who want to make further investments and who would like to be able to know when they make them that the United States is not going to collect its debt, so that they may be the first and the preferred creditors. That conspiracy, Mr. President, has been widespread, and there is no use now attempting to close our eyes to the selfish interest back of it. Cancellation has been advocated by representatives of the great house of Morgan. Propaganda in favor of cancellation has been carried on throughout the country persistently, and large groups of influential financiers have been standing for that abominable doctrine. That class, however, while very potential and powerful, would not be much to be feared were it not for a class of very good people who are becoming sentimentally interested in Europe, who go about declaring that something must be done for Europe, and who apparently are obsessed with the idea that the United States must play Sister Bountiful to all the world for all time.

I read a suggestion in a newspaper the other day that the United States could afford to cancel its indebtedness provided Europe would agree to disarm. So, in the opinion of some eminent gentleman, what we ought to do is to go around with our pockets full of money and offer bribes to Europe to be good. We ought to go to Italy and ask, "How much money will you take to disband your army?" And to France and ask, "How much will we have to pay you to have you disarm?" A more ridiculous proposition than that has never been uttered since man first opened his lips and began to mumble an articulate jargon of sound.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator, of course, is familiar with the proposal of the Earl of Balfour on behalf of the British Government in a note to certain allies, in which he suggested that there could be no compromise or settlement of the debt due the British Government from these allies unless the United States Government should cancel its debt to Great Britain, thus making an insolent attempt to isolate the United States from her former associates in the conduct of the war and making an effort to put upon the United States full responsibility for the policy of the British Government toward its allies in connection with the debts due Great Britain from them.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes, Mr. President; I am fully aware of that, and I am aware of the fact that every time one of these British statesmen or French statesmen or Italian statesmen begins to talk about the duty of the United States to cancel its debts there is some American over here to indicate that we have the subject under consideration, and that there are certain terms and certain conditions that could be made that would lead us to cancel the debts.

I want to do something that will forever set at rest the proposition of the cancellation of these debts. I want the world to know that the United States proposes to have this money, and that if it is not paid the nation that refuses to pay it will have to dishonor its own obligations, at least. I want it to be understood, once and for all, by foreign nations that we are not going to pay them to disband their armies. I want it understood by the bondholders who would like to sacrifice Uncle Sam's interests in order to promote their own that this debt is going to be paid to the uttermost farthing, or that the foreign Governments will be compelled to repudiate their obligations. I want the sentimentalists to understand that the Congress of the United States feels that it has enough trouble to help take care of our business at home, and that we are no longer engaged in projects looking to the expenditure of American money in Europe. I want the European people to understand that while we have every sympathy for them, while we have every respect for European governments, while we intend to treat them all with consideration, we stand upon our rights; that we intend they shall work out their own salvation while we are compelled to work out ours, always extending to them the right hand of fellowship and of good feeling, but insisting upon the redemption of the obligations they have incurred to this Government.

Mr. President, if we set aside this money from these loans for the payment of the soldiers of this country who served to help preserve these European countries from the assaults of their enemies, I think we may at the same time set at rest the clamor for the cancellation of these bonds, for we will have devoted those bonds to the extinction of a sacred obligation due to our own soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate; but I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] on finding a way to make the bill definite and have some meaning to it that will obviate the rumored veto of the President.

In addition to that, it was an embarrassing thing for any American Congressman, Senator or Member of the House, to meet those who had stood in the mud in Europe, covered as they were with vermin, fighting the battles of this country on foreign soil, and tell them that the two years they had lost out of the producing period of their lives could not be made good in any particular, while we had loaned to foreign countries $11,000,000,000, and some of the foreign countries to whom we had loaned this money were already paying their soldiers a bonus.

An author who has written a very interesting work on "England after the War" has called attention to the fact that the prosperity of England and the high pay that her labor has received came from American money borrowed by England for the purpose of carrying on her affairs, and it was hardly a patriotic expression on our part that we could not afford to burden ourselves with additional indebtedness while other nations were meeting the obligation that they felt to their soldiers with money that had been taken from the taxpayers of America. I am glad to know that we have the prospect of having added to the bill a provision which will take some of the money that is due us from abroad and devote it to the splendid purpose of remunerating the boys who saved the civilization of the world.

Mr. President, while I am on my feet I want to take occasion to say that I hold no part with the sentiment that this is an attempt to capitalize or to commercialize patriotism. If my family were beleagured, and I were unable to relieve them, and some man who was earning enough to support himself, or to support himself and his family, were to go to their rescue and take two or three days of his time to do it, bringing back my loved ones safe to me, I never could pay him the debt of obligation that was due him from me as measured in the price of those that he saved and the relation they bore me; but I at least could pay him for the time that he lost from making a support for himself and those that were dependent upon him, and it is that for which I am now arguing here.

We are not commercializing the patriotism of the boys who went abroad. We are simply attempting in some measure to put them upon the same footing with those who remained at home; and I am glad that we are making provision, not that an additional burden shall be imposed upon the American people, but that the money that has already been drawn from the pockets of the taxpayers of this country and given to foreign countries shall be given back to the boys who helped save the civilization that is now, in foreign countries, enjoying the largess of America's Treasury.

I was a bit amused the other day when we took up several hours in discussing the question of opening farms for soldiers, so as to permit them to go "back to the farm." I suppose there are some poor, unfortunate, shell-shocked boys who might be inveigled into going on the farm under present conditions; but if any soldier will now go and assume a farm and endeavor to make a living there, we ought to make an appropriation to take care of him as being feeble-minded. Who thinks for one minute, under the conditions of American farming to-day and for the past two years, that any man with sense enough to take care of himself would now willingly engage in that vocation that does not give him a living, and that from time immemorial has been the butt and jest of all caricature—the hayseed, the notoriously ignorant, the poor? Do you suppose that the boys who saved this country would think it a patriotic act on our part to say: "We will drain a swamp, and you can go out on this drained land and eke out a miserable existence; or, we will turn some water on the sunburned plains of the West, and you can go there and eke out an existence"? The soldier saved the Treasury of the United States. Let us give him a chance to dig in the Treasury somewhat. Had it not been for his patriotic services we would have had no Treasury; and I, for one, am glad of the opportunity to vote, not a bonus, but partial compensation for the time he lost and the heroic work he did.

Before the bill passes, I may have something more to say; but I did want to commend the action of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] in providing that this foreign indebtedness shall be used to compensate our own people, and to head off, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has so well said, this attempt on the part of some to have the national indebtedness remitted, so that out of the national indebtedness the private interests of this country would collect their debts, and bring profits into the coffers of those whose treasuries are already unconscionably swollen by their profiteering during the war. I wish the bill had been drawn in the House so as to provide that every dollar of the foreign indebtedness due us should be collected and paid over to the boys who went abroad and saved the civilization of the world, rather than that we should use merely the interest thereon.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, earlier in the day I suggested that under a prior statement of the President he would probably be compelled, if consistent, to veto this measure. As I understand the amendment of the Senator from North Caroline [Mr. SIMMONS], I believe that it meets the objection that the President, in his statement, made to this proposed legislation. It provides the means with which to pay these money obligations.

I understand that the British Government, in its budget for the ensuing year, has made provision for the payment of the interest on its debt to the United States Government. That interest will be more than enough to meet the cash required under this bill. It will be paid before the cash is required under the bill; so that should satisfy the President, and, as far as the danger of a veto from that cause is concerned, it is removed by the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is his amendment?

Mr. PITTMAN. His amendment is to apply the interest on the foreign debt to the payment of the bonus.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator that that was one of the reasons why I offered the amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. There was just one other matter that seemed to disturb some of the Senators, and that was that the adoption of the so-called McNary amendment might induce the President to veto the bill. I know that that impression was around among some who were opposed to the bill. As a matter of fact, the President of the United States has heretofore affirmatively approved the McNary amendment. It is the only provision in the bill that the President has affirmatively approved. The McNary amendment is the McNary reclamation bill, which was prepared by the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation in conjunction with the Secretary of the Interior.

After it was prepared it received the approval of the administration, was reported to the Senate, and is now on the Senate calendar with that approval. Therefore, every cause for a veto is removed by virtue of that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The reclamation bill, which we now know as the McNary amendment in connection with the adjusted compensation bill, was reported some months ago from the committee, was it not?

Mr. PITTMAN. It was.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator know why, with the President favoring it, and with the Secretary of the Interior assisting in its preparation, no effort has been made to bring it forward as a separate measure and secure consideration of it in the Senate?

Mr. PITTMAN. I only know from the statements made by the chairman of the committee, who is now present. His statements were to the effect that the bill was only delayed in consideration by reason of other matters which the administration considered of more importance to have finished, and that it still had the approval of the President of the United States and of the administration and of a majority of this body.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I feel very sure that the Senator from Wisconsin is unnecessarily alarmed about the effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina upon the validity of the bill should it become a part of it. It is suggested that the amendment is in the nature of a bill for raising revenue, which, under the Constitution, must originate in the House of Representatives.

That particular provision of the Constitution has twice been considered by the Supreme Court, and in two brief paragraphs it appears to me that that tribunal disposed of the contention. Clearly under the construction given to that provision of the Constitution this is not a bill for raising revenue. The first is the case of the United States against Norton, reported in Ninety-first United States Reports, from which I read as follows:

> The Constitution of the United States, Article I, section 7, provides that "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives."
>
> The construction of this limitation is practically well settled by the uniform action of Congress. According to that construction it "has been confined to bills to levy taxes in the strict sense of the words, and has not been understood to extend to bills for other purposes which incidentally create revenue." Story on the Constitution, section 880. "Bills for raising revenue" when enacted into laws, become revenue laws. Congress was a constitutional body sitting under the Constitution. It was, of course, familiar with the phrase "bills for raising revenue," as used in that instrument, and the construction which had been given to it.

The same doctrine was subsequently announced in the case of Twin City Bank against Nebeker, reported in One hundred and sixty-seventh United States Reports, from which I read as follows:

> The contention in this case is that the section of the act of June 3, 1864, providing a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and for the circulation and redemption thereof, so far at it imposed a tax upon the average amount of the notes of a national banking association in circulation, was a revenue bill within the clause of the Constitution declaring that "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills" (Art. I, sec. 7); that it appeared from the official journals of the two Houses of Congress that while the act of 1864 originated in the House of Representatives, the provision imposing this tax was not in the bill as it passed that body, but originated in the Senate by amendment, and, being accepted by the House, became a part of the statute; that such tax was, therefore, unconstitutional and void; and that, consequently, the statute did not justify the action of the defendant.
>
> The case is not one that requires either an extended examination of precedents, or a full discussion as to the meaning of the words in the Constitution, "bills for raising revenue." What bills belong to that class is a question of such magnitude and importance that it is the part of wisdom not to attempt, by any general statement, to cover every possible phase of the subject. It is sufficient in the present case to say that an act of Congress providing a national currency, secured by a pledge of bonds of the United States, and which, in the furtherance of that object, and also to meet the expenses attending the execution of the act, imposed a tax on the notes in circulation of the banking associations organized under the statute, is clearly not a revenue bill which the Constitution declares must originate in the House of Representatives. Mr. Justice Story has well said that the practical construction of the Constitution and the history of the origin of the constitutional provision in question proves that revenue bills are those that levy taxes in the strict sense of the word, and are not bills for other purposes which may incidentally create revenue. (1 Story on Const., sec. 880.)

A very learned judge, who long presided over one of the courts of the West, Judge Deady, said, in the case of Dundee Mortgage Trust Investment Co. against Parrish, reported in Twenty-fourth Federal Reports, at page 201, as follows:

> But I am clear that this is not a bill for raising revenue. True, it provides that when revenue is to be raised mortgages shall contribute thereto as land; but it does not authorize or provide for levying any tax or raising a cent of revenue. A bill for raising revenue, or a "money bill," as it was technically called at common law, is a bill levying a tax on all or some of the persons, property, or business of the country for a public purpose; and the assessment, or listing and valuation of the polls or property preliminary thereto, and all laws regulating the same, are merely measures to secure what may be deemed a just or expedient basis for the levying of a tax or raising a revenue thereon. The Constitution of the United States (sec. 7, Art. I) contains a provision on this subject similar to the one in the State constitution. It reads: "All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills." In speaking of this clause Story, in his commentaries on the Constitution (sec. 880), says: "And, indeed, the history of the origin of the power, already suggested, abundantly proves that it has been confined to bills to levy taxes in the strict sense of the words and has not been understood to extend to bills for other purposes which may incidentally create revenue."

The paragraph of Story referred to is as follows:

> What bills are properly "bills for raising revenue," in the sense of the Constitution, has been matter of some discussion. A learned commentator supposes that every bill which indirectly or consequentially may raise revenue is, within the sense of the Constitution, a revenue bill. He therefore thinks that the bills for establishing the post office and the mint and regulating the value of foreign coin belong to this class and ought not to have originated (as in fact they did) in the Senate.

If that were not sufficient, the original bill as it came to us from the House provided for the issuance of certificates of indebtedness to the veterans. It is proposed by the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina, instead of issuing certificates of indebtedness to the veterans, to issue certificates of indebtedness, put them upon the market generally, sell them, and use the money for the payment of the veterans.

So, if this is in the nature of a bill for raising revenue on account of the provision for the issuance of certificates of indebtedness by the Treasury, the original bill was a bill for raising revenue, because it provided for issuance of certificates of indebtedness directly to the veterans, which was a means of raising revenue for the purpose of meeting the obligation.

Mr. LENROOT. What revenue could be raised by issuing certificates of indebtedness to veterans?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly the same way as the other was raised.

Mr. LENROOT. In one case there is an obligation to pay money out of the Treasury, and in the other case money comes into the Treasury.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Both of them are obligations to take money out of the Treasury.

Mr. LENROOT. One brings money into the Treasury, and the other does not.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. One satisfies the obligation of the Government by permitting it to take the certificates of indebtedness outside and pledge them. So it is perfectly obvious that we have a right to substitute a different plan of Government obligation for the one proposed by the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina as modified.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator from North Carolina modified his amendment, in view of the point which had been raised. I thought perhaps he would like to have his amendment stated.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the amendment in the present form is just as good as the amendment originally offered, and will accomplish the same purpose.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, some of the Senators on the other side who oppose adjusted compensation for our World War soldiers have based their opposition to it upon the ground that the Government is in no condition financially to pay it. Here is an opportunity to do simple justice to the soldier and pay him adjusted compensation without taking 1 cent out of the public Treasury, or taxing the American people one 5 cents. Here is an opportunity to collect the interest, which amounts now to more than $1,000,000,000 on money due this Government by the allied nations, and pay this already too long deferred adjusted compensation to our soldiers.

It has been said here repeatedly that France and England have paid adjusted compensation to their soldiers with the money they borrowed from us. As I have said here before, Wall Street interests have collected from France and Great Britain since the war $1,700,000,000 for money and goods obtained by those two countries during the war.

I take the position that if France and Great Britain are able to pay to private interests in Wall Street $1,700,000,000, they can certainly pay to this Government a billion and a half, which would pay outright adjusted compensation of over $350 in cash to every one of our soldier boys. Here is a provision to raise this money, not by taxation, not by issuing Federal reserve notes, not by the sale of bonds in the United States, but by collecting simply the interest on a debt due this Government by foreign countries.

Mr. President, thousands of our soldiers are in distress at this hour, or out of employment, with no money in their pockets.

You have no right to deny justice to the soldier who preserved our liberty and saved the Republic in the hour of its peril. You who voted to take $90,000,000 off of the big income taxpayers and $450,000,000 off of the greedy profiteers and to pay war contracts, questionable, many of them, amounting to over $700,000,000, can not justify your position in denying simple justice to the American soldier. Here is an opportunity to pay the bill and square the account with the boys without increasing the tax burden of our people by adopting the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina as modified.

On a division, the amendment as modified was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously made, took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, August 30, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate August 29 (legislative day of August 25), 1922.

PROMOTION IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

MEDICAL CORPS.

First Lieut. George Paul Sandrock to be captain in the Medical Corps from August 27, 1922.

APPOINTMENT IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

QUARTERMASTER CORPS.

Warrant Officer Herbert Warren Hardman to be captain with rank from July 1, 1920.

POSTMASTERS.

IDAHO.

Warren P. Jones to be postmaster at Priest River, Idaho, in place of H. M. Murray, resigned.

ILLINOIS.

Chester E. Brounson to be postmaster at Plainfield, Ill., in place of M. L. Spangler, deceased.

John K. Hoagland to be postmaster at Shelbyville, Ill., in place of Frank Stone. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

INDIANA.

Robert F. Morris to be postmaster at Elberfeld, Ind. Office became presidential April 1, 1922.

John C. Hinshaw to be postmaster at Westfield, Ind., in place of A. H. Baker, resigned.

KANSAS.

Guy W. Bryan to be postmaster at Della, Kans. Office became presidential April 1, 1922.

John W. Liggett to be postmaster at Rosalia, Kans. Office became presidential July 1, 1922.

KENTUCKY.

Jimmie R. Botts to be postmaster at Glendale, Ky. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

James L. Howard to be postmaster at Wallins Creek, Ky. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

LOUISIANA.

Joseph P. Lucas to be postmaster at Dodson, La. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Anna M. Shadow to be postmaster at Sibley, La. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

David Dunn to be postmaster at Columbia, La., in place of E. G. Stuart, deceased.

William Fear to be postmaster at Welsh, La., in place of A. M. Oaksmith, removed.

MICHIGAN.

William L. Shulters to be postmaster at Hastings, Mich., in place of J. J. Dawson. Incumbent's commission expires September 13, 1922.

MISSOURI.

Clarence Wehrle to be postmaster at Eureka, Mo. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

NEBRASKA.

Frank E. Britton, to be postmaster at Blue Hill, Nebr., in place of J. B. Lane, resigned.

Stella V. Caulfield to be postmaster at Newcastle, Nebr., in place of S. V. Caulfield. Incumbent's commission expired May 25, 1922.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Stephen C. Coburn to be postmaster at Milford, N. H., in place of J. A. Brahaney. Incumbent's commission expired January 5, 1920.

Edgar C. Emery to be postmaster at West Swanzey, N. H., in place of A. J. Faulkner, resigned.

Fred P. Dearth to be postmaster at Woodsville, N. H., in place of J. F. Leonard. Incumbent's commission expires September 19, 1922.

NEW JERSEY.

Daniel A. De Vries to be postmaster at Carlton Hill, N. J. Office became presidential January 1, 1922.

Richard V. Iderstine to be postmaster at Wyckoff N. J. Office became presidential April 1, 1922.

NEW YORK.

Anna Keegan to be postmaster at Ferndale, N. Y., in place of T. M. Keegan, deceased.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Lola A. Thomas to be postmaster at Jackson Springs, N. C. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

George H. Wright to be postmaster at Wendell, N. C., in place of M. F. Hales, removed.

OHIO.

Ida C. Steinman to be postmaster at Logan, Ohio, in place of H. G. Hansel, resigned.

Bert E. Woodward to be postmaster at Stryker, Ohio, in place of W. S. Ehrmin, removed.

OREGON.

Bernice Wilson to be postmaster at Yoncalla, Oreg., in place of W. W. Wilson. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Roy L. Kalbfus to be postmaster at Shohola, Pa. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Howard C. Shenton to be postmaster at Slatington, Pa., in place of Joseph Richards, removed.

TENNESSEE.

Janie E. Pennington to be postmaster at Madisonville, Tenn., in place of W. A. Ghormley, removed.

VERMONT.

Lewis S. Richardson to be postmaster at Chester Depot, Vt. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

VIRGINIA.

Cornelius D. Burnett to be postmaster at Huddleston, Va. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

WISCONSIN.

Elsie O. Barnes to be postmaster at Friendship, Wis., in place of J. F. Horan. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

WYOMING.

Lee Wilcox to be postmaster at Saratoga, Wyo., in place of J. B. Delaney, deceased.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate August 29 (legislative day of August 25), 1922.

CONSULAR SERVICE.

CONSUL GENERAL AT LARGE.

Edward J. Norton to be consul general at large.

CONSUL GENERAL OF CLASS 3.

Ralph J. Totten to be consul general of class 3.

APPRAISER OF MERCHANDISE.

Sophie McCord to be appraiser of merchandise, customs collection district No. 45.

ASSISTANT APPRAISER OF MERCHANDISE.

Charles Marks to be assistant appraiser of merchandise, customs collection district No. 11.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Charles S. Reed to be receiver of public moneys at Rapid City, S. Dak.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

James Donald Crichton to be hydrographic and geodetic engineer with relative rank of lieutenant in the Navy.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

William C. Curtis, Double Springs.
John L. Shotts, Hamilton.
Addie M. Cannon, Mount Vernon.
Annie J. McArthur, Riderwood.
James W. Fincher, Theodore.

ALASKA.

Wilkie T. Pinkerton, Fairbanks.

CONNECTICUT.

Helen S. Ladd, Bloomfield.
Edmund E. Crowe, South Norwalk.

FLORIDA.

Urban P. Eytchison, Marianna.
Edward Roberts, Odessa.
William W. Rees, Tavares.

ILLINOIS.

Otto Rexses, Des Plaines.
Charles D. Ragsdale, De Soto.
Chris C. Wendt, Dundee.
Arvil C. Allen, Elkhart.
Laurence R. Sutter, Hammond.
Fuller Green, Kenney.
Thomas W. Collins, Knoxville.
John O. Biggs, Westfield.

INDIANA.

Harry W. Baals, Fort Wayne.
Albert Neuenschwander, Grabill.
Nell Manley, Laurel.
Joseph Corzetto, St. Mary-of-the-Woods.
Haskell Lett, Seymour.

IOWA.

Arthur H. Ricke, Breda.
Bessie Wyllie, Bridgewater.
Lyman H. Henry, Charles City.

KANSAS.

Madison Hinchman, Beverly.
Judson M. Cramer, Gardner.
Lot S. Hadley, Glen Elder.
William Dancaster, Richmond.
Henry N. Jessen, White Water.

MARYLAND.

Harry M. Kimmey, Westminster.

MICHIGAN.

Henry Bristow, Flat Rock.
Ethel P. Colwell, Harrisville.
John P. Robertson, Metamora.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Morris M. Cheney, Bennigton.
Bertrend N. Hill, Dixville Notch.
Herbert E. Walbridge, Enfield.
Josiah K. Rand, Fitzwilliam.
George D. Roberts, Jefferson.
Willard C. Fogg, Lincoln.

NEW JERSEY.

Reid Howell, Rutherford.

OHIO.

J. Schuyler Hossler, Bloomville.
Arch D. Spellman, Williamsfield.

OKLAHOMA.

John H. Hammer, Eufala.
Charles A. Smith, Healdton.
Jonas R. Cartwright, Shattuck.
Frederick W. Hunn, Crowder.

PENNSYLVANIA.

William J. Wilson, Bentleyville.
Richard W. Edmunds, Braddock.

TENNESSEE.

Gordon P. Hyatt, Ducktown.
Clarence V. Gwin, Hartsville.
D. Garfield Chambers, Huntsville.
Walter Carr, Moscow.
William A. Langley, Petros.
McHenry Jackson, Russellville.

VERMONT.

Bertram F. Atherton, Waterbury.

WEST VIRGINIA.

John W. Fortney, Lumberport.
Ola B. Long, Mill Creek.

WITHDRAWAL.

Executive nomination withdrawn from the Senate August 29 (legislative day of August 25), 1922.

APPOINTMENT, BY TRANSFER, IN THE ARMY.

FIELD ARTILLERY.

Second Lieut. Frederick Stevens Lee, Infantry, with rank from June 13, 1922. This officer resigned his commission in the Regular Army August 25, 1922.

REJECTION.

Executive nomination rejected by the Senate August 29 (legislative day of August 25), 1922.

POSTMASTER.

John F. Curran to be postmaster at Savannah, Ga.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, August 29, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord God, looking into our past we bless Thee for every light which has gleamed upon our way and for every comfort which has encouraged our lives. Deliver us from all indifference to Thy law, and may we hearken unto Thy commandments. May Christian truth be distinctly and directly expressed in all our laws and institutions. O God, may we live in Thy spirit and walk in Thy light and give us that peace which is too deep to be measured and too calm to be expressed. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On July 1, 1922:

H. R. 11362. An act declaring Tchula Lake, Holmes County, Miss., to be a nonnavigable stream.

On August 22, 1922:

H. R. 11233. An act authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to convey certain land to the county of Muscatine, Iowa.

On August 24, 1922:

H. R. 9746. An act for the relief of Emmett Otto Cooney;

H. J. Res. 316. Joint resolution authorizing the reappointment of Frederick Mears as a commissioned officer of the Regular Army and making him available, when so reappointed, for service as chairman and chief engineer of the Alaskan Engineering Commission;

H. R. 314. An act for the relief of Forrest R. Black;

H. R. 6817. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to the State of Michigan, in trust, of a certain described tract of land to be used as a game refuge;

H. R. 7812. An act to extend the time for cutting timber in the Coconino and Tusayan National Forests, Ariz.;

H. R. 8845. An act for the relief of Mattie Alexander;

H. R. 9048. An act to authorize the California Débris Commission to reimburse the city of Sacramento, Calif., for money expended by said city in the construction of the Sacramento weir;

H. R. 9257. An act to permit adjustment of conflicting claims to certain lands in Mohave County, Ariz.;

H. R. 9814. An act amending the proviso of the act approved August 24, 1912, with reference to educational leave to employees of the Indian Service;

H. R. 10517. An act providing for the confirmation of title of certain purchasers from the State of Louisiana of lands formerly included in the Fort Sabine Military Reservation, in Cameron Parish, La., now abandoned;

H. R. 10957. An act to rebuild the school building of the Indian school near Tomah, Wis.; and

H. R. 11054. An act to validate certain deeds executed by members of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes.

On August 25, 1922:

H. R. 2694. An act for the relief of Seth J. Harris, Jimmie Lou Martin, Mary Holloman, and William Henry Coleman.

On August 26, 1922:

H. R. 7598. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to dedicate and set apart as a national monument certain lands in Riverside County, Calif.

On August 28, 1922:

H. R. 8244. An act permitting Frances Mack Mann to purchase certain public land;

H. R. 858. An act for the relief of Alfred P. Reck; and

H. R. 11699. An act relating to the appointment of the Chief of Staff of the Army.

FEDERAL FUEL DISTRIBUTOR.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 418 (Rept. No. 1197).

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, etc. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed six hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of such consideration the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and all amendments thereto to final disposition without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, this rule when adopted simply makes it in order to move to resolve the House into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12472. This bill has for its primary purpose to declare that a national emergency exists in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel. Secondly, it provides for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributer; and, third, it grants additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission providing for a declaration of car-service priority in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency. As far as I know, there is no opposition to the consideration of legislation of this kind at this time. The only question in the minds of Members is whether this bill goes far enough to meet the present emergency. But I do know this: That a very serious condition exists throughout the whole country. It has affected every industry, every public utility, and every home in this land, and I further know that the people in my district and every other district in the northern part of these United States are not questioning the fact about some technicality in the Constitution; they do not question whether you tread on the toes of the mine owner or the operator or the railroad owner or the railroad employee. What they want is fuel, and they want it quickly. [Applause.]

They believe that the administration and the Congress have the power to provide this fuel for them. Now, it seems to me that this legislation proposed in the bill 12472 takes a step in that direction. If it does, I am in favor of it and I want to see it quickly passed and become a law. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, and I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, the trouble with this legislation is it does not go far enough. It is like giving a man a mild opiate when nothing but a major operation will save his life. It is easy to be critical but it is difficult to be constructive. I have no desire, even if it were in my power, to add to the troubles of the administration. The people of America have only one agency to whom they can look for relief in the present crisis, and that is the President of the United States, his administration, and the Congress—the Government. It seems to me that this legislation is utterly inadequate. In the first place, there is no hard coal to be distributed; in the second place, there is but a very limited quantity of soft coal; in the third place, every day that passes the arteries of distribution are becoming more and more impaired. This bill can not remedy the trouble. To offer such a measure at this time is almost an admission of the bankruptcy of the power of the Government. There are homes in this city to-day, very many of them, that have not a bushel of coal in their bins, and the winter is rapidly coming on. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] said that the people of America expect their Government to provide them with coal to keep them warm in the winter, and he told the truth. They have the right to expect this, for their Government is their only dependence at this time.

This bill is nothing but a sickly compromise. The fault I find with this rule is that it allows six hours of debate for the consideration of a measure absolutely impotent. Congress is the subject of jest. Confidence of the people is waning. Talk with the man you meet on the street, in the hotel lobby, on the train. Confidence is gone. We talk and talk and apparently fail to realize that this Nation is now in the worst crisis of a generation, excepting only the war. Yet we hear leaders in this Chamber talking about another vacation, predicting the opportunity of a visit home. Surely the hour for action is here. Palliatives will only aggravate the situation. The President should demand supreme authority if the coal strike and the railroad strike are not settled within a given time. For my part I am ready to give the President power to seize the coal mines and railroads. [Applause.] We have had enough talk of compromise. Mr. Speaker, I know it is easy to talk. Talk is cheap; but we have been here all this summer marking time, and every day the papers publish what appear to be inspired articles saying that the coal strike is about to be settled, that the railroad strike is about to be settled, and all the time conditions are getting worse. Yet, confronted by a situation which could hardly be worse, just two or three days ago we heard from the Republican leader in this House a prediction that the House of Representatives would take a vacation, go back home, visit among the people, have a good time, repair political fences.

Yet the very moment that talk of another vacation was going on the papers were announcing the abandonment of negotiations for settlement of the coal strike and the railroad strike as well.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this rule; at least, I shall not vote against it. I regret I am not permitted to vote for a bill from which we may expect at least some degree of relief. This bill limits distribution. Its best friend merely hopes it will help the situation. In the first place, it provides for the distribution of something that does not exist; and, in the second place, it provides for the distribution of that something that does not exist over a railroad system that is becoming more and more impaired every day.

I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that so far as the minority is concerned the laboring oar is not ours. If you gentlemen are willing to go before the country with such a measure as this as your answer to the plea that is now going up throughout the land for fuel to keep the homes of America warm during this winter, the responsibility is yours and not ours. The people will hold you accountable, not us. We are ready to help in so far as we can. We shall cast no obstacles in the way of measures the administration deems necessary for the public welfare. We shall help you make a quorum. We will be on hand whenever the House is in session. But if this bill is your best answer to the cry for fuel going up throughout this Nation, I say God have mercy on those who are not now provided with their winter's fuel.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr SANDERS of Indiana. I should like to inquire how the time is to be divided under the rule.

Mr. SNELL. One-half to be controlled by the chairman and one-half by the ranking minority member of the committee.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. It just happens, Mr. Speaker, that both the chairman of the committee and the ranking minority member of the committee are in favor of the bill. I have been working very diligently on the measure and I am opposed to it. I think there are very good grounds for opposition. I think it is extremely important that those who are opposed to the bill have an opportunity of presenting their views to the House. I have inquired of both the chairman and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] as to what time can be allotted to me. Neither one of them has agreed to grant me any time. I do not say that in criticism of either one of these gentlemen, for they probably have alloted all of their time. I think the time ought to be divided between those in favor of the bill and those opposed to it. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] is opposed to the measure. The disadvantage of having the time controlled on both sides by people who favor the bill is that adequate consideration is not given the Member who wants to speak against the bill, not because of any purposeful discrimination but because these gentlemen would naturally want those who have their views to present them and they are furnished the time.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I think the mere fact that I can have no time ought to illustrate the difficulty of having the time divided in the way in which it is. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WINSLOW. I am sure the gentleman from Indiana would not create any misapprehension on the part of Members here. If my memory serves me correctly, he did suggest that no time had been allowed him by either Mr. BARKLEY or myself. I do not know about Mr. BARKLEY. It is true that I have not allowed him any, but I have not told him that I would not. The situation has been like this: We have a committee of 21 members. Some 13 of them are now here. The proportion of members of the dominant party of the House is two to one as compared with those in the minority. The problem is difficult. The gentleman from Indiana asks out of six hours the modest time of an hour and a quarter. It is a mathematical proposition to me, not a question of personality. I am not at all sure that I could arrange to give him an hour and a quarter, but I will say to him that I shall be pleased to give him as much consideration as we give any other member of the committee save one, who will present the bill in detail. If the gentleman can arrange for a like consideration on the other side, that is entirely agreeable to me. We merely want to do the right thing.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. SANDERS.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, that statement is quite accurate. I have been promised no time by either the gentleman from Kentucky or the gentleman from Massachusetts. As far as I know, now is the only time when I may learn definitely if I am going to have any time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is quite true that I did not make any definite promise. I have already agreed to yield at least 40 minutes of my time to those who are opposed to the bill, but I am prepared to yield other time, and I assure the gentleman that if I can take care of him with any additional time I shall be glad to do it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I have served in this House for three terms, and I have been assured at other times by people having control of time that if they had any time I would get it, and I usually did not get it. Here is the embarrassing situation to those on this side of the House. I am opposed to this measure. The administration is for it, and I am a Republican. I think I ought to have the right and the time to express my views, and I can not do it in a short time. We had the matter up in committee—it is no secret—and we got six hours in order that we would have time to present our views. Now we are started in on the consideration of what I regard as the most important measure that has ever been in this House, and I am confronted with the proposition that I have now no assurance of any time. I say that situation ought not to occur.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman that no one appeared before the Committee on Rules in opposition to the rule as it is usually drawn, one-half to be controlled by the majority and one-half by the minority. So far as the Rules Committee is concerned, it is always understood that the men in charge of time will be fair in the division of it among those who favor and those who oppose the bill.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. There are other people here who are not members of the committee who want to be heard on this side. I do not want any hour and a quarter; I would like to have merely the quarter.

Mr. SNELL. I can not assure any man time, but I do feel that the committee has allowed abundance of time for the discussion of this bill in general debate, and I think that is the feeling of the majority of the House.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I am opposed to this bill, and I think a part of this time ought to be allowed to those who are in opposition to it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In view of the divided sentiment evidenced in this preliminary discussion, does not the acting chairman of the Committee on Rules think it would be fair to offer an amendment to his resolution providing that the time should be equally divided between those who are in favor of the bill and those who are opposed to it?

Mr. SNELL. I think that matter can be worked out satisfactorily by Mr. WINSLOW and Mr. BARKLEY. They both assured the committee they would be fair.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The matter could be arranged if the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Massachusetts would agree to yield an hour and a quarter to the gentleman from Indiana and an hour and a quarter to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], to be controlled by them. That would give the opposition two and one-half hours and those in favor of the bill three and one-half hours. Then the opposition could control the time to suit themselves.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. We are not confronted with a situation where there is great haste. There ought to be ample time to debate this measure, and if the gentlemen who are trying to control the time find there is such demand for time that those who are members of the committee and who have studied the legislation are not to be given time, then the time ought to be extended so they may express their views.

Mr. SNELL. I think it is the general opinion of the Members of the House that six hours is ample time in which to discuss this general proposition, when there will be sufficient time given under the five-minute rule. I am in hopes that the gentlemen in control of the time will make satisfactory arrangements with those gentlemen who are opposed to the measure.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Among my colleagues here who were opposed to the bill, they are very anxious to see if a satisfactory arrangement, that the gentleman from New York referred to, could not now be made.

Mr. SNELL. I am waiting for them to make it at this time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GARNER. Give each one an hour and a quarter.

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it always pays to be fair. Those in opposition to the bill under the practice of the House have always been considered entitled to half the time, and if I might suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], I think it would meet the warm approval of the House if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] would say that he would yield half of his time to the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] would say that he would yield half of his time to the gentleman from Texas, in opposition to the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. I think it is true that when measures are before the House that are pretty strongly contested and that there is a pretty nearly equal division of sentiment, that there be an equal division of time between those favorable and those opposed to the legislation. But here is a matter of legislation with regard to which the great majority of the Members are favorable. So far as we know there are comparatively few opposed to the legislation. I do not think the few who are opposed to the legislation are entitled to half of the time as against the great, overwhelming majority of the House that is for it. I think they are entitled to plenty of time, and more time in proportion to their numbers than those favorable to the bill, but I do not think they are entitled to half of the time unless their numbers are greater than we have reason to believe they are.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. MANN. The rule proposes to give half of the time to the minority side, which has less than one-third of the membership of the House.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the usual practice.

Mr. MANN. The usual practice is to give half of the time to those opposed to the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, assuming——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I want to say, as one Member of the majority disposed favorably to this bill, that I want to hear those opposed to it. I want to know what the suggestion is, and the suggestion of my colleague I believe is fair, to give one-half of the time to those opposed to it, and I say that as one who is disposed to favor the legislation.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. WINSLOW. I desire to say to the House that at no time thus far has the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] or myself been confronted with a definite proposition as to what time the opposition wanted. We have neither affirmed nor rejected any arrangement. If he has it is unknown to me. I felt that the proposition would be, of course, to give half the time to those in opposition, but they could not be found; so the only arrangement that was logically provided was that the representative on the committee who is of the minority should control half of the time and I would control the other half. My purpose would be to go back to the original proposition, in view of the fact that there are those who want to take the negative side of the discussion. So I propose, without objection, that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and I yield one-half of our time to the opposition. [Applause].

Mr. SNELL. If that is agreed to it will be all right with that understanding.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say that it is not necessary to change the rule if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] agree to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. SNELL. With that understanding, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the rule.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the rule.

The resolution was agreed to.

POLITICAL STATUS OF PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 19 of the act of Congress approved August 29, 1916, entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands," I transmit herewith a set of the laws and resolutions passed by the Fifth Philippine Legislature during its second session, from October 16, 1920, to February 9, 1921, inclusive; its third session, from October 17, 1921, to February 9, 1922, inclusive; and its special session of 1922, from February 13, 1922, to February 18, 1922, inclusive.

These acts and resolutions have not previously been transmitted to Congress, and it is therefore recommended that they be printed as public documents as heretofore.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 28, 1922.

RAILROADS IN TERRITORY OF ALASKA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on the Territories.

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the provisions of section 4 of the act of Congress approved March 12, 1914, authorizing the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, I transmit herewith the report of the Alaskan Engineering Commission covering the period from January 1 to December 31, 1921.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 29, 1922.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. Will these laws that have been transmitted by the President to the Congress, of the Philippine Legislature, be printed?

The SPEAKER. That will be decided later.

Mr. DYER. Will that be determined by the Chair?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that he would have the right to determine that.

FEDERAL FUEL DISTRIBUTOR.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12472.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12472.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 220, nays 25, answered "present" 1, not voting 181, as follows:

YEAS—220.

Ackerman	Crisp	Griffin	Lazaro
Almon	Crowther	Hadley	Lea, Calif.
Anderson	Cullen	Hammer	Leatherwood
Andrew, Mass.	Curry	Hardy, Colo.	London
Andrews, Nebr.	Dale	Haugen	Lowrey
Ansorge	Dallinger	Hayden	McClintic
Anthony	Davis, Minn.	Hays	McCormick
Aswell	Dempsey	Henry	McFadden
Atkeson	Denison	Hersey	McKenzie
Bacharach	Dickinson	Hickey	McLaughlin, Mich.
Barbour	Doughton	Hicks	McLaughlin, Nebr.
Barkley	Dowell	Hill	McPherson
Begg	Drane	Hoch	MacGregor
Benham	Driver	Hogan	Madden
Bird	Dunbar	Hooker	Magee
Blakeney	Dyer	Huddleston	Mann
Bland, Ind.	Elliott	Hull	Mapes
Bland, Va.	Ellis	Husted	Michener
Boies	Evans	Hutchinson	Mills
Bowers	Fairfield	Ireland	Millspaugh
Briggs	Faust	James	Mondell
Brooks, Ill.	Favrot	Jefferis, Nebr.	Moore, Ohio
Burdick	Fenn	Jeffers, Ala.	Moore, Va.
Burke	Fish	Johnson, S. Dak.	Moores, Ind.
Butler	Fisher	Johnson, Wash.	Morgan
Cable	Fitzgerald	Jones, Pa.	Morin
Campbell, Pa.	Focht	Kelly, Pa.	Murphy
Cannon	Foster	Kennedy	Newton, Minn.
Chalmers	Free	Ketcham	Norton
Chandler, N. Y.	French	Kincheloe	O'Connor
Chindblom	Fuller	King	Ogden
Christopherson	Garrett, Tenn.	Kissel	Olpp
Clague	Gernerd	Kline, N. Y.	Osborne
Clarke, N. Y.	Goodykoontz	Kline, Pa.	Paige
Cole, Iowa	Gorman	Kopp	Park, Ga.
Colton	Graham, Ill.	Kraus	Parker, N. J.
Cooper, Ohio	Graham, Pa.	Kreider	Parker, N. Y.
Cooper, Wis.	Greene, Mass.	Lampert	Patterson, Mo.
Coughlin	Greene, Vt.	Lawrence	Patterson, N. J.
Crago	Griest	Layton	Perlman

Purnell	Sanders, N. Y.	Taylor, Colo.	Volk
Radcliffe	Scott, Tenn.	Taylor, N. J.	Volstead
Ramseyer	Shaw	Taylor, Tenn.	Walters
Reece	Siegel	Thomas	Ward, N. Y.
Reed, W. Va.	Sinnott	Tillman	Ward, N. C.
Rhodes	Smith, Idaho	Timberlake	Weaver
Ricketts	Smith, Mich.	Towner	Wheeler
Roach	Smithwick	Treadway	Williams, Ill.
Robsion	Snell	Tucker	Wilson
Rodenberg	Speaks	Underhill	Wingo
Rogers	Sproul	Upshaw	Winslow
Rose	Stafford	Valle	Wurzbach
Rossdale	Stephens	Vare	Wyant
Rouse	Strong, Kans.	Vestal	Young
Sanders, Ind.	Swank	Vinson	Zihlman

NAYS—25.

Bankhead	Garrett, Tex.	Oliver	Sandlin
Bowling	Hardy, Tex.	Parks, Ark.	Steagall
Box	Hudspeth	Pou	Tyson
Bulwinkle	Jones, Tex.	Quin	Williams, Tex.
Collier	Lanham	Rankin
Echols	Lee, Ga.	Rayburn
Garner	Lyon	Sanders, Tex.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1.

Sumners, Tex.

NOT VOTING—181.

Appleby	Fairchild	Lineberger	Ryan
Arentz	Fess	Linthicum	Sabath
Beck	Fields	Little	Schall
Beedy	Fordney	Logan	Scott, Mich.
Bell	Frear	Longworth	Sears
Bixler	Freeman	Luce	Shelton
Black	Frothingham	Luhring	Shreve
Blanton	Fulmer	McArthur	Sinclair
Bond	Funk	McDuffie	Sisson
Brand	Gahn	McLaughlin, Pa.	Slemp
Brennan	Gallivan	McSwain	Snyder
Britten	Gensman	Maloney	Stedman
Brooks, Pa.	Gilbert	Mansfield	Steenerson
Brown, Tenn.	Glynn	Martin	Stevenson
Browne, Wis.	Goldsborough	Mead	Stiness
Buchanan	Gould	Merritt	Stoll
Burroughs	Green, Iowa	Michaelson	Strong, Pa.
Burtness	Harrison	Miller	Sullivan
Burton	Hawes	Montague	Summers, Wash.
Byrnes, S. C.	Hawley	Montoya	Sweet
Byrns, Tenn.	Herrick	Moore, Ill.	Swing
Campbell, Kans.	Himes	Mott	Tague
Cantrill	Hukriede	Mudd	Taylor, Ark.
Carew	Humphreys	Nelson, Me.	Temple
Carter	Jacoway	Nelson, A. P.	Ten Eyck
Chandler, Okla.	Johnson, Ky.	Nelson, J. M.	Thompson
Clark, Fla.	Johnson, Miss.	Newton, Mo.	Tilson
Classon	Kahn	Nolan	Tincher
Clouse	Kearns	O'Brien	Tinkham
Cockran	Keller	Oldfield	Voigt
Codd	Kelley, Mich.	Overstreet	Wason
Cole, Ohio	Kendall	Perkins	Watson
Collins	Kiess	Peterson	Webster
Connally, Tex.	Kindred	Porter	White, Kans.
Connell	Kirkpatrick	Pringey	White, Me.
Connolly, Pa.	Kitchin	Rainey, Ala.	Williamson
Copley	Kleczka	Rainey, Ill.	Wise
Cramton	Knight	Raker	Wood, Ind.
Darrow	Knutson	Ransley	Woodruff
Davis, Tenn.	Kunz	Reber	Woods, Va.
Deal	Langley	Reed, N. Y.	Woodyard
Dominick	Lankford	Riddick	Wright
Drewry	Larsen, Ga.	Riordan	Yates
Dunn	Larson, Minn.	Robertson
Dupré	Lee, N. Y.	Rosenbloom
Edmonds	Lehlbach	Rucker

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. Tincher (for) with Mr. Sumners of Texas (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Maloney with Mr. Gallivan.
Mr. Burton with Mr. Oldfield.
Mr. Thompson with Mr. Tague.
Mr. Cramton with Mr. Carter.
Mr. Hawley with Mr. Riordan.
Mr. Langley with Mr. Clark of Florida.
Mr. Wood of Indiana with Mr. Sisson.
Mr. Brooks of Pennsylvania with Mr. Cantrill.
Mr. Luhring with Mr. Martin.
Mr. Kearns with Mr. Dupré.
Mr. Mudd with Mr. Stoll.
Mr. Schall with Mr. Johnson of Kentucky.
Mr. Kahn with Mr. Kitchin.
Mr. Steenerson with Mr. Kindred.
Mr. Yates with Mr. Logan.
Miss Robertson with Mr. Stedman.
Mr. Lineberger with Mr. Sullivan.
Mr. Gahn with Mr. Blanton.
Mr. Darrow with Mr. Raker.
Mr. Edmonds with Mr. Sears.
Mr. Green of Iowa with Mr. Carew.
Mr. Kendall with Mr. Lankford.
Mr. Funk with Mr. Kunz.
Mr. Burroughs with Mr. Woods of Virginia.
Mr. Frothingham with Mr. Johnson of Mississippi.
Mr. Longworth with Mr. Cockran.
Mr. Burtness with Mr. Linthicum.
Mr. Frear with Mr. Byrns of Tennessee.
Mr. Lehlbach with Mr. Wise.
Mr. Fess with Mr. Byrnes of South Carolina.
Mr. Appleby with Mr. McDuffie.
Mr. Lee of New York with Mr. Ten Eyck.
Mr. Wason with Mr. Taylor of Arkansas.
Mr. Connolly of Pennsylvania with Mr. Mead.
Mr. Nolan with Mr. O'Brien.
Mr. Shreve with Mr. Montague.
Mr. A. P. Nelson with Mr. Dominick.
Mr. Snyder with Mr. Overstreet.
Mr. Strong of Pennsylvania with Mr. Deal.
Mr. Kirkpatrick with Mr. McSwain.
Mr. Porter with Mr. Bell.
Mr. Sinclair with Mr. Humphreys.
Mr. Knutson with Mr. Black.
Mr. Kiess with Mr. Davis of Tennessee.
Mr. Bixler with Mr. Connally of Texas.
Mr. Watson with Mr. Brand.
Mr. Hukriede with Mr. Larsen of Georgia.
Mr. Webster with Mr. Buchanan.
Mr. Perkins with Mr. Jacoway.
Mr. Newton of Missouri with Mr. Collins.
Mr. Montoya with Mr. Fields.
Mr. Larson of Minnesota with Mr. Drewry.
Mr. Reed of New York with Mr. Hawes.
Mr. Luce with Mr. Fulmer.
Mr. Fordney with Mr. Rainey of Alabama.
Mr. Brennan with Mr. Goldsborough.
Mr. Osborne with Mr. Harrison.
Mr. Cole of Ohio with Mr. Mansfield.
Mr. Codd with Mr. Gilbert.
Mr. White of Maine with Mr. Wright.
Mr. Classon with Mr. Rucker.
Mr. Tilson with Mr. Sabath.
Mr. Kleczka with Mr. Stevenson.
Mr. Himes with Mr. Rainey of Illinois.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. BURTNESS. I was not.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present?

Mr. HAWLEY. I was not present, but I would like to be recorded as "present" in making a quorum.

The SPEAKER. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present when his name was called?

Mr. SCHALL. No.

The SPEAKER. Then the rules do not let the gentleman vote.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am recorded as voting "no." I am paired with the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. TINCHER. I withdraw my vote of "no" and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12472, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 12472, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributor, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I allow 30 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, may I be notified at the expiration of 20 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the coal strike in effect from April 1 until a day or two ago, aggravated by the railroad shopmen's strike which has been in effect since July 1, has created a situation which, unless drastic remedies are adopted, will bring on a national disaster. I say disaster advisedly, for it will soon be upon us unless we act promptly.

Some of you gentlemen from sections where coal is little used, try as you may, can not appreciate the situation that confronts those of us who live where coal is burned in the homes eight months of the year.

Several days ago we passed the coal commission bill, which should help in preventing a recurrence of the trouble. It was preventive in its nature. Other legislation is necessary to relieve us from the consequences of the present strike.

The settlement of the strike by bituminous miners and operators may have settled the problem of the miners and operators, but it has not for the consumer. Five months of striking ended production in the anthracite field and curtailed production to two-fifths of normal in the bituminous fields. Anthracite mining has not yet resumed. There is a production now of eight millions tons per week of bituminous. To meet the emergency we should have for several months, according to the Secretary of Commerce, a production of 13,000,000 tons per week.

With this we are faced with car and locomotive shortage due to the railroad strike, which seriously interferes with distribution. First, our shortage was in production. Now it is in distribution. Clearly we must now solve this question of distribution or we shall have suffering.

Distribution is being interfered with and restricted by an inadequate number of serviceable locomotives and cars at points of production and by exorbitant prices being charged by certain operators. Your committee has tried to cover both and has reported legislation capable of being put into immediate use. Time again is of the essence. Furthermore, we are convinced not only of its workability but of its constitutionality as a proper exercise of a power of Congress.

Last May, with a view of doing then what was possible to relieve industry from inability to get coal, the President created a fuel distribution committee consisting of the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of the Interior, the Attorney General, and a representative of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. Aitchison. Mr. Hoover was designated as chairman.

This committee appointed a fuel distributer, who, of course, had his agents and advisors. This committee did very effective work in stimulating production in nonunion fields and in providing for its distribution along equitable and fair lines. It was, of course, extralegal and wholly voluntary. It went out of existence with the settlement of the strike, for it was the strike emergency that brought it into being.

Mr. Hoover advised us there were only 10,000,000 tons of coal in the country to-day in possession of consumers, big or little. Our total production per annum of anthracite is 100,000,000 tons and bituminous 500,000,000 tons. The need is 13,000,000 tons per week, so that there are in the consumers' bins less than a week's supply of coal, and winter is but a short time away for many of us.

Bear in mind there is practically no coal in storage either at the mines or on the docks on the Great Lakes. Ordinarily at Duluth we have several million tons on September 1. Several days ago the amount was but 200,000 tons. Think of it! One-tenth to one-fifteenth of what normally is there. Navigation on the Great Lakes closes in November or early December. Gentlemen, 80 per cent, at least, of our coal comes by way of the Lakes. Do you wonder we are alarmed? The situation in New England is but a little better, and the situation in New York is such that a great and conservative governor has called the legislature in special session for legislation to enable the State to handle it. Gentlemen, we have left this to operator and miner long enough. They have gotten the people into this intolerable situation. We must do what we can to get them out. The President and his advisers have requested legislation and we must solve this problem of distribution. We must provide for an equitable distribution as to localities and industries and, in so far as we can, at a fair price.

Let me call attention to the provisions of the bill briefly. First, we state a plain truth—which no one here will question—that we are faced with an emergency which endangers the public health and general welfare of our people, blocks the channels of commerce, and threatens to interfere with the operation of the Government itself.

We believe, Mr. Chairman, in the face of such emergency that our Government has an obligation to perform. There is one great duty resting upon government and that is protecting the lives and property of its citizens. A government that can not or does not do that ceases to be a government.

Ours is a Government of delegated powers, but it is a Government and it has the powers expressly granted to it, together with all of those powers necessarily implied from the exercise of those expressly granted. In the Gettysburg cemetery case, found in One hundred and sixtieth United States Reports, it was held that a power could be implied from a combination of powers taken together. So much for our power.

With the national emergency as a basis we provide for a Federal fuel distributer to be appointed by the President and subject to him. Section 3 defines his duties. Briefly, he is to (1) ascertain the fuel supply and any shortage; (2) the producing mines and their access to markets; (3) the kind and location of consumers; (4) whether any person or locality, because of the nature of business and the particular exigency, should have priority in shipment; (5) and the prices charged and whether those currently charged are just and reasonable. How will he obtain this information? He will have advising him at Washington a committee of representative railroad men and coal operators, the former to cooperate on cars and the latter on available coal. It is expected that the States will set up agencies for cooperation with the distributer both as to orders and distribution.

Many of them are doing so in anticipation of the passage of this legislation. This central organization will have in the various coal districts subcommittees composed of operators, railroad men, interstate commerce service men, and a direct representative of the distributer.

Let me illustrate: A man in Minnesota is out of coal. Needs 100 tons to run his factory one month. There is none available in the State. He applies and receives approval of the State agency and that request for coal and priority is sent to Washington. The Federal distributer, after considering mine supply, car supply, accessibility to market, and right to priority, sends it to the Connellsville district of Pennsylvania. There the local representative, with the advice of his district committee, sends it to the most available mine and the priority is issued and the cars are furnished. This, you will appreciate, is but a very general idea of the process now in use and which, with modifications, will be continued.

It is felt that in this way at a time of shortage in transportation an equitable distribution of available coal and cars can be made.

In my illustration I should have mentioned before issuance of priority the recommendation to that effect to the car service division—working in close cooperation in Washington and in the coal field—of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WYANT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. WYANT. In the event that this coal is diverted from its usual course, who will be responsible for the payment for that coal?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That situation is met in this way. Accompanying the request from the State administrative agent is a guaranty, either cash or its equivalent, to the Federal fuel distributer, and if the shipper of that coal is not satisfied with what is given in the way of a guaranty, such further guaranty or payment is made so as to satisfy him before the car is shipped.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield to me for one question?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CRISP. Is there anything in this bill which provides that before a State fuel commissioner shall approve and send in an order, that State fuel commissioner must have a guaranty that the coal will be paid for? In other words, if you apply to a State fuel administrator for the purchase of coal, must you furnish the money or a guaranty to that State fuel commissioner that the coal will be paid for when shipped?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. In some way or other the State administration must be satisfied that the money is there or will be paid for or they are not going to make any assurance to the central office in Washington.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. LAYTON. With reference to the question asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WYANT], I am sure the gentleman from Minnesota does not find anything in the bill that warrants his answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there is a guaranty as to payment on the part of the consignees.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. No; it is not in the bill, but the distributer is authorized to draw up all necessary rules and regulations, and I think we have a right to rely on the present practice being continued.

Mr. WYANT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. WYANT. I asked the question for the reason that I am advised that a considerable part of the coal that was diverted during the war has not yet been paid for.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I do not know about coal during the war. I am speaking of the practice to-day.

To recur, the plan proposed is all for the purpose of insuring an equitable distribution to persons and localities. If an exorbitant price for coal is being charged there are some localities and persons who will be unable to pay that figure and their supply will consequently be cut off or restricted. There is no equity in any system of distribution where, in the face of shortage, coal goes to the one able to pay the most for it regardless of his needs. Price is not a proper basis of distribution, otherwise the poor and the unfortunate must bear the burden.

Evidence was submitted of operators who are making use of the shortage to extort prices 500 per cent over that of last spring. This in itself constitutes a burden upon interstate commerce. Coal is so necessary in transportation that any such practice restricts trade and commerce and, in my judgment, makes possible this legislation under the commerce clause alone although we have not restricted it to that.

In view of this burden upon commerce we require the distributer to ascertain the facts as to prices charged and whether those are just and reasonable. If he finds the price to be unreasonable he recommends to the commission that that mine during the shortage of supply of cars, and so forth, be denied cars for shipment at extortionate prices. In other words, this operator by his extortion is burdening commerce. The commission says while that is true and a shortage of cars, and so forth, continues we will place cars, and so forth, where there is no such burden. We feel that the possession of the power will in itself have a wholesome effect. I may say that this power would also apply to coal on the docks or to anyone asking for car priority.

The power of the Interstate Commerce Commission as to car service and the far-reaching effect thereof has been sustained by our circuit court of appeals in Two hundred and sixty-seventh Federal Reports, page 776, in what is known as the Lampert Run case.

Mr. BUTLER. I thirst for knowledge, and I want my friend to give it to me. Suppose the coal producer says, "The price of my coal is $25 a ton and you can not have it unless you pay that." How can we get the coal.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I am glad the gentleman asked that question.

Suppose the operator in the local district says I can get $25 for my coal, I have an offer for it at that price, and I am not going to fill that order. At any time, in reference to that particular case, or any case involving the charge of an extortionate price, the facts are before the distributer as to the cost of production and what would be a reasonable price for the coal at that mine, and he makes a recommendation to the Interstate Commerce Commission that as long as these extortionate prices are being charged at that particular mine that no cars shall be furnished to that mine for distribution of coal at extortionate prices.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, how am I to get my coal? That is what I am after. Never mind the figures or the priority order; I want coal.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Let me say to the gentleman that there is a greater production of coal than there are cars and locomotives available to make distribution, and as long as that condition continues there is going to be bidding among the shippers of coal for cars, and if there is power in the distributer and the Interstate Commerce Commission to withhold the means of shipment to these extortionate mine owners then they are not going to be able to dispose of their product at the time, and they will soon come down in their price and cease to burden commerce by exorbitant prices on a necessity of commerce.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Under that system will not the centers and the organized communities get the most of the coal? Is it not going to be necessary for a community to be organized in order to present its claims and to get the material?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I want to say to the gentleman that unless the people of the country through their States, where people have to have coal—unless some organization is had a lot of people will freeze to death during the winter.

Mr. JONES of Texas. When we had the coal administration during the war there were a lot of people that did not get their coal. They sent down here, but they could not get the coal allocated. Is there any way to allocate the coal to the different States as it is needed?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That is the purpose of the administration.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield for a question?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. SNELL. In section 8 of the bill it is provided that—

> Whenever the President shall be of the opinion that the existing emergency has passed he may by proclamation so declare, and thereupon the exercise of the powers conferred under this act shall be suspended.

To that extent I am in entire sympathy with the bill. In the next section it says that "At any time hereafter when the President shall determine that an emergency exists caused by shortage of supply or inequitable distribution of coal or other fuel he may proclaim that an emergency so exists." Why is it necessary to have the next section in the bill when Congress is in session almost the entire time?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Well, many would like to see it not in session quite so much of the time. But with the strike agreement expiring on the 1st of April we are apt to have a recurrence of this trouble next spring and during the summer. We do not want to continue this any longer than is absolutely necessary. We want the President to end it as quickly as possible; we do not want the situation left so that next spring the President will be without power to cope with the situation.

Mr. SNELL. Would it not be better to postpone that legislation and not confer for all time this great power on the President of the United States in section 9?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The committee did not think so.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. ROSE. Is not the gentleman of the opinion that the condition cited by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WYANT] should be provided for in a bill of this kind? I am neither a coal operator nor a producer, but I know some operators in the district I have the honor to represent who complain bitterly about the action of the former coal administration for the reason that coal sold by them to consignees whom they knew well, and knew that their financial circumstances were sound, was diverted and sold to people absolutely insolvent, unable to pay, with the result that the coal they produced and shipped has not yet been paid for; and, further, that all efforts to fix liability have, up to this time, wholly failed. Such a condition should not be permitted to exist.

This bill is silent on that subject, and I was wondering whether or not, in a measure like this, it should not be cared for in order that people who are willing to produce coal and ship it should be paid for it. It is clearly unfair to lodge power in any commission or distributer to divert commodities into channels unknown to the original consignor, and by which such consignor must suffer loss which can not be recovered.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Such a working out of the plan would be unjust. We think this will be amply guarded against by the fuel distributer and his assistants, who are thoroughly aroused to the fact that we must have production and equitable distribution. We can not, if there is any doubt as to payment.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. I want to say to the gentleman that there are coal operators in my district who were ordered to send coal to people who were absolutely worthless, and they so stated at the time, and they have not yet received their pay.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that I can not yield to the gentleman for any extended remarks.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask one question. Does the committee believe that it can compel an operator to operate his mine?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. No; there is nothing of that kind.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Unless the operator knows that he is going to be paid for his coal, and he must pay the miner when the coal is delivered to him, as well as his overhead expense, will he not, unless he is assured of his pay, refuse to operate?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Why, no.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Why would he not?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Because, under the existing priority authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission, they are shipping coal right along under priority orders.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. But my point is this: Unless the operator is satisfied with the consignee to whom he is directed to ship the coal, would it not be good business for him to shut down the mine?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Surely, and he is doing that now. He is not being called on to do otherwise.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. I understand; but why not cover that in the bill and provide that he shall be guaranteed payment of his price before the order of the fuel distributer shall be operative as against him?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The committee held hearings here yesterday and nothing of the kind was ever brought before the committee, and coal men who were familiar with the priority-order rulings under existing law were present.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. But why not strengthen the bill in that way?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I regret that I can not yield to the gentleman any further.

We have provided for an abuse of the priority privilege. If a priority is obtained by means of willful misrepresentation or fraud this would work an injustice and subject the offender to a heavy penalty. Furthermore, whoever obtaining coal upon a priority disposes of it for other purposes is likewise guilty of an offense. Two years ago some individuals obtained coal at a fair price on priority orders and then peddled it out at exorbitant prices. Now, if he does it he is going to face prosecution.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is it the contention of the gentleman that the fuel administrator or distributer has the right to fix the maximum price of coal through the Interstate Commerce Commission by the method of withholding the cars?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. In a measure that is what the bill seeks to do. When it is ascertained that an extortionate price is being charged, cars will be withheld from the man charging that extortionate price until the price comes down to something within reason.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Suppose there are coal buyers, as there are, from the gentleman's country and elsewhere who are bidding on cars loaded with coal in the coal fields; the highest bidder usually gets the coal. Men who represent manufacturing institutions, coal agents, go and bid on the car of coal. Of course, the operator has been taking the highest price that he can get. Is there anything to remedy that situation in this bill?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Certainly; because he would not be able to sell it at extortionate prices to bidders, no matter who they are.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Then, under this bill, nothwithstanding these coal buyers go there and bid, the operator can not sell for any higher price than the fuel distributer sets.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. He can sell it at an extortionate figure, but if he does he can not get the cars. He can make what contract he wants with these buyers at any kind of a figure, but if he does it at an extortionate figure the operator will not be given the cars, and in that way the man who has the most money will not be able to come in and get the coal when some man who has less needs it far more.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Of course, the maximum price set by the fuel distributer is the limit, and anything over that would be extortionate under the bill.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. When the fuel distributer finds an extortionate price being charged, then he puts the figure indicating that no cars will be furnished until that price is brought down to one within reason.

Mr. KINCHELOE. That is the remedy through which the fuel distributer can fix the maximum price?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That is the remedy for prevention of extortion in the price of coal in this emergency. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Does the gentleman require any more time?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I do not, in view of the fact that there are other members of the committee who I feel should have time. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, this situation, as Mr. Hoover said, requires "restraint on profiteering in coal and some further authority in the matter of distribution." The plan has been thoroughly studied and the bill carefully prepared. Mr. Hoover, chairman of the President's committee, only yesterday said it was the most effective and expeditious method of handling it. Let us meet the emergency with the full powers of our Government. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, for one time, at least, I am in accord with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU]. We do not agree very often. I am rather surprised that we should agree now, but I am happy that such is the fact. I agree with him in regarding this bill as inadequate and in a suggestion which he makes, that the situation requires that we ought to do something radical. We ought to go to the full extent of seizing the railroads and mines, fix prices of coal, and deal with the situation in a thoroughgoing way.

I am not able to agree with Mr. POU in his position that because he can not get all he wants he will not take anything. I believe that this measure has possibilities for good. It can not possibly do any harm and as it seems for the present moment all that the administration will stand for in the way of dealing with the situation, of course I am going to support the bill. There are numerous details in the bill which I can not approve of, but the general purposes of the bill I do approve.

The coal supply is grossly inadequate. The car situation piling upon the coal situation produces a desperate emergency. The main purpose of this bill is to take care of the needs of the various sections of the country in the distribution of such coal as is available, with the impaired railroad equipment which is available. The further purpose of the bill is to prevent extortion in prices. My chief fear is that the fuel distributer will fix the price of coal entirely too high. I believe in fixing the price drastically low.

I will vote for this bill in the expectation that within 10 days or maybe a month the administration will come back to Congress, having in the meantime become reconciled to "the Government in business" and "socialistic measures," and will take two steps instead of one and try to do something really worth while as a remedy for the present desperate situation.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman will excuse me for a moment. I have foreseen the present situation ever since the close of the war. I tried to get the last Congress to do something along the line upon which this bill advances. I introduced during the last Congress, in June of 1919, as I recall, the bill H. R. 7196, which was—

Be it enacted, etc., That, by reason of the recent existence of a state of war, it is essential for the national security and defense and for the restoration of peace and order, to insure an adequate supply of fuel and the equitable distribution and the sale thereof at reasonable prices, and to facilitate the movement of fuel and to prevent scarcity, monopolization, hoarding, injurious speculations, manipulations, and controls affecting the supply, distribution, and movement thereof.

SEC. 2. That the words used in this act shall be construed to import the plural or the singular as the case demands. The word "person" wherever used in this act shall include persons, firms, associations, and corporations. The words "sales agents" shall include persons, firms, corporations, and associations selling coal or coke for hire or for a commission, or buying and reselling coal or coke as brokers or without unloading same on their yards. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act the act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any person, firm, association, or corporation within the scope of his employment or office shall in every case also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such person, firm, association, or corporation, as well as that of such person.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of this act shall cease to be in effect at the expiration of five years after the date of the termination of the war between the United States and Germany as same shall be ascertained and proclaimed by the President under section 24 of the act approved August 10, 1917, known as public law No. 41, Sixty-fifth Congress, but the termination of this act shall not affect any act done or any right or obligation accruing or accrued, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced in any civil case before the said termination pursuant to this act; but all rights and liabilities under this act arising before its termination shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if the act had not terminated. Any offense committed and all penalties, forfeitures, or liabilities incurred prior to such termination may be prosecuted or punished in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been terminated.

SEC. 4. That any willful violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person not a retail dealer actually delivering same from yards to sell or offer for sale, directly or indirectly, any coal or coke in quantity in excess of 15 tons, at a price greater than the maximum price which may have been fixed thereon by the President or under his direction under section 25 of the act approved August 10, 1917, known as public law No. 41, Sixty-fifth Congress, plus any amount which such person may have actually paid or incurred for the transportation of such coal or coke.

SEC. 6. That it shall be unlawful for any producer or dealer in coal or coke, other than a retail dealer actually delivering same from yards, to willfully refuse to sell or deliver coal or coke to any person offering to buy same at the maximum price therefor as mentioned in section 5 of this act, but this shall not prevent such producer or dealer from selling at less than said maximum price.

SEC. 7. That it shall be unlawful for any person to willfully fail to operate to its full capacity any coal mine owned, operated, or controlled by him when its product may be sold at the maximum price mentioned in section 5 hereof, or to refuse to sell the product thereof to consumers or retail dealers, or to unreasonably discriminate among persons who may desire to purchase such product, or to agree with other persons to sell the product of said mine exclusively to sales agents for resale; or, being a sales agent or the owner, operator, or controller of a coal mine, to agree with any person to in any way limit the output of a coal mine, to fix a price on coal, or to limit in any way the production, distribution, transportation, or sale of coal.

SEC. 8. That this act shall not have effect to repeal the act approved August 10, 1917, nor any other existing law, but shall be construed as a cumulative remedy for the evils and practices set forth herein.

I proposed, then, a price-fixing measure which should accept as its basis the fuel prices fixed during the war. Those prices would be adequate now. Of course I could not get the committee to make any report upon my bill. I even went before the Committee on Rules and asked a rule for the investigation of the coal situation. I received such a poor reception that I could not even get my remarks made before the committee printed, and had to finally extend them in the RECORD by consent of the House.

That shows the little interest that has been taken in this question by those in authority. Some of us are prone to visit the present situation and the grievance that has come out of it upon the coal operators; others know so little about the subject that they are inclined to visit it upon the poor, ragged, and half-starved coal diggers. I want to take this occasion to tell you that the real responsibility lies with the Government of the United States for permitting the situation to occur.

The primary responsibility, in my judgment, lies with Congress—with the statesmen who assumed that we would return into a condition of "normalcy" immediately after the great catastrophe of the war. Perhaps a large share of the responsibility should be placed upon the particular statesman who used that word and so gave it is present vogue. The whole world was shaken to its foundations by the war. The channels of commerce were blocked; economic, industrial, and even social conditions were disrupted. It was silly for anybody to think that we could promptly go back to the old conditions and methods that we had before the war came on.

We are now reaping some of the fruits of the World War. The railroad and coal strikes and this emergency is as much due to the war as the tombstones at Arlington out yonder. It is one of the consequences of the war. Of course, coal operators want to make a big profit. They now have the opportunity. The fault lies with Congress for sitting with folded hands and allowing the situation to arise which enables them to do it.

I am willing to take anything which the administration will agree to, even if it is only half a step, toward the amelioration of the present situation. It is a tribute to the relaxation by the administration of its previous ironclad, hidebound, turtleback principles, that some disposition is shown to deal with this emergency in the light of real understanding. I can but remember that last January the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hoover, announced with great complacency that it was the purpose of the administration to allow the miners and the coal operators to fight to a finish among themselves. I protested then against such a course and predicted what would happen in this country. Not a thing was done to avert the impending struggle. I do not forget that. The coal strike was absolutely unnecessary. It could have been prevented. The same settlement could have been made before April 1 that has now been effected. The blame for allowing the strike to occur should be put on somebody. I ask you who should be blamed?

Mr. KING. I hope the gentleman will not lay it on Congress. We are carrying so much now. Put it somewhere else.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Poor, old, stupid Congress—surely its own feeling about itself must be sufficient punishment for its crimes. I place the blame on the national administration, I will say to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Will the gentleman yield? Is it not equally true that the treaty of Versailles could have been signed before the war as well as after, without all the struggle that took place, according to the gentleman's logic?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman elucidate his question? I am unable to catch its force. There can be no doubt that the influence of the administration ought to have been used on the coal operators to induce them to comply with their solemn and written agreement to confer with the miners before April 1 for the making of a new contract. And yet the administration did nothing at all.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Excuse me, but I can not yield further now.

Now, the present trouble with the situation is not the coal strike. That is in the past. The miners are back at work. You can not cure the nearly five months of idleness that has occurred. Ample coal can now be produced. The greatest trouble at the present is the transportation situation. Last week we had a production of about 6,000,000 tons of soft coal. That was substantially the present carrying capacity of the coal-loading railroads of this country. Of course, to increase the output of a mine is futile unless you increase the capacity of the railroads to carry the coal to the man who needs it. This bill will have some little effect in providing for the distribution of that 6,000,000 tons, but that is near the capacity of the coal-loading carriers of this country. What are you going to do? You are going to leave the coal there. It will not go to the bin, to the grate, or the furnace without trains to carry it. It will not go where it is needed. If you increase the coal production of this country to 10,000,000 tons, you will simply have to dump three or four million tons a week at the mines.

The trouble with the situation is transportation, and it is getting worse all the time. Yet we find that the administration has abandoned its efforts to end the rail strike, and Congress sits supine. We are going to have suffering during this coming winter, not merely for lack of coal, but for other necessaries of life. There is going to be a lot of distress on the part of business, due to this transportation situation. Yet nothing is being done. The administration is leaving the parties to the rail strike to fight it out among themselves.

The transportation situation is getting worse all the time. I am glad that the administration proposes something with reference to coal. We had a good deal of talk during the last campaign about "wiggling" and "wobbling." Surely it is time for somebody in connection with this strike situation to remind the gentlemen composing the majority of the wiggling and wobbling and backing and filling that characterize the present administration in dealing with the present desperate situation.

Last January they were going to let the miners and the coal operators fight it out, but in June, when it looked as if the miners were going to win—when "the wrong man was down"—the administration demands that the dispute be arbitrated. Anybody who knows anything whatever about labor matters knows that it was foolish to talk to the miners about arbitrating then. They would starve first. I do not discuss whether they should have arbitrated. I am talking about practical things.

After a failure to get the miners to agree to arbitrate we had a thunderbolt in the way of a proclamation launched at their heads, and we were told what was going to be done by the soldiers. Soldiers do not dig coal. Having been a soldier myself, I know that "soldiering" does not mean work.

You may put soldiers 10 deep around every mine in the country and yet not produce a pound of coal. So when the President made his play and all except two of the governors said they were with him, everybody who did not know anything about the situation thought that the strike was over. But no more coal was produced than before.

We were told when the President came here the other day that he had three proposals for the industrial crisis that was on. First, he was going to arrange to protect aliens. Very important! Next, he was going to investigate coal production. Quite interesting, because a year hence we may have occasion for the information, but it has no relation whatever to the present strike situation. Next, the President advocated a coal-selling agency as an arm of the Federal Government.

A few days later we were told that the coal facts finding bill was all the administration was going to ask for. Two days passed and we were informed that the administration was going to ask us to provide for a fuel distributer, and also a bill was sent up to the committee creating the coal-selling agency and providing in one of its sections for a seizure of mines not being operated. The last bill was recalled before the committee had even begun to consider it.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Please excuse me.

Mr. KING. This is very important.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Everything that the gentleman says is important.

We were told only four days ago that we were going to have the railroads and mines seized when they could not be operated and that the Government would run them, and everybody began to think there was something doing.

A distinguished Senator, after an interview with the President, stood on the steps of the White House and said that desperate measures were going to be taken, but in the newspapers next morning there was an insinuation to the effect that the statement of the Senator was totally unauthorized and that he had no right to say anything.

Next we were told that nothing was going to be done with the railroads or with the mines except this measure now under consideration; that this is the only measure that is to be asked for.

It is absurd that the administration has no settled policy from one day to another. It is ridiculous that the administration is like a chameleon, changing color from hour to hour as it may confer with one Senator with certain views, then with another of different views, then with big business men with opposing opinions; that hops and skips in its policies as it passes from one industry to another and taking complexion from each and giving constantly changing blasts with every emotion that has stirred it, but all of which means nothing.

We must confront this desperate situation with courage and patriotism. We must take over railroad cars and see that they are repaired. If we are going to meet this situation, we have got to take over the railroads and operate them for the public interest. I agree with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] that this measure is entirely too mild. We have got to produce courage, even if it does mean getting the "Government into business"; we have got to have nerve if we expect to remedy the situation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CABLE). The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for one hour.

Mr. KRAUS. Mr. Chairman, this is the most important measure we have had up in peace times for more than a decade, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ten Members are present. A quorum is present.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think that the measure before the House to-day is the most important measure from the standpoint of the fundamentals of Government that has been before the House since I have been a Member. It comes at a time of great emergency. It comes at a time when prices of coal are high and there is an insistent demand on the part of the public for protection.

"Hard cases make bad law," and that is just as true with reference to legislative law as it is to the law laid down by judicial tribunals. Without this emergency, without this great desire to protect the people against what we think is profiteering, with an effort to calmly study this law and apply the principles of government and of political economy which we ordinarily would apply, this measure would not get more than 2 votes in this House; one of those that of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], who says he welcomes socialistic legislation, and the other that of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], who is the lone representative of that theory of government.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will have to pursue the course that he always pursues, and not yield.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I yielded to some gentlemen.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Well, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Surely the gentleman did not understand me to say that seriously. I simply said it sarcastically, as being of the character of legislation which is always denominated socialistic, but which really is not socialistic.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I accept the gentleman's explanation.

This measure, in my opinion, is not constitutional. I am not going to make an extended technical argument, not because it could not well be made with reference to this bill, but because in recent years the Members of the House have seemed to think that the Constitution of the United States was meant only for the judicial department of this Government, whereas as a matter of fact it is more binding upon us when we come to pass upon a law than it is upon the judges who finally pass upon it. It is our first duty, and the court looks upon the law as being constitutional and only holds it to be unconstitutional because it is unconstitutional beyond a reasonable doubt, for the reason that a Member of Congress who gives his sanction to legislation is presumed not to have violated his oath that he will support the Constitution of the United States.

When there is a measure like this and when one opposes such legislation the question is quickly asked, What do you propose? I am going to make a definite proposal by a substitute which I shall offer for this measure which will create a fuel administration, called a "fuel distributer" in the language of this bill, and give it the same powers that this measure affords, and in the same language, except the power to inquire into and fix the price of coal.

Now, some one says, "In other words, you propose to take out of this bill the provisions of it which relate to profiteering." Well, if you will read the hearings you will find that the priority orders have an indirect effect in a way to prevent profiteering. But as an economic principle, although we may by this measure be able for the next 10 days or 2 weeks following its enactment to curb in a measure the high prices of coal, I assert to you, measuring my words, that if we give this vast price-fixing machinery to the Government of the United States to be held over the coal industry of this country, which includes not only the big mines but also the wagon mines, the strip mines, and the small mines generally, that are able to produce coal only at high prices; if by this governmental agency we undertake to fix prices, you will let it be known to the industry of the country that their prices and profits are to be fixed by a governmental tribunal here in Washington, and then again fixed under the terms of this bill by another governmental tribunal, the Interstate Commerce Commission, which may accept or reject the advice of the fuel administrator, you will curtail the production of coal, and in the four months ensuing the total amount paid by the consuming public will be greatly in excess of what will be paid if you refuse to adopt this unworkable price-fixing machinery.

Everybody who ever studied political economy knows that fixing the price of any article deters the production. Is there any question about that? We had a fuel administration during the war, and I want to pause long enough to say that no one must confuse the measure proposed here with the fuel administration measure that we had in time of war. We had the war power at that time, and we had as complete power over the price fixing of coal as any State would have. We were sovereign under our war power in exactly the same position as the sovereign State governments. The war has ended, and we have no such power now, and this measure does not propose to grant any such power. But even with the advantage of being able to grasp the nettle firmly, the Federal machinery during the war did not produce very good results. I want to read to you from a work called Prices and Price Control During the War, by a distinguished professor of economics, Professor Litman, of the University of Illinois:

> The Fuel Administration in its handling of the coal situation during the first half of 1917 committed the mistake of considering the problem largely from one angle only, that of price. The sharp advance in price was attributed almost solely to exorbitant profits made by coal-mine owners and coal dealers; the remedy was sought in price fixing and in the establishment of margins. Not until shipments to Europe of food and munitions came to a standstill, because of lack of coal at the seaboard terminals, and not until the whole industrial war program of the country seemed to be on the point of collapse did the question of production and distribution of coal assume the importance it should have had from the very beginning. No adequate provisions were made during the summer and fall of 1917 to stimulate maximum output and early wide distribution. Consumers were holding off in the expectation of a fall in price, and they were encouraged in their attitude by the statements issued by the fuel administrator.
>
> Things went from bad to worse during that part of the year when reserves should have been accumulated by the users of coal. In the week of August 13 production reached its lowest point in the year.
>
> An unexpected climax came on January 16, 1918, when the fuel administrator issued one of the most drastic Government regulations brought about by the war. The order directed that all factories east of the Mississippi River be shut down for five days beginning January 18, 1918.

That order was to close every industry in the country for the period of nearly a week and thereafter for 10 weeks to close every industry on Mondays. It has been estimated that that order by the fuel administrator cost this country in loss $1,000,000,000. That was because in trying to help the people who were clamoring for help and to be saved from profiteering we created a machinery to take the place of the economic law of supply and demand, and the machinery failed. If it failed when we had absolute power to control it, what will it do when we undertake to control it with this hodgepodge legislation which I assert careful analysis shows to be first of doubtful validity and second so indefinite that no one can tell what it means?

I have a Supreme Court decision here which I am not going to read to you, because I would lose your interest and I do not want to do that. It is the Supreme Court decision holding the Lever food law unconstitutional in so far as it merely provided a penalty against persons who fixed unreasonable prices for their products. The Supreme Court held that that act was unconstitutional because it did not specifically define the offense. This law is the same. This law provides that the fuel administrator shall determine—

The prices normally and usually charged for such coal and other fuel and whether current prices, considering the costs of production and distribution, are just and reasonable.

That is what they are to find. Then they are to make their recommendation to the commission. Listen to what the commission is to do.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized and hereby directed—

It is not that they may do it, but they are directed to do it—to receive and consider recommendations and in its discretion issue orders—

Listen—

for priorities, for car service, embargoes—

And that means shutting down. It is not embargoes against territories alone, but embargoes against persons, copartnerships, corporations. It proposes, as far as the power is concerned, to grant to the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to say to any single person or any single operator or any single distributor of coal at any place, "You can not ship a pound of coal, because you are making an excessive profit." There is not any compulsion here on the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix the price of coal so that people may know when they enter into their contracts whether they are complying with the law. There is no compulsion to the fuel administration to do that. They may do that so as best to meet the emergency and to prevent extortion in prices charged for coal and other fuel, or they may leave the question of excessive profit to the consideration of individual cases. Just think of the magnitude of that power; the power to deny, not to interstate commerce alone, Mr. Chairman, although it might be possible that that bill could be amended so as to limit it to that, but this measure as now drawn gives them the power to say to a man who has fixed the price of his coal at $5 a ton, when they thought it ought to be $4.75 a ton, "You shall not ship a pound of that coal, either in interstate commerce or in intrastate commerce." Why? Because the question of car distribution given to the Interstate Commerce Commission is exclusive. It has been so construed.

Mr. Chairman, the Esch Act, which amended the interstate commerce act, gave to the Interstate Commerce Commission every power, so far as interstate commerce is concerned, that is contained in this measure. It gave the right to priority, it gave the right to car service, it gave the right for embargoes; and when I examined Commissioner Aitchison, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, he finally admitted to me that the only additional power the present bill gave them was the power of embargo. They had the power of embargo generally, but this bill gives them the power of embargo against the individual and the corporation in order to control prices.

When we fixed the prices in the fuel act during the war we provided that the maximum price should be fixed, and we protected the contracts made in good faith, and so forth. We also gave them a standard which is not contained here. In that act we said that in fixing the maximum price the commission shall allow the cost of production including the expense of operation, maintenance, depreciation, and depletion and to add thereto a reasonable profit, but in this measure they can only consider the price charged for such coal and other fuel, the cost of production, and distribution as to whether it is just and reasonable.

Now, let us take a look at this bill. In the first place it provides in section 5, which is the gist of the matter that the Interstate Commerce Commission is to issue such order or orders for priorities in car service, embargoes and other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier, and so forth. This is a new and independent act, and the language does not confine it to any common carrier, or to "carrier" as defined in the interstate commerce act, but it applies to every single carrier in the country. Then with reference to the language, "coal and other fuel," when we dealt with coal during the war we dealt with coal and coke, but you say here "coal and other fuel." That means coal, fuel oil, natural gas, coke, petroleum products, gasoline, kerosene, cordwood, and peat.

Do you know what you are doing? You are providing here for the right of the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix the price of oil, not upon its value, but what it costs to produce it. If you or any of your citizens go down to the oil regions and by 10 days' work strike an oil well that is worth a million dollars, under this provision what is it worth? [Applause.] Oh, the gentlemen may cheer that socialistic proposition of not rewarding those whose enterprise and perseverance is of such benefit to the public, but I say to gentlemen that the right to make contracts, the right to make profits, the freedom of the American citizen to enter into those contracts, which have been held sacred by the Congress of the United States even in an emergency, is a right that has built up this mighty Republic. [Applause.]

If you take away that right, what will happen? You say you want to aim legislation at the rich, but you take away the right of the individual to make any gain and profit beyond the 6 and 8 per cent plus the value of his work, and you make the rich class to-day the right class forever. You deprive us poor devils that have not anything of the privilege of ever acquiring a competence in this world.

My friends, do not think that you are only striking at coal; you are striking at oil, and also at all the different kinds of fuel in this proposition. You gentlemen who are looked upon as the guardians of the cotton interest when you strike this blow you must expect that the cotton industry which has looked to you for its protection, as its friend, will also receive the blow. When you have passed this measure, a proposition that through the Interstate Commerce Commission, through the commerce clause of the Constitution, you can fix the price of any necessity, you gentlemen who are looked to by the wheat industry to care for it, are striking a blow at that wheat industry. You men who have boot and shoe manufactories in your district are starting out on a legislative policy that will fix the price of boots and shoes. There is no stopping place. This is peace-time legislation. It is advocated by Secretary Hoover, for whom I have the highest respect, but it was his duty to fix prices during the war, and he carried out a policy of price fixing and has become so engrossed in it that he does not realize, in my opinion, that when we pass this legislation granting this power we indorse a means for the destruction of all that is best in this mighty Republic.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the present law gives ample authority. If you will examine the hearings you will find where I asked Mr. Commissioner Aitchison what he obtained in this law in addition to the powers already granted, and he admitted that it was only the right of an embargo, and when I asked him what the terms in section 5 meant which gives the commission the power to take such other measures, and so forth, necessary to prevent extortion, his only answer is found in the hearings on page 47. I said: "I did not want to question you about that, but I thought perhaps you had something specific in mind by the use of that term." Mr. Aitchison said: "It was a general catch-all phrase which was intended to take any effective procedure or method to accomplish the purpose of the act."

Are you willing by any general catchall phrase to give to the Interstate Commerce Commission—even if it may be done legally—are you willing as a matter of wisdom of legislation to give the commission a catchall power which will enable them to do anything they want to in respect to the transportation in order to prevent alleged profiteering on coal? I deny that the Congress of the United States has the constitutional power to forbid the shipment of coal or any other commodity in time of peace upon the arbitrary question of the amount that is to be paid by the man to whom it is to be shipped.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to know whether the gentleman believes that anybody who sells coal or who has the power to sell it has the right to charge anything he likes, whether the charge be just or unjust? I should think from the gentleman's argument that is what he means.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I say that, so far as the United States Government is concerned, so far as the powers under the commerce clause are concerned, in peace time men have a right by contract to fix their own price. We have a right, if it is necessary in order to carry on interstate commerce, to take over mines in a constitutional way; but we have no right under a guise of the power over interstate commerce by some subordinate official, without any right of appeal, without any right to go into court, to say to a man, "You can not sell your coal for $4 a ton, because some tribunal thinks, judging from the cost of production and the cost of distribution, that you ought to sell it for $3.75 a ton," and you can not say where two men agree to a contract, one to sell for $3.75 to the other, who has a solemn contract with somebody to deliver it to him for $4, that one of those men may deliver the coal and the other may not, merely upon the arbitrary question of the amount they propose to charge for the coal.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there any power anywhere that can say that?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Why, certainly. The State of Indiana passed a law fixing the price of coal.

Mr. MADDEN. What was the price?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Oh, the price was a proper price. Does the gentleman propose to fix a price that is not legal?

Mr. MADDEN. I think you ought to fix a price that will not compel the consumer of coal to pay unfair and unjust prices to those who mine it. [Applause.]

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Very well. If the gentleman thinks that, what about the children who wear shoes and who are barefoot because they can not pay the price exacted by the shoe manufacturers? What is the difference between that and any other necessary of life? None whatever.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. For a short one.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the States have authority to fix the price in so far as interstate shipments are concerned?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. They have not.

Mr. MILLS. And therefore the measure which he suggests would be wholly ineffective to protect any State that did not produce coal?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I do not know just what measures would best bring the price of coal down. I know that this measure will not do it, and this measure goes beyond our constitutional power. It undertakes to deal in a way that we have not the right to deal. It would fix the arbitrary question of the cost of an article as determining whether it shall go into commerce, both interstate and intrastate. They say that we are doing it under the war power, and you will see a committee amendment reciting that the emergency arises out of the war. The proponents say that we are doing it under constitutional provisions with reference to post offices and post roads, and also with reference to taking care of departments of the Government, and then they bring in the interstate commerce clause and put it on that; but if this is war-time legislation, it is permanent. Do not imagine that you are passing temporary legislation, because, so far as this Congress is concerned, it is permanent. We create it. We set it in motion. We provide that it shall run until the emergency ends, and that then the President may terminate it. He is not required to do so. It is not said in the bill that it shall be his duty to do so. It is permanent legislation, so far as we are concerned. Then, if he should suspend the operation of the law, we give the right to any future President, if he finds an emergency to exist, to set it in action again, and there is not anything in the law that ever stops it when it is set in action a second time.

Gentlemen say that it is temporary and that we can repeal it, but if you give this power into the hands of the Executive, you can not take it away from him against his will over his veto without a majority of two-thirds of this Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman give us some idea of the substitute that he proposes to offer?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes. The substitute which I propose to offer provides that by reason of the shortage in coal and railroad equipment, and in order that the Interstate Commerce Commission may have adequate information concerning the fuel situation, the President is authorized for a period of one year to appoint a fuel distributer. Then I follow the language of the bill, except to cut out the price-fixing provisions. But that would not be of any value unless we already have the power under present laws to completely control distribution. In subdivision 15 of section 1, written into the transportation act of 1920, it is provided that whenever the commission is of the opinion that a shortage of equipment, congestion of traffic, or other emergency requiring immediate action exists in any section of the country, it shall have, and is thereby given, the power, if it so orders, without any complaint, and so forth, to make just and reasonable directions with respect to car service, without regard to ownership, and so forth, which, in its opinion, will best promote service in the interest of the public and the commerce of the people, and it shall have the power to give directions for preference or priority in transportation, embargoes, or movements of traffic under terms at such time and for such periods as it may determine. The pretense that we are giving additional powers here is not well founded, unless, indeed, it is intended to do what the language of the bill really does—but which its proponents dispute—which is to deal with the whole question without reference to the question of interstate commerce. That is what the measure actually does. Of course, the committee may amend it. The language deals solely with carriers, and does not define what carriers are.

It gives broad, sweeping powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission to make any order respecting car service. It does not limit it to interstate shipments, and I think that the Interstate Commerce Commission has plenary powers over the commerce of the United States. That view is not entertained by very many people, but I have not any question that whenever the proposition shall come squarely before the Supreme Court, it will be held that Congress has the power to legislate with reference to all of the commerce. We do it in this measure. We legislate with reference to State and interstate commerce, and if you will look at the hearings on page 5 you will see that Mr. Commissioner Aitchison said to Mr. BARKLEY:

> Well, I take it, Mr. BARKLEY, that while the question of car distribution has never been passed on as between the powers of the State and the Federal Government that whatever scheme is hit upon by Congress must necessarily control interstate commerce as well as intrastate commerce in its general scope.

Then, in this connection, let me quote what Mr. HUDDLESTON says on page 7:

> I have in mind that where coal producers are permitted to charge for intrastate coal a higher price than they are allowed to obtain for interstate coal, they will discriminate against interstate coal, and the result, or the effect of this bill, would be to greatly diminish by diversion the supply of coal for interstate purposes, so that it seems to me that in order to deal with the subject intelligently we are compelled to deal with the whole situation.

To which Mr. Aitchison replied:

> I believe we can prevent the diversion from interstate commerce of an undue proportion of the cars.

In other words, a coal man who is shipping in interstate commerce and intrastate commerce who fails to carry out the order with respect to the price of coal will be denied any cars for any kind of shipment. That is what is proposed to be done. Oh, you say, what is wrong with keeping the people from being robbed by the coal barons? Mr. Chairman, I have a block coal field in my district. That is a peculiar kind of coal.

It costs about $1.25 more per ton to produce, and sells for about $1.40 or $1.50 more per ton than the ordinary bituminous coal. When this question of coal control was under the charge of Doctor Garfield, he fixed the price of bituminous coal, and he did not know that there was in existence this field of block coal. I went down with one of the block-coal dealers, and was told that Doctor Garfield would investigate it. In the meantime these coal mines were shut down, because they could not produce and sell at that price, and it was a period of weeks before the order was changed. I had wagon mines in my State that wanted to produce coal. There was dire need for it. They were anxious to do it and the people were anxious to pay the necessary additional price to have them dig the coal in these mines and haul it in wagons and put it into the cars. They were shut down because if they charged what they could get and what would have been reasonable they would have exceeded the fixed price and would have been subjected to dire penalties. The question of fixing a price in an emergency is not an easy task. Individual hardships ought not to matter when a great public interest is involved. There are going to be individual hardships; they are going to multiply. There are going to be individual difficulties; they will multiply. But as a result of all these multiplied difficulties you will curtail production by hundreds of thousands of tons, while the people are anxious to pay an additional price at these wagon mines and other mines of expensive production in order to get it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do I understand that the proponents of this measure contend that it gives the right to absolutely fix and regulate the price of coal in interstate commerce?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. There is not a particle of question about it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman give the language where it does that?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Certainly. I will read the testimony of Mr. Hoover and Mr. Aitchison, who testified that practically the whole purpose of this bill was to fix the price of coal, and unless you agreed to it you could not have your coal.

Mr. MADDEN. It was to prevent extortion.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. All right. How are you going to prevent extortion unless you agree first on a reasonable price and not to go beyond it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope the gentleman will not be diverted. Give us the section of the bill that furnishes that plenary power.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The first section, among other things, reads that "emergency causes extortion." And subsection (c) of section 3, on page 3, reads:

the prices normally and usually charged for such coal and other fuel, and whether current prices, considering the costs of production and distribution, are just and reasonable.

Then he makes the recommendation to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Then section 5 says:

The Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized, and is hereby directed, to receive and consider the said recommendation of the Federal fuel distributor and in its discretion to issue such order or orders for priorities in car service, embargoes, and other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier or region, municipality, community, person, copartnership, or corporation, and to take any other necessary and appropriate steps for priority in car service and in equitable distribution of coal or other fuel so as best to meet the emergency, prevent extortion in prices charged for coal and other fuel, and promote the general welfare.

There is not any question about the purpose of this act.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman object to regulating extortion? The gentleman would be willing to prevent extortion in the sale of coal or price of coal to the consumer?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Has the gentleman anything further as to that question?

Mr. MADDEN. That is the question I am asking.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Certainly I am unwilling that the Congress of the United States shall regulate the price of products in this country. It is all right to call it extortion or profiteering, but when you put it in cold legislation, limited by the terms of legislative language, you fix the price whenever you undertake to determine the price.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not fix the price.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If this does not provide the machinery for fixing the price and blocking the shipments in commerce where they think the prices are too high, Mr. Hoover and Mr. Aitchison, and the gentlemen who are back of it, and every member of the committee on which I serve who favor the bill, will be grievously disappointed.

Mr. MADDEN. It prevents the use of equipment by people who are trying to charge ten times what they should charge for a commodity.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman uses extravagant language. This gives the right to determine what is a reasonable price for coal, does it not?

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. VAILE. How can you determine what is an unreasonable price unless you first determine what is a reasonable price?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Let me refer to the testimony.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. DENISON. When Mr. Hoover was testifying on the bill, I find on page 20 of the testimony that Mr. Sanders asked a question and said:

Mr. SANDERS. As I understand it, the way this is intended to work out is about as follows: The "Federal fuel distributer" shall ascertain, much in the way that Doctor Garfield did, what he regards as a reasonable price and to cover the entire country so far as coal proposed to be shipped in interstate commerce is concerned; that after ascertaining those prices he shall then make a recommendation to the Interstate Commerce Commission that they shall issue priorities and permit the use of cars only to those persons and corporations who comply in their dealings with the prices so fixed.

Then Secretary Hoover said:

That is approximately the plan, plus the fact that the Federal fuel distributer in all those matters will act in cooperation with the State authorities.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I thank my colleague from Illinois for reading part of the hearings so far as Mr. Hoover is concerned. That states the proposed plan clearly. There is no question, gentlemen, but that that is the purpose of the bill. If it does not do that it will not do anything, in the opinion of those who drafted the measure.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. What is the penalty for violation of section 5?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The penalty is that you can not ship your coal.

Mr. YOUNG. There is no other penalty fixed in the bill?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. No; that is all. [Applause.]

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. As to the scope of it, would it prevent the wagon mines, such as have been referred to, from producing coal and sending it within the State where it was produced?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. It would?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes; under the present language of the bill it would, without question.

Mr. GARNER. If this bill does not enable them to fix the price of coal it is useless.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. It is useless to prevent profiteering unless that is what it is for.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. As I understand from the gentleman's study of this bill and a study of the Esch-Cummins Act, it is his opinion that all authority proposed to be conferred by this bill on the Interstate Commerce Commission has been conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission by the Esch-Cummins bill with one single exception, namely, the power to establish an embargo.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Against an individual. They have the power to establish a general embargo under the Esch-Cummins Act.

Mr. OLIVER. Only in that respect is the authority granted here different from the Esch-Cummins bill, is it not?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. The price of the commodity, however, enters into the conditions on which the authority here vested is granted?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes; if it is carried out in accordance with the intent of the act, the price determines whether he can ship or not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman believe that under the Esch-Cummins Act the Interstate Commerce Commission could order priority of distribution or declare embargoes upon the consideration of extortion in prices?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I do not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is the difference?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I think that would be arbitrary, unreasonable regulation; and while a body having the power in that way may issue regulations, yet those regulations must not be arbitrary, and the classification must not be arbitrary. And I say to you there is no power in the commission or in the Government or in the Congress to fix the right to ship coal or any other fuel or any other product upon the sole criterion of what the shipper has agreed to take for it when it reaches its destination.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman stated a while ago that this measure authorizes an embargo against a coal operator. As I understand it, it also authorizes an embargo against any user of coal if they find that the use they seek to make of it is not quite so important as they feel the use that some other community may put it to may be.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The embargo is intended to apply to the man who charges a price that they think is too high.

Mr. OLIVER. When you speak of an embargo against the municipality, a municipality is not engaged in the business of mining or selling coal. What is the purpose of levying an embargo against the municipality?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I do not know. This bill reaches oil and electricity and gas and gasoline, and if municipal authorities are anxious to give their people coal and should go down and pay $6.50 a ton for it when they ought to have paid only $5.50, it may be intended that that municipality shall be embargoed and not permitted to receive any coal.

Mr. WYANT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. WYANT. If there should be 100 per cent car supply and 50 per cent of the mines refuse to sell, or did sell at increased rates, then I understand the Interstate Commerce Commission could prevent the 50 per cent of the mines selling at all?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. It would prevent them from shipping the coal, and if they could not ship the coal they could not operate. If the commission should have cars left and there was an operator at some place who was charging 5 per cent more than they thought he ought to charge, that would keep the cars empty.

Mr. WYANT. Taking that as an extreme case, it would limit the production 50 per cent?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes. In other words, you have taken the transportation facilities of this mighty Republic and by that avenue of the transportation of this whole country you undertake to penalize the man who charges too much for his product. It will not work.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman's idea is that if a bill of this kind is enacted into law 50 per cent of the coal operators would simply refuse to produce because they could not obtain extortionate prices?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I do not know, but I know that a great many operators in my home district, the block-coal and the wagon-mine operators, stopped for weeks because they did not dare violate the law. And in many States the operators producing coal from thin veins were stopped for weeks.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. But the reason why they did not mine was that they could not get a price that would compensate them for mining the coal?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes. Unless a man has a market for his coal he can not operate, for there is no way of piling up coal. That is not a successful way to do it. A small operator would not have the means of meeting his pay roll. This coal-mining business is a continuous operation. The shipping must run along continuously or the production stops.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. Is the gentleman familiar with cases where mines contract in advance a good many months to sell coal?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. This would affect those mines and stop shipment?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Certainly. It destroys every contract. We have a right, perhaps, under the Constitution to destroy contracts. The States have not the right. When we put in the other Fuel Administration we protected them and put safeguards around them in time of war. Now, in peace time, by using a lot of language about an "emergency" we do not protect anybody. We propose to put on the public this measure which will not be helpful for more than 10 days.

Let me say to my Republican friends that if you put this measure into operation and let the public believe you will stop profiteering in coal by this thing, if they think they are going to get coal at low prices by this thing they will sing your praises now, but along about the 1st of November they will not be singing your praises. They will charge your government and your administration with every exorbitant price. They will be charging you with every single difficulty that is encountered. They will be charging the administration with every single difficulty that is encountered with reference to fuel.

Mr. ROBSION. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I will yield to the gentleman, and then it is my desire to yield the floor.

Mr. ROBSION. It has been my observation, and no doubt the gentleman has observed the same thing, that the excessive profits on coal are not confined to the operators alone. Now as I understand the effect of this bill really will be to fix the price as between the operator and the wholesaler or retailer in the various cities and sections of the country. But is there anything in this bill that allows the fixing of the price charged by the wholesaler or the retailer to the consumer, unless the coal enters into interstate commerce after it reaches the wholesaler or retailer?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Of course, if a man in Illinois sells to a coal dealer in Minneapolis, if this bill is declared constitutional, you can fix the price and say that he shall pay only $4 a ton for it; but when he gets it over there in Minneapolis he can sell it to those people of the Northwest, who do not know what he paid for it, and charge them $16 a ton and he will not be violating this law.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LONDON. If you can fix the price of coal you can fix the price of bread or any other necessity, can you not?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. If you confer upon the fuel administrator the right to determine what shall be a reasonable price for coal, you may appoint a meat administrator to determine the reasonable price of meat and every other article, can you not?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes; this covers coal and oil and a dozen other things.

Mr. LONDON. I want to emphasize the force of the gentleman's argument.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I thank the gentleman. I make the point that if you grant this power in the Federal Government you destroy private property in this country, because private property means nothing unless you can contract with regard to it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. When Commissioner Aitchison testified so much before our committee about profiteering, did he say anything about reducing the exorbitant freight rates on coal that now tend so much to increase the price to the consumer?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I thought the gentleman was going to talk about something connected with this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. For instance, coal down in my district that sells at the mine for $2.50 a ton costs $5.50 a ton to haul it from the mines in Alabama to Illinois.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Of course, Mr. Aitchison and all of us did not go into what was unloaded onto the Republican administration when the Democratic administration turned the railroads over to us, when they were running at a deficit, and when the people were paying for it. If you follow this policy you are going to have the people paying all the time.

I want here to make a detailed analysis of this monstrous measure:

The measure which is reported by the majority of the committee purports to do two things—to give additional powers with reference to the distribution of coal and other fuel, and to create a fuel distributer who shall gather and transmit to the Interstate Commerce Commission recommendations and data with reference to prices from which the Commission is to curb the profiteer by refusing him the right to transport in commerce.

The hearings will disclose that the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission under the present law are sufficient for every purpose of distribution, and that while the powers granted by this act to the commission may in general terms be broader than those granted by the original law, yet the additional grant was meant to furnish the needed authority to carry out the price-fixing plan.

I am quite willing that there shall be a fuel administration created to gather and furnish to the Interstate Commerce Commission all available information relative to the fuel situation and make recommendations so that the commission may by orders with reference to car service, priorties and embargoes, make such distribution as will meet the emergency.

I do not however, subscribe to the doctrine of creating a price-fixing agency, particularly in the manner in which this proposed law would create such agency and have the observance of the prices enforced by means of refusal to permit shipment.

The right to car service by a common carrier was a common-law right, and under the terms of the present interstate commerce act is carefully provided for.

> It shall be the duty of every carrier by railroad subject to this act to furnish safe and adequate car service and to establish, observe, and enforce just and reasonable rules, regulations, and practices with respect to car service; and every unjust and unreasonable rule, regulation, and practice with respect to car service is prohibited and declared to be unlawful. (Sec. 1, par. 11, of the interstate commerce act.)
>
> The commission is hereby authorized by general or special orders to require all carriers by railroad subject to this act, or any of them, to file with it from time to time their rules and regulations with respect to car service, and the commission may, in its discretion, direct that such rules and regulations shall be incorporated in their schedules showing rates, fares, and charges for transportation, and be subject to any or all of the provisions of this act relating thereto. (Sec. 1, par. 13, of the interstate commerce act.)

It is recognized in the existing law, however, that situations may exist requiring the movement of certain products very rapidly in the public interest, and the present law provides:

> Whenever the commission is of opinion that shortage of equipment, congestion of traffic, or other emergency requiring immediate action exists in any section of the country the commission shall have, and it is hereby given authority, either upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, at once, if it so orders, without answer or other formal pleading by the interested carrier or carriers, and with or without notice, hearing, or the making or filing of a report, according as the commission may determine, (a) to suspend the operation of any or all rules, regulations, or practices then established with respect to car service without regard to the ownership as between carriers of locomotives, cars, and other vehicles, during such emergency as in its opinion will best promote the service in the interest of the public and the commerce of the people, upon such terms of compensation as between the carriers as they may agree upon, or in the event of their disagreement, as the commission may after subsequent hearing find to be just and reasonable; (c) to require such joint or common use of terminals, including main-line track or tracks, for all reasonable distance outside of such terminals, as in its opinion will best meet the emergency and serve the public interest, and upon such terms as between the carriers as they may agree upon, or in the event of their disagreement, as the commission may after subsequent hearing find to be just and reasonable; and (d) to give directions for preference or priority in transportation, embargoes, or movement of traffic under permits, at such time and for such periods as it may determine, and to modify, change, suspend, or annul them. In time of war or threatened war the President may certify to the commission that it is essential to the national defense and security that certain traffic shall have preference or priority in transportation, and the commission shall, under the power herein conferred, direct that such preference or priority be afforded.

Of course, this section with reference to car service applies to all carriers engaged in interstate commerce, and applies irrespective of whether the cars are to be shipped, used for State commerce, or interstate commerce.

After providing for the organization of the Federal fuel administration and giving the fuel administrator power to obtain information and make recommendations to the commission, the proposed bill provides:

The Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized, and is hereby directed, to receive and consider the said recommendations of the Federal fuel distributer, and in its discretion to issue such order or orders for priorities in car service, embargoes, and other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier or region, municipality, community, person, copartnership, or corporation, and to take any other necessary and appropriate steps for priority in car service and for the equitable distribution of coal or other fuel so as best to meet the emergency, prevent extortion in prices charged for coal and other fuel, and promote the general welfare.

It will be noted that, amongst other things, this section gives to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to put an embargo against individuals, copartnerships, and corporations with the evident intent of granting the commission arbitrary power to refuse the right of shipment to any person or corporation whom the commission determines is making profits not in keeping with its views.

Remembering that the act is based upon the war power, upon the general-welfare clause, upon the clause with reference to post offices and post roads, and provisions of the Constitution other than the commerce clause, as well as the provision relative to the commerce clause, it is quite clear that the power granted by the present act, which does not limit the orders of the commission to interstate commerce, applies to all movements of coal and other fuel. This proposed measure does not limit the act and the commission to carriers, first, as described in the interstate commerce act, and, second, as carriers by railroad and by water, but applies to all carriers of all kinds whatever. It is not even limited to a common carrier, so that if a person is hauling his own coal and is not a common carrier an order might be well directed to him.

It might also be remembered that the act is not limited to coal, but applies to all fuels which includes, inter alia, coal, petroleum products, oil, gasoline, kerosene, coke, peet, cordwood, bagesse, natural gas, artificial gas, and electricity.

Their keen anxiety to drag in other remote powers in the Constitution which might possibly justify this measure has led the proponents to hope to fortify the present measure. Thinking that no one of the clauses of the Constitution in itself would justify the measure, they seem to think that when all are added together ample justification was afforded. I think they have used five different grants of authority. I was never an expert in mathematics, but my recollection of five times naught was naught, and not five.

However, we can eliminate the commerce clause, because the scope of the act is not limited to interstate commerce in any sense of the word and, as the Supreme Court held in the Federal employers' liability act cases, the court can not separate that part which might relate to interstate commerce from the part relating to interstate commerce and the whole act would have to fall so far as the commerce clause is concerned.

In my opinion, if it were strictly limited to interstate commerce, I do not think that Congress has the power to delegate to any tribunal the power to arbitrarily refuse a shipper the right to ship coal upon the ground that he is charging too much for his coal.

With the commerce clause out of the way, the war power and emergency idea fades away, because the measure is permanent legislation so far as the Congress is concerned. Some one may say that Congress has the power to repeal the measure. Of course, it always has that power with reference to any measure, but when this measure has passed the Congress it becomes permanent legislation so far as we are concerned. To be sure, we place it in the power of the Executive to terminate it. We do not say, however, that when the emergency ends that it shall be his duty to terminate it, but we provide—

Whenever the President shall be of the opinion that the existing emergency has passed he may by proclamation so declare, and thereupon the exercise of the powers conferred under this act shall be suspended.

He is not required to do so, even though he finds the emergency ended. It is not made his duty to do so, and unless he shall do so it becomes permanent legislation.

If the President should suspend the operation of the act it may be called into existence by him or by any future President at any time; and when once called into power there is no provision for ever terminating it, so that the measure is permanent law.

It does not suffice to assert our right to repeal it. Once this arbitrary power is delegated to the executive department there is no way to get the power away from the executive department against the will of the Chief Executive except by a two-thirds vote. In other words, by using the veto power the President may make this legislation last until two-thirds of the Congress is willing to override his veto. This, of course, does not apply to the present President alone but applies to any future Executive who may revive the measure.

This proposed regulation is such an arbitrary regulation and gives favors and privileges and imposes penalties and hardships upon such an arbitrary basis that it is clearly invalid.

Let us examine the alleged "price-fixing and profit-regulating" provision. We should disabuse our minds at once with any thought that there is the slightest similarity from a legal standpoint between this price-fixing provision and the provision for the fixing of prices by the fuel administration under the amendment to the food control act.

The germ of this colossal power is found in the provision of section 1 of the bill, that the emergency "causes extortion"; the provision of section 3 which authorized the Federal fuel distributer to ascertain—

(c) The prices normally and usually charged for such coal and other fuel and whether current prices, considering the costs of production and distribution, are just and reasonable.

And in the same section, that—

The Federal fuel administrator shall make appropriate recommendations pertaining thereto to the Interstate Commerce Commission—

And in section 5, which provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized—to issue such order or orders for priorities in car service, embargoes, and other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier or region, municipality, community, person, copartnership, or corporation, and to take any other necessary and appropriate steps for priority in car service and for the equitable distribution of coal or other fuel so as best to meet the emergency, prevent extortion in prices charged for coal and other fuel, and promote the general welfare.

Contrast this with the provision in the law for fuel distribution which was under the war powers and went directly to the task of price fixing. The provisions of this act provide:

SEC. 25. That the President of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, whenever and wherever in his judgment necessary for the efficient prosecution of the war, to fix the price of coal and coke, wherever and whenever sold, either by producer or dealer, to establish rules for the regulation of and to regulate the method of production, sale, shipment, distribution, apportionment, or storage thereof among dealers and consumers, domestic or foreign; said authority and power may be exercised by him in each case through the agency of the Federal Trade Commission during the war or for such part of said time as in his judgment may be necessary. * * *

Having completed its inquiry respecting any commodity in any locality it shall, if the President has decided to fix the prices at which any such commodity shall be sold by producers and dealers generally, fix and publish maximum prices for both producers of and dealers in any such commodity, which maximum prices shall be observed by all producers and dealers until further action thereon is taken by the commission.

In fixing maximum prices for producers the commission shall allow the cost of production, including the expense of operation, maintenance, depreciation, and depletion, and shall add thereto a just and reasonable profit.

In fixing such prices for dealers, the commission shall allow the cost to the dealer and shall add thereto a just and reasonable sum for his profit in the transaction.

The maximum prices so fixed and published shall not be construed as invalidating any contract in which prices are fixed, made in good faith, prior to the establishment and publication of maximum prices by the commission.

Whoever shall, with knowledge that the prices of any such commodity have been fixed as herein provided, ask, demand, or receive a higher price, or whoever shall, with knowledge that the regulations have been prescribed as herein provided, violate or refuse to conform to any of the same, shall, upon conviction, be punished by fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both. Each independent transaction shall constitute a separate offense.

There it will be seen that the prices to be fixed include cost of production, including the expense of operation, maintenance, depreciation, and depletion, and a reasonable profit.

One provision in the present measure, however, is the question of prices normally and usually charged, and whether the current prices, considering the cost of production and distribution, are just and reasonable. This furnishes no legal standard for determining profits, and if the law undertook to meet a violation of it by providing penalties against making more than a "just and reasonable charge," it would be clearly unconstitutional under the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States v. Cohen Grocery Co. (255 U. S. 81), which held the antiprofiteering provisions of the Lever Act unconstitutional.

I quote from the decision, as follows:

The sole remaining inquiry, therefore, is the certainty or uncertainty of the text in question—that is, whether the words "That it is hereby made unlawful for any person willfully * * * to make any unjust or unreasonable rate or charge in handling or dealing in or with any necessaries," constituted a fixing by Congress of an ascertainable standard of guilt and are adequate to inform persons accused of violation thereof of the nature and cause of the accusation against them. That they are not, we are of the opinion, so clearly results from their mere statement as to render elaboration on the subject wholly unnecessary. Observe that the section forbids no specific or definite act. It confines the subject matter of the investigation which it authorizes to no element essentially inhering in the transaction as to which it provides. It leaves open, therefore, the widest conceivable inquiry, the scope of which no one can foresee and the result of which no one can foreshadow or adequately guard against. In fact, we see no reason to doubt the soundness of the observation of the court below in its opinion to the effect that to attempt to enforce the section would be the exact equivalent of an effort to carry out a statute which in terms merely penalized and punished all acts detrimental to the public interest when unjust and unreasonable in the estimation of the court and jury. And that this is not a mere abstraction finds abundant demonstration in the cases now before us, since in the briefs in these cases the conflicting results which have arisen from the painstaking attempts of enlightened judges in seeking to carry out the statute in cases brought before them are vividly portrayed. * * * And, again, this condition would be additionally obvious if we stopped to recur to the persistent efforts which, the records disclose, were made by administrative officers, doubtless inspired by a zealous effort to discharge their duty, to establish a standard of their own to be used as a basis to render the section possible of execution.

That it results from the consideration which we have stated that the section before us was void for repugnancy to the Constitution is not open to question. (United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 219–220; United States v. Brewer, 139 U. S. 278, 288; Todd v. United States, 158 U. S. 278, 282; and see United States v. Sharp, 27 Fed. Cas. 1041, 1043; Chicago & Northwestern Railway Co. v. Dey, 35 Fed. Rep. 866, 876; Tozer v. United States, 52 Fed. Rep. 917, 919–920; United States v. Capital Traction Co., 34 App. D. C. 592; United States v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 242 U. S. 208, 237–238.)

In other words, there is nothing in this measure which requires either the Federal fuel distributer or the Interstate Commerce Commission to definitely fix the price so that those proposing to enter into contracts will know beforehand what is lawful and what is unlawful. The fuel distributer may fix prices and publish the prices so fixed, may make recommendations to the Interstate Commerce Commission that those agreeing to such prices shall have the right to ship, but the Interstate Commerce Commission may refuse to abide by the recommendations of the fuel administrator and may conclude that notwithstanding his prices certain individuals and corporations are charging extortionate prices and place an embargo against such individuals and corporations.

Since the Supreme Court has held such an indefinite law invalid, it seems quite clear that a regulation which upon its face deprives the owner of property of the right to ship it is invalid.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will pardon me. I must really yield the floor. Gentlemen, I appreciate your sitting here so patiently to listen to my statement of my views on this question. I am very much in earnest about this subject. I hope the membership of this House will not be swept off their feet by the clamor against the profiteer and all of these other cries which are intended to incite prejudice in the minds of the people against anyone who makes a profit. I know that there are coal profiteers. I know that whenever there is a shortage of any product in this country there is an excessive profit made in it; but if you create a fuel administration to take care of the distribution of coal in accordance with the amendment I shall offer, and let the Interstate Commerce Commission use the powers that it has, and keep out of this price-fixing scheme, you will best promote the interest and welfare of every man, woman, and child in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back six minutes of his time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Chairman, I regret the necessity for this legislation, but I accept the responsibility of acting upon it as a duty personal to me to support it.

There is no question about the great factor that coal is in the social and industrial life of this Nation. There is no doubt how essential it is for the heating of the home, for the running of the factories, and for carrying on the normal functions and business of the Nation. Scarcely any commodity that goes into the markets or moves in the channels of commerce is of more vital importance. At the present time we have a shortage in the current supply of coal of over 15,000,000 tons. We have an additional shortage due to the underuse of coal awaiting an adequate supply for the running of our factories and other enterprises. The possible distribution of the supply of coal to meet the needs of the United States is limited by two means at the present time. One is underproduction. Last week only a little over 6,000,000 tons were mined, when the Nation required 12,000,000 or 13,000,000 tons in order to prepare to meet the emergency ahead of us. In addition to that we have the limited means of distributing coal by decreased and deteriorated railroad and transportation facilities. Probably 8,000,000 or 9,000,000 tons per week is the maximum that can be transported, when we need 12,000,000 or 13,000,000 tons a week. That is the question which presents itself to us. According to the testimony of Secretary Hoover, it is going to take at least 15 weeks before the coal supply to the consumers can meet the normal needs of the country.

Now, what are we going to do about it? We have the power, which we can exercise, of ameliorating this condition, or we can refuse to exercise that power. There is no question but that for 15 weeks to come those who supply coal to meet the needs of this Nation, unless we do something, are going to have it in their power to impose on the consumers of this Nation practically any price they see fit. We can not escape the responsibility to-day. There is no doubt about one thing, and that is that somebody is going to fix the price that the consumers are going to pay. That price is going to be fixed by one of two parties. It is going to be fixed by those who supply coal and who have a selfish interest in making it high in order that the money may be collected from the people of this country and diverted into their own pockets, or the power is going to be exercised on the part of the people of this country against that extortion. So you may regret the situation; it is an unpleasant duty to exercise this power; but, in my judgment, it will be a far greater lapse of duty if the Congress fails to exercise it. [Applause.]

What is the proposition before us? Those who ship coal object to the Interstate Commerce Commission exercising the power of fixing what price that coal shall bear if it is transported by rail in interstate commerce. Nevertheless the fact is that these operators and buyers of coal will ship it through the transportation system whose rates are regulated by the same body as those to whose rate regulation they refuse to submit. If the transportation companies were not limited by law or by the Interstate Commerce Commission the railroads themselves could become profiteers on these necessities of the people of this country. They could set prices on transportation practically without limit and the people of the Nation would have to bear the expense. But that will not happen because of the exercise of the very power that we invoke here to-day. Why was the power given to the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix the railroad rates? The primary purpose was to protect the people of the United States against extortion. The source and reason for the exercise of that power is the same that we invoke to-day to prevent extortion in the matter of coal.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. And under the operation of that law are not freight rates higher than they ever were before?

Mr. LEA of California. That is true, but it has no relation to this subject. That is a question of cost and administration.

This is an important question and I was glad to have the viewpoint as ably expressed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS]. The Constitution of the United States confers on Congress the duty of regulating commerce among the several States. That is one of the greatest powers, one of the most flexible powers of the Congress of the United States. It has been developed and is an expanding power. Some time ago the Supreme Court of the United States spoke with reference to this power of Congress and said:

Subject to such restrictions as are reposed by the Constitution upon the exercise of all power, the power of Congress over interstate and international commerce is as full and complete as is the power of any State over its domestic commerce.

It further said:

Every instrumentality of interstate commerce may be reached and controlled by national authority, so far as to compel it to respect the rules for such commerce lawfully established by Congress.

Now, have the States exercised their power? They have fixed the price of gas, they have fixed the price of electricity and of water. They have gone into practically every State in the Union and fixed the price of insurance policies on your barn and your house and your life. They have fixed the price that warehouses may charge for the deposit and storage in those warehouses. Nobody now complains of the power of the States to fix prices to that degree.

Now, as to the exercise of Federal power, remember that the Supreme Court has stated that within the limits of its jurisdiction the Federal Government has the same power as the State has within its domestic jurisdiction. So I want to conclude my remarks by reading to you some excerpts from a comparatively late decision of the Supreme Court which are interesting as throwing light on the power of Congress in this connection:

Against that conservatism of the mind, which puts to question every new act of regulating legislation and regards the legislation invalid or dangerous until it has become familiar, government—State or National—has pressed on in the general welfare; and our reports are full of cases where in instance after instance the exercise of regulation was resisted and yet sustained against attacks asserted to be justified by the Constitution of the United States. The dread of the moment having passed, no one is now heard to say that rights were restrained or their constitutional guaranties impaired.

That is not a quotation from a socialist; it is from a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. It has reference to the principle upon which Congress may exercise its power.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What case was the gentleman reading from?

Mr. LEA of California. German Insurance Co. against Kansas, 233 United States, page 405.

Mr. TUCKER. That was with reference to a State statute?

Mr. LEA of California. It was a statute fixing the price of insurance, and the question was whether or not it contravened the constitutional provisions. There is no question but that Congress has the plenary power to regulate interstate commerce and the only limitations on that power are the specific limitations in the Constitution itself.

"The underlying principle is that business of certain kinds holds such a peculiar relation to the public interests that there is superinduced upon it the right of public regulation." * * * It would be a bold thing to say that the principle is fixed, inelastic, in the precedents of the past and can not be applied though modern economic conditions may make necessary or beneficial its application. * * *

What makes for the general welfare is necessarily in the first instance a matter of legislative judgment and a judicial review of such judgment is limited.

Then, proceeding further, relating to emergencies, the court says:

It would be very rudimentary to say that measures of government are determined by circumstances, by the presence or imminence of conditions, and of the legislative judgment of the means or the policy of removing or preventing them. The power to regulate interstate commerce existed for a century before the interstate commerce act was passed, and the commission constituted by it was not given authority to fix rates until some years afterwards. Of the agencies which those measures were enacted to regulate at the time of the creation of the power, there was no prophecy or conception.

Nor was regulation immediate upon their existence. It was exerted only when the size, number, and influence of those agencies had so increased and developed as to seem to make it imperative. Other illustrations readily occur which repel the intimation that the inactivity of a power, however prolonged, militates against its legality when it is exercised.

Whether the requirements are necessary to the purpose, or—to confine ourselves to that which is under review—whether rate regulation is necessary to the purpose, is a matter for legislative judgment, not judicial. Our function is only to determine the existence of power.

Then, referring to the power of Congress to classify and determine the particular instrument in commerce which it should regulate, the Supreme Court says:

A legislative classification may rest on narrow distinctions. Legislation is addressed to evils as they may appear, and even degrees of evil may determine its exercise.

My judgment is that Congress has this power under the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States, and that the mistake, the inexcusable mistake, would be not the use of that power but the failure to use it when many of the people of this country are going to suffer if the power is not used.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. What is the gentleman's judgment as to whether or not the Federal Government, acting through the President, would have the right to take over and operate a coal mine if production fails and it is absolutely necessary for the general welfare?

Mr. LEA of California. My own opinion is that that power would not exist except as an exercise under the condemnation clause of the Constitution.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Would the Government have the right under condemnation to do that?

Mr. LEA of California. I think it is possible, but the emergency condition would have to exist to make it so, if the power was exercised other than for the ordinary needs of the Government.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I mean in an emergency.

Mr. LEA of California. Yes; I think so.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Of course, under the provisions of this bill it is sought to fix the maximum price of the coal in the hands of the coal operators. As the gentleman knows, a great deal of profiteering in coal has been through coal brokers. The price is fixed under this bill at a certain amount by the fuel distributer under the penalty of no cars, except at a certain price. There is no provision made in the bill to prevent profiteering with the coal brokers after the coal leaves the hands of the operators and goes into their hands and into the retailers' hands before it gets to the consumer.

Mr. LEA of California. This bill makes it a crime to misrepresent the purposes for which the coal is expected to be used or the price for which it is sold, and any person who receives coal and diverts it to another purpose without consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission is also guilty of a crime, but there is no following of price beyond the consignee.

Mr. KINCHELOE. That is the point I make. The coal broker or the retailer, of course, is protected in the price that he pays to the coal operators under this bill, but when he undertakes to sell it to you or to me this law does not affect him.

Mr. LEA of California. We felt that it was impractical to attempt to do that, because at that point coal becomes an article of intrastate commerce. A representative of the Department of Justice advised us that in his judgment it is impractical to follow it up further. I believe myself that it is impossible, or at least impractical, under the Federal powers, to follow these small fellows who may receive the coal beyond the hands of the consignee.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But it is a fact that the coal brokers of the large cities of the country are profiteering to a great extent right now.

Mr. LEA of California. I do not doubt that is true.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman is a member of the committee that reported this bill. I think it was on the 18th day of August that the President advocated a policy of legislation providing for the purchase and sale and distribution of coal. That was the definite policy as stated in his message to Congress. That was about 11 days ago. Does the gentleman know as a member of the committee, what accounts for the deviation from the announcement of the President and the determination of the committee to report a bill entirely different from what the President proposed?

Mr. LEA of California. I think it is revealing no secret to say that the presidential committee in reference to coal made the recommendations to the President on which he in turn made recommendations to Congress. Subsequent to that time the presidential committee considered the legislation which we now have before us, which they had not done before that time. They reached the determination that this was more effective and advisable than the course recommended by the President in his message. Mr. Hoover appeared before our committee and stated that the delay in executing it made it less practicable than the plan proposed by this bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, it is natural that Congress should find itself in a veritable maze of contradictions in dealing with this subject.

The bill proposes to declare a national emergency, to grant additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and to provide for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributer. The Interstate Commerce Commission is to be vested with the power to refuse cars to operators who will demand extortionate prices for coal. It is also to have the power to give preference or priority in the shipment of coal to various industries and localities.

This is the second administration measure which deals with the coal crisis. Last week we voted for a fact-finding commission. That bill provided that no person interested in coal should become a member of the commission. If it becomes a law the President will have to look for the personnel of that commission in a home for the feeble-minded, since every human being of ordinary intelligence is interested in coal. The fact-finding agency is to report from time to time in the future, and no one will claim that it can in any way aid in meeting the immediate emergency.

The measure which we have before us now will hardly be of more value. It has been the experience of the past that whenever a governmental agency fixed the price of an article, that the price was too high for the consumer. The real problem is not so much a problem of price fixing or of the distribution of coal; the real question is how to get enough coal and enough cars to transport the coal to the consumer. The distributer will have no cars to distribute coal in if the equipment of the railroads will continue to deteriorate. As long as the railroads persist in their determination to crush the labor organizations, as long as the railroad workers are compelled to oppose a reduction of wages which threatens their very existence, the supply of cars and locomotives will be inadequate. The coal shortage can not be relieved by the proposed bill.

The administration offers no effective remedy. It changes its program from day to day, from hour to hour. Congress is not a bit less confused than the administration. Congress seems to be utterly incapable of dealing with large industrial problems. It has been too long accustomed to discussions on tariff and free trade. A tariff on peanuts—that is its specialty. To place leeches on the free list—that is in its line. As if we did not have enough leeches right here.

This bill has been attacked by its adversaries as being a step toward governmental control of private property, as a step toward socialism. There is an element of truth in that contention. There is not any doubt that it is dangerous from the standpoint of the conservative defender of all existing institutions to permit the Government to check or limit the profit-making capacity of the private individual. Every such regulation is a direct invasion of the rights of private property. If the precedent is once established in coal, it may be extended to bread, to meat, to clothing. If it is to apply to coal, why not to iron, or to copper?

Without going into an abstract discussion of the rights of private property, may I suggest that private property exists by virtue of public law. In civilized society one is permitted to own and control property on the theory that the individual control of the property is conducive to the welfare of society as a whole. In the animal world the animal controls its private property as long as it can physically defend it. In civilized society the individual is permitted to acquire individual control of property by virtue of law. At various stages of civilization, and comparatively only a very short time ago, it was not held inconsistent with civilization to permit one human being to own another human being.

The practical question which presents itself to the people to-day is whether civilization can survive while a small portion of the community own and control the natural resources and the basic industries of the country. Are we to have the socialism of Wall Street or the socialism of the people? Are a small number of private owners of coal mines to be permitted not only to dictate terms of employment to their workers but to extort unconscionable prices from the consumers? If they are to be left uncontrolled, the rights of private property, as the conservative lawyer understands them, will be preserved, but the people will perish. The choice is between the control of the life of the Nation by a small group of private owners and the democratic control of the natural resources of the land by and for the people.

The right of the community to limit the profit-earning capacity of private property is not unknown to modern law. For centuries there has been legislation against usury. The law has been prescribing the amount of interest which the loaner of money is to charge for the use of his money; this on the theory that the ready circulation of money is essential to commerce. Is coal under modern conditions less of a necessity to industry, to commerce, to the very life of a nation?

There is entirely too much conservatism, too much narrowness, too much of the archaic in the notions of some of our conservative lawyers. The lawyer should be a power for the progress of mankind. A time comes when the conservative becomes a destructionist. Legal institutions which are in conflict with the needs of society and its ethical and moral conceptions can not survive. Too many of our lawyers live in the past, and too many of our courts are assemblages of venerable old gentlemen for the preservation of ancient ideas. The grave is not the only source of wisdom.

The public good should be the supreme law. Property of and by itself has no rights. Property is an inanimate thing. It is men who have rights, and men have a right to own and control property only to the extent to which the public good can be promoted by such individual ownership. It is becoming more and more apparent that the private and unrestrained ownership of public necessities, of things socially necessary, is injurious to society. Public control of the natural resources, with their ultimate national ownership and their democratic control, is inevitable, and the constructive legal mind should address itself to the problem of making the period and process of transition as painless as possible.

As John Stuart Mill, whom I quoted some time ago, says in his essay on "Liberty," the "problem of civilized society is how to reconcile the largest possible measure of individual liberty with the welfare of society as a whole." There can be no liberty when the means by which man lives are beyond his control. A nation which parts with the control of its natural resources can not be a free nation. No one can have a private property right to oppress the entire people.

The mines and the railroads should be acquired by the Nation. The right of the workers to organize, to participate in their management and in the determination of the conditions of employment, should be secured.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask leave to print in the RECORD the amendment which I shall offer to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the amendment which he proposes to offer to-morrow.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. And also leave to print generally.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman print his amendment in the RECORD of to-day, even though he may not print his full speech in the RECORD of to-day, so that we may have the amendment before us to-morrow?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes; I will do that.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have listened with interest to the remarks that have been made on all sides concerning this bill, and also with great interest to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] in his disquisition on the rights of property. I agree with much that he says, and I agree with what John Stuart Mill taught in his essay and there can be no question about its correctness. The error that crawls into his theory, it seems to me, lies in this, that while you are going to preserve the greatest liberty for the individual and only yield up that which is for the good of the community you ought to do that in a legal way. It is not enough to say, "I think this is for the good of the community and therefore I will go and take that and give it to the community." You must find a lawful method of doing these things, and unless we live up to the law we will fall into disorder and there is no reason in this country why a man should not live up to the law, for the power of the lawmaking is with the people of the land and they can make a law that will be suitable and right.

I feel that in this emergency, as we call it, there is much that is to be regretted. I think perhaps it would have been far wiser for the executive department of the Government not to have interfered in the early stages of this controversy. I tell you, my friends, there is a time coming, and it is not far away, when the question involved in these controversies must be subjected to legal adjustment and arbitrament. [Applause.] It is very difficult, perhaps, to find a way in which this can be carried into effect, but in this struggle to-day the public demand that it should be carried to a finish. I think that would be the proper thing. The sainted Abraham Lincoln said:

> No nation can exist half slave and half free.

I would venture the opinion as an humble imitator of him to-day, that no nation can exist with an imperium in imperio. No nation can exist wherein there stands a body of citizens who can take the entire public by the throat and menace the welfare of men, women, and children in pursuit of their own individual thought of what they ought to have out of the community. I tell you, the legislatures of the States and the Congress of the United States must face this issue sooner or later and attempt to formulate a law. I know how impractical it is said to be to frame one that will cover the question of these controversies in some shape that will avoid the display of murderous qualities that crop out; that will prevent the usurpation of law and order, supplanting it by force in its vilest form. The time must come when this has to be fought out and has to be settled in some definite manner, and I welcome the day when the struggle comes. There are difficulties in the way, and while I admit that individual right must yield to the right of the community, I agree with that doctrine; but it must yield in a lawful and proper way. We ought to remember when we approach legislation of this character that we have a dual sort of sovereignty in this land of ours. We have a Federal nationality; we have a State sovereignty that exists for many, many purposes, and will exist until it is changed in some lawful manner.

This is an emergency bill. I would not call it hysteria legislation. It is prompted by men with an honest purpose, to remedy an existing condition of things where an emergency threatens the life and welfare perhaps of thousands or millions of people. But there underlies this legislation some crucial legal questions in the consideration of which, until the law is changed, we have no right to argue simply, as my friend suggested, "I think the ethics ought to be so and so."

I think the principle that ought to be applied is this: The question is, in a law-abiding nationality, what is the law we are acting under, because we have sworn to maintain the Constitution and administer the law of the land. What is the law? This bill is called an emergency bill, and if it were a bill passed in war time I would unhesitatingly give it my support and adherence. But it being a measure to be passed in peace time, it is a species of legislation that in my humble judgment, to say the least, is exceedingly questionable. There are questions underlying this measure, questions as to its constitutionality. I know that the courts have gone a long way by decisions of five to four judges in declaring that an emergency may be the cause of legislation in time of peace. That was illustrated in the rent cases in the District of Columbia and in the appeal from the State courts of New York. I admit that in doing so the court took a step beyond what our conservative lawyers regarded as within the scope of Federal power. It was within the scope of State power. Undoubtedly the States have plenary power. The constitution of the State with each State is the only limit upon the exercise of their legal functions. They can do in legislation what we can not do.

Now the question arises, Is this a constitutional exercise of power? The courts have also, as my friend from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] pointed out to us the other day, when he gave us the decision declaring that the production of coal is intrastate not interstate, and therefore inquiry could not be made into the books and private papers, and so forth, of the corporation. When does the intrastate character of coal cease, and when does coal become interstate? This bill attempts to declare that a body called the Interstate Commerce Commission can say to A, "You shall have no cars for your mine," and to B, "You shall have as many cars as you can use."

Upon what basis? Many, but one particularly, namely, that we think you are selling at an extortionate price. Now, no man in this House will hesitate a moment to strike a blow at extortion. We all condemn it. We think it is wrong and that it ought to be punished by fine and imprisonment. But here you are giving a power to a branch of the executive department of the Government, which is clothed with quasi-judicial power, to say that A shall have no cars, that his organization shall be destroyed, his business ruined, on what? On their determination, without a hearing and no chance of appeal, that he is selling at a price that is extortionate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. May I have five minutes more?

Mr. TUCKER. I yield to the gentleman my five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman is extended five minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Under this bill the effort is made to give that power to the Interstate Commerce Commission; and yet nowhere in this bill, from beginning to end, is a word said about the fixing of prices. I was asked by a friend for an opinion upon a question as to whether or not Mr. Hoover's department had the power to fix prices at this time. I unhesitatingly answered, "No, under the law he has not." Who is to fix the prices under this bill, and what are the prices? Is there to be a horizontal price? Then you do an utter inequity to the man with the small mine, and the man who has to do the carting that the gentleman spoke of, from one's mine to the cars, or directly to the consumer. Who is to settle what is fair and what is unfair? The Interstate Commerce Commission, upon the recommendation of this coal distributer.

Is it safe, is it judicious, is it right for us to clothe any organization with such an unlimited power? It is true that an emergency does seem to exist that threatens the welfare of the community in its homes and in its industries, as well as in its transportation facilities. Something ought to be done, we all readily admit. This bill has been prepared for the purpose of endeavoring to aid in that direction. Does it do it? If you fix a price at the mine where coal is produced for delivery f. o. b. the mine, that is a doubtful proposition of law whether you can or not do it until by shipment that coal enters into interstate commerce. Once it enters there our power over it is complete. But suppose you fix the price at the mine and the coal is then shipped to A B, who receives it to sell to his customers in the city. What power is there in this bill to touch the distributer of that coal or make him keep from overcharging, from exacting an excessive price, or as you would call it, an extortionate price? If the bill will not accomplish the purpose for which it is framed, cui bono? Why should it be enacted? I have heard a great deal of talk about the profiteer. I have had occasion to observe and notice where the profiteering existed. It is not the coal operator who is the profiteer. It is the man who bought the coal, who cornered it, and charged for it prices in excess of those which were fixed. I could name men who made millions out of coal sold over and above the price that was fixed, and none of them operators who sell f. o. b. the mine. Does this bill strike at those men by denying car distribution? That is another of the difficulties.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Pardon me a moment until I finish two or three remarks, and then I will yield for any question. Now, regarding the bill itself, I suggest that it ought to be amended by adding in the twentieth line of the second page, after the word "distributer," the words "to serve for a period not exceeding six months."

That would limit his term to a definite period. Then, if the emergency should still continue, I would add at the end of the twenty-second line—and the President shall have power to appoint a successor for a like term, and if the Senate is in session the appointment shall be made by and with the consent of the Senate of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the gentleman two minutes for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] to ask him a question.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman. Then I would like to see, in the twenty-second line, the word "may" changed to "shall," so as to make the proclamation announcing the end of the emergency compulsory. Then on page 6, section 9, I would have it read:

at any time hereafter when the Congress or, if the Congress be not in session, when the President shall determine that an emergency exists.

This to preserve the powers of Congress.

In other words, I do not want to see the Congress surrender its right to declare when an emergency exists. But an emergency might spring up when Congress was not in session; therefore I would have the power given ad interim to the President of the United States. I thank the gentleman, and now I take pleasure in yielding to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman, when expressing his view that this is doubtful and inadequate legislation, said a while ago, as I understood him, that he thought we ought to find some proper method of dealing with the existing emergency. Can the gentleman suggest the method that ought to be adopted?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I can not.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What legislation ought we to enact?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. That is too large a subject to go into in answering the question. I have in mind legislation that I think ought to be framed covering this entire question.

Mr. WINSLOW. If the gentleman will accept one minute, I would like to yield it to him for the purpose of asking him a question.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Very well.

Mr. WINSLOW. Has the gentleman ever heard or seen any plan outlined which in his mind would cover the situation better than this one?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. No; I will say not.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, lest it might not be known when I get through what my vote will be, I want to begin by saying that I am going to vote for this bill. But, gentlemen, it is under this kind of a protest and for this reason: I want when calamity overtakes us to be able to say, "You can not shake your gory locks at me." If any relief is offered by this bill to the country—and there may be—I want to help it along. In other words, I want to be a helper and not a hinderer in any kind of a measure that may afford relief. This bill seems to be the only thing that is going to be offered, and I am voting not as a Democrat or as a Republican but as one anxious to do all in my power to help my distressed country.

Gentlemen, in my judgment we have not yet realized how near we are in this country to the brink of disaster. A fearful condition and a fearful emergency exists in this country. We are told—and, I believe, truly—that suffering is on the way; that winter will be accompanied by suffering from cold in the great cities. The great industries of the country are going to be disorganized and disrupted. And what have we been doing?

Well, we have appointed a commission of nine members at $10,000 a year to investigate and report on the coal situation next December or January. Then we propose to appoint by this bill a Federal fuel distributer, with power to inquire—another investigating agency—and report to the Interstate Commerce Commission. But there is involved in the meat of this measure also a possibility and an effort to provide a limitation on the price to be charged by the coal producer. As has been well said, there is nothing in it to prevent the dealer in coal from holding up the consumer to his heart's content. I am afraid that the purchaser of coal will find himself between the upper and nether millstone, compelled to pay extortionate prices. It may be that there is some possible question as to the constitutionality of this measure, but my qualms of conscience—at least, to the extent that will permit me to vote for it—have been answered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA]; and, at least, it is as constitutional as other measures—like the Rent Commission which we passed for the District—and so while I doubt the constitutionality I propose to vote for it, because in the main I am reasonably satisfied that the Government has the power in interstate commerce to pursue the policy involved in this bill. Not simply a strong desire but the sheer necessity for relief in itself is persuasive.

It is unthinkable that a great nation should exist with no power to prevent the absolute robbery of its people by extortionate prices in commodities which are the very necessities of life; and that such extortion has existed and will exist unless some measure is passed I do not doubt.

But let me say, gentlemen, that had the President adhered to the ideas which he expressed in his message, in my judgment he would have pursued in the policy there expressed a far more clearly constitutional, and, better still, far more effectual course than that embodied in the bill. He said:

> If it may have your approval, I recommend immediate provision for a temporary national coal agency, with needed capital, to purchase, sell, and distribute coal which is carried in interstate shipment. I do not mean that all interstate coal shall be handled by such a Federal organization; perhaps none will be necessary; but it will restore its capital to the Public Treasury and will be the instrumentality of guarding the public interest where private conscience is insensible to a public need.

Some one might raise the question of constitutionality of that, but it is not different from that relief that we have extended to the suffering in great disasters, as for instance in the Ohio floods and in cases of great fires.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I will if I can get some more time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas two minutes more.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I want to say to the gentleman that the plan proposed in the bill can be put into effect immediately, while the recommendations of the President's message involve the building up of an organized body, and whoever had anything to do with it said it would take 50 to 60 days.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I can not conceive that it would take any longer to provide the mechanism for purchasing and distributing coal by the national administration and thereby also in a way furnishing it for public use—that it would take no longer to do that than to put in operation the mechanism of building up and making an investigation by a coal distributer, communicating it to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and having the commission provide rules and regulations and provide for the agency and instrumentality that it would involve to execute this bill, and the President's first suggestion would have absolutely prevented profiteering. Our authority to pursue that plan would stand on the same footing with every donation that we have made to the suffering, as we did in the Ohio flood.

Here is a great calamity overtaking us, not in one locality but in hundreds of localities. Shall the Government of the United States and each and every State stand helpless because it is admitted that the States can not do anything in interstate commerce and it is claimed that the Nation can not do anything in intrastate commerce? What shall we do? In my judgment the suggestion of the President in his message was wise. It was the one method that we ought to have substituted for this bill. We ought to provide the President with every proper instrumentality so that he may purchase the coal and distribute it, and when that is done your local speculator will not have the right or the opportunity to charge extortionate prices to the consumer.

But what can you do under the bill? Suppose you prevent the mine operator from charging more than a reasonable profit and he gets the coal out at $5 a ton. Smith having 50 tons of coal may find that in the city of Washington there are 500 people wanting little orders of coal, and he says that I will sell it at $1 a hundred, or $20 a ton, and all you that want it stand around ready to take it. Is there anything in this bill to meet that situation? I do not think so, and yet this bill is all that I have a chance to vote for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to another matter. It has been said we would have the right to pass this bill in war time, but not now in peace time. War is not the only emergency. The power of this Congress is just as great in any other great emergency as in war. War is spoken of only as an emergency because it stands out prominently, but suppose my house is on fire and yours adjoins mine, and other houses adjoin that. An emergency there exists, and it permits the public to take your house next to mine and tear it down in order to stop the spread of the fire. Suppose desolation, drought, creep over the West and the people are starving, an emergency exists for the creation of Federal funds to relieve the distress. An emergency exists at this time, and I am afraid that our house is on fire. [Applause.] In my judgment, there is power somewhere to avert nation-wide calamity. I believe that this Government has the power to take over coal mines and produce coal if private owners absolutely refuse or fail to produce coal, and has the power to seize and operate railroads if private owners refuse or are unable to do so. And if the Government should be compelled to operate them it should not compensate the owners, but do as a receiver does when a private property is taken charge of by a court—that is, pay operating expenses first, and pay any profits that might accrue only to the owner. In my judgment, had the railways and mine owners known that that course would be pursued by the Government there would have been no railway or coal strike.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I looked forward to the offering of this bill with a great deal of pleasure and hope, but I find my expectations utterly blasted. It was natural that we should expect to find in the bill that came forth from the committee, after great thought and prodigious labor, something to solve the labor situation, to bring the combatants together, to bring about peace and to induce the opening up of the mines so as to avoid a shortage of coal. But no; the committee seems to take it for granted that the shortage is bound to continue, that nothing can be done to conciliate the warring combatants, that nothing can be done to bring peace in the labor situation, that nothing can be done to increase the output and prevent a famine. The committee offer you a bill by which they provide for the equitable distribution of a shortage, but what the people want is coal, fuel. They are not concerned about preferences among carriers, regions, municipalities, and corporations, as this bill provides. Is there anything in this bill that will help in the production of coal or the increase of fuel supplies? Nothing whatever.

It provides for a fuel distributer—a misnomer. He is not a fuel distributer at all. Look at the bill. What are his powers? What is he ordered to do? To investigate the available supply of coal and other fuel, the location of the mines, the methods of distribution, the normal prices charged, and whether or not there is a shortage of coal—why, every schoolboy in the country knows that there is a shortage of coal—and then when he has concluded his investigations what is he required to do? Can he issue a priority order? No; he can do nothing but make a recommendation to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and then the Interstate Commerce Commission, in its discretion, may issue a priority order distributing the coal among the corporations, business and municipal, or among the carriers, and to various regions.

So far as the fuel distributer is concerned, all the work laid out for him has been already done. The Department of Labor has covered this field completely. The Bureau of Conciliation in the Department of Labor has been working upon this strike situation since last January, and it is prepared to furnish the committee and furnish the Interstate Commerce Commission with all the facts called for in section 3 of this bill, and it is doubtless prepared to make appropriate recommendations to the Interstate Commerce Commission, if you, in your judgment, deem it advisable to invest the Interstate Commerce Commission with the power of fixing the priorities. But if the fuel distributer is empowered to investigate things which are already known, if he has no power to issue priority orders, what is the excuse for his existence? Why did you interpose him between the people, crying for coal, and the Interstate Commerce Commission?

The reason, it seems to me, is to be found in section 7 of the bill, where he is empowered to employ such staff of assistants as may be necessary, to incur expenses for rent, telephones, office expenses, stationery, supplies, and traveling agents to go over the country. In other words, a new bureau is to be created, a new bureau in this bureau-infested country; in this country already overrun with bureaus; a new bureau, a new official—a Federal fuel distributer, who has not any power, who can not do anything except to investigate the things that are already known. The only excuse that I see, then, is to foist upon the people of this country another medium of expenditure, a further source of taxation, another useless, futile bureau, that is not going to accomplish one whit of good in ending strikes or in increasing the amount of coal mined. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, here is a matter to which I wish to invite the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW], who is chairman of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I hold in my hand a copy of this afternoon's Washington Star. The leading news article is an Associated Press article, in the first column of the front page, which starts out as follows:

President Harding believes that Congress should grant him immediate authority to take over railroad and mining properties, it was said to-day at the White House, but has assured congressional spokesmen that only the grimmest public necessity would move him to exercise such powers, if granted.

Mr. WINSLOW. Is that all of the article?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It is about two columns, but that is the beginning.

Mr. WINSLOW. What else may be in the article?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The question which I would be very greatly pleased if the gentleman from Massachusetts would answer is, What is the President's plan for handling the present situation? What does he want us to do?

Mr. WINSLOW. Do you want a serious answer?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Seriously, I would like to know the latest thing from the White House.

Mr. WINSLOW. I refer the gentleman to the President. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It seems to me that that is no way to find out what the White House wants, because everyone who goes there brings back a different story. Perhaps it may be, as I intimated this morning, that each time the chameleon has jumped again.

Yesterday nothing was suggested except this legislation we are considering to-day. Mr. Hoover told our committee that nothing except this bill had been approved by the President's coal committee or himself. I asked Mr. Hoover about that, because it had been suggested that the President wanted the power to take control of the mines and the railroads. I wanted somebody who was fresh from court to bring the news; and Mr. Hoover brought me the news just yesterday that nothing of the kind was desired. And now we find that the Associated Press informs us that the President has told his congressional spokesmen—of which, of course, it can not be possible that he refers to anyone else than the gentleman from Massachusetts—that he wants power to seize the railroads and seize the mines.

I do not doubt but that eventually the President will ask for that power. It is the only logical thing to do; it is the only remedy for the situation. But what I am wondering about is, if the President has made up his mind to take over the railroads and mines, why he does not ask for the authority now? Why are we fiddling away our time here now? Why did we fiddle away our time last week with a fact-finding commission bill? And now it appears that the coal-distribution legislation, instead of being something that is really desired, is a mere preliminary to asking for power to seize the railroads and make real provisions for distributing coal to the people of this country.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not my colleague on the committee think in all fairness that he ought to give the chairman of the committee time to read the President's letter to him?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I had assumed in all seriousness that the gentleman from Massachusetts, being the President's spokesman upon matters of this kind and with whom I know the President has communicated upon the subject, was the recipient of the President's confidence. I would like to know when I vote on this bill—and I am going to vote for it anyhow, but other Members have different feelings on the subject—I want to know whether the administration is going through with this legislation or will change front again before even we can pass the bill.

Mr. WINSLOW. If the gentleman goes on forever, I will forget the first part of his question.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It does not seem to make much difference, because the gentleman has said he did not know.

Mr. WINSLOW. I find on reading this paper that there is nothing in what the gentleman says.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Is there anything in the paper showing there is anything in what the President might say?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will give you back the paper. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I will yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, I am not a coal operator. I am very much in sympathy with the desire of the administration to see the people of the Nation get coal and at a fair price. I strongly oppose profiteering in any industry or commodity. I have listened with great interest to the proponents of this measure. I find them made up solely of groups coming from the noncoal-producing sections of the country. They say this measure is intended to facilitate the equitable distribution of coal, but the truth is this bill places every industry and all of the people of this country under a fuel distributor. He will in fact be a dictator in fixing prices, in distributing cars, and the distribution of coal and other fuels. The meat of this bill is to give to this fuel distributor absolute power, he and his agents, to fix the price of coal at the mines. It gives him power to name any number of agents and fix their compensations and other charges. He has it in his power to fix the price of coal at any coal mine in the United States, and if a coal producer does not accept his price he can not and will not receive cars and his mines must close down, or if he should ship any coal at a price above what this dictator should say was a fair price he would be subject to a fine not to exceed $20,000 or imprisonment not to exceed two years, or be both fined and imprisoned within these limits.

He can say what community, person, or industry may receive coal. He can say that a factory in Michigan, Kansas, or Maine may have coal from Kentucky, and that it shall not go to some factory, city, or individual in Kentucky. You can see this fuel distributor is an absolute dictator in the distribution of all cars, fuel, the operation of all industries, and over all of the people. I am opposed to this bill because—

1. I think it is unconstitutional. During war time the Congress passed a law known as the Lever Food Control Act as a war measure. Later on the Supreme Court held this measure unconstitutional. We all remember how it hampered industry while it was in force.

2. This bill will hamper and reduce production of coal, and interfere with the rapid distribution of coal. It will not produce a pound of coal.

3. It merely undertakes to fix the price of coal at the mines. This will only serve the railroads, wholesalers, brokers, and middlemen. After it gets into their hands they can charge any price. This bill will limit production and increase the price to the ultimate consumer.

4. This fuel distributor will have the power to order our Kentucky coal to other States when it may be needed for Kentucky.

5. It does not pretend to reach coal brokers, or the wholesalers and other middlemen who are now, and have been all along, the real profiteers in coal.

6. Coal mines, railroads, and other industries can not be run successfully by a bureau or commission here in Washington. The men who are trained and experienced in their particular line must operate them.

7. I am opposed to granting to any man in peace time such extraordinary powers over the people and industries of this country.

WHO ARE THE COAL PROFITEERS?

This bill gives the fuel distributor and Interstate Commerce Commission, in effect, the power to fix prices. It says he must ascertain what is the usual and normal price of coal at the mines. It is up to him to fix the price, what he thinks is a reasonable price, at each mine in the United States. Now, if this should help anybody, who will it help? Who is it that buys coal at the mines? It is the railroads, the brokers, wholesalers, and other middlemen. Very few consumers buy their coal at the mines. Under this bill the fuel distributor can not fix the price anywhere except at the mines. When it is once loaded on cars, the brokers and other middlemen can profiteer all they want to. There is nothing in this bill to prevent it. The coal operators are not now and never have been, as a rule, the profiteers in coal. The brokers and middlemen who have no investment, who toil not, neither do they spin, are the fellows who drink the cream. I have been in Washington for more than three years. Most of the time coal at the mines has been very cheap, but I have paid practically one price, $15 per ton, for hard coal ever since I have been here. A few weeks back some of the very finest soft coal in my district was selling at $1.50 per ton at the mines, but it was $10 per ton here in Washington. Until after the war set in and for 15 years or more next before that time, more coal operators failed in my section than made any money. Nearly every coal company or operator was in debt. They did make a little money during the war, but nothing compared to the people in other industries. I venture to say that more than two-thirds of the coal operators for the last year and a half have lost money.

I have been greatly amused as well as angered to hear the proponents of this bill denounce the miner and producers of coal as profiteers. They all come from noncoal-producing States. I have not heard a single man who is for this bill say aught against the coal broker, wholesale and retail hog, in their own cities, towns, and communities. Why all of this abuse of the coal miners and coal operators? Why have you gentlemen failed to denounce the real profiteers in coal who are living in your own communities and gouging the consumer? Do you think you are playing good politics in abusing the miners and coal operators and not saying anything against the real profiteers in your own town? I could have more patience with your argument if you denounced these fellows who toil not, neither do they spin. They have no investment to amount to anything. They simply have a set of books, and these are kept for the purpose principally of recording their profits. If you proponents of this bill wanted to protect the American people, why did you not put some provision in the bill by which the price could be controlled at which these brokers and middlemen sell the coal to the people?

The producers of any commodity very rarely secure an unfair price. Shoes are high, but the farmer's hides are low. Wool clothing is high, but wool is cheap. Furniture is out of sight, but the people who furnish the trees and the lumber can scarcely make expenses. Beef and pork are high, but the farmer is producing his cattle and hogs below cost. Flour and meal are high, but the farmer is getting a very small price for his corn and wheat. Cigars and manufactured tobacco are almost out of reach, but the farmers must organize to get anything for their tobacco. Cotton goods are very high, but cotton is being produced by the farmers at less than cost. Sugar keeps up in the market, but the sugar planter can hardly live. Coal is high, but the producer, taking one year with another, is hardly able to keep his head above the water. What is the trouble?

The broker and the middleman make the high prices and good profits. Every fellow through whose hands the coal passes charges a big profit. The railroads are getting more than their share through exorbitant freight rates. The Interstate Commerce Commission could do the country a great service in fixing a proper and equitable freight rate. The result is the operator may get about $1.50 for his coal, but when the railroad, the broker, and the middlemen get through gouging the people it is $10 per ton when it reaches the consumer. Then our friends in the East and other noncoal-producing sections proceed to castigate the coal miners and the coal operators, but are as dumb as Baalam's ass so far as the coal brokers and middlemen are concerned. They are the real culprits. They are responsible for the high prices of coal in this country, and if we are to regulate anybody let us regulate them.

WILL TAKE COAL FROM KENTUCKIANS.

Under this bill the fuel administrator and Interstate Commerce Commission have the power to regulate the price of coal at the mines and which is to be shipped in interstate commerce—that is, from one State to another—and they can direct the place to which this coal is to go and the person, firm, or corporation that is to receive it. This fuel distributor will have no power to fix the price of coal mined in one State and shipped to some point in that same State where it is mined; that is to say, there is nothing in this bill to help the consumers of coal in Kentucky. If a coal operator in Kentucky could get cars, under this bill he may charge any sum he may desire for his coal, if it is shipped to some point in Kentucky, so that this price fixing in any event can not help any of the coal consumers in the State of Kentucky or in any other coal-producing State, but it does give this dictator the power to say that every coal operator in Kentucky must ship his coal to Michigan or some other State at a price to be fixed by this dictator.

You can clearly see that this measure can not in any event help any class of citizens in Kentucky, but we are in this danger: This fuel distributor will have the power to order our coal shipped to some factory, municipality or community, or consumer in the State of Maine, Kansas, Wisconsin, or other State; and if the coal operator refuses to ship it, he can refuse to give such operator cars; and at the same time we may need this coal for some factory, municipality, or consumer in the State of Kentucky. Under the Lever Act this very thing was done and Kentucky municipal officers had to commandeer coal. This fuel distributor may refuse coal to be shipped by a Kentucky coal operator to Paris, Lexington, Louisville, Bowling Green, Paducah, or other points in Kentucky. I refuse to vote to give any man in peace time any such power; but he can fix the price and require our coal operators to ship our coal to other States regardless of the needs of the people of Kentucky. If the fixing of the price of coal aids anybody, it can only aid the consumers of other States, because under this bill the fuel distributor can not fix the price except in interstate shipments—that is, in shipments going from Kentucky to some other State; or, in other words, from one State to another State. He can not fix the price at the mines for coal going from Kentucky mines to Kentucky consumers, and why should I be called upon to place Kentucky, a great coal-producing State, and her people at a great disadvantage with the people in the noncoal-producing States? Kentucky has developed her mines. Has she not the right and ought she not have the right to serve her own people first? I am very anxious that all the people of the Union shall be furnished coal at fair prices, but I feel that my first duty is to Kentucky and Kentuckians.

He that provideth not first for his own household hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel.

Would it be fair to take from Florida her fruit and give it to other States when the people of Florida need it and wanted the fruit? Would New England be willing to vote for a bill to send her shoes and clothing to Kentucky when they were needed in New England? Who would ask Louisiana and Mississippi to vote to send her sugar to Kentucky when it was needed or wanted by their own people, or ask Chicago to send us her meats when she needed them?

OPPOSED TO PATERNALISM.

If this bill would produce more coal or facilitate the distribution of coal or would insure consumers against profiteering there might be some excuse for it, but, in my honest judgment, it will not accomplish anything of the sort, but on the other hand, it will interfere with the production and distribution of coal and increase the price. This fuel distributor, in order to be equitable, would have to have nearly as many different prices as there are coal mines. The conditions in each mine are different from the conditions in every other mine. In making a general price he will have to fix a fair price, including cost and a reasonable profit to the mines whose cost of production is the greatest, and this maximum price becomes a minimum price for all other mines, and but for this price fixing many mines would sell their coal much cheaper as they could produce their coal much cheaper. Members from noncoal-producing sections are favoring this paternalistic legislation. In undertaking this I think our Government is taking the longest step toward radicalism that has ever been taken in peace times. No doubt Lenin and Trotski will be greatly amused when they learn that the great western Republic is undertaking to do for coal and other fuel what they have been doing for all commodities since the overthrow of the regular Russian Government. We have been condemning them. Their system of government destroyed Russia. I am unwilling to overthrow the great principles upon which this Republic was built and enter upon a career of sovietism and paternalism as is contemplated in this bill. Are the gentlemen from the New England States ready for the Congress to fix the price on shoes and clothing? You have been receiving fifteen to twenty dollars a pair for shoes that formerly sold for three or four dollars per pair, and eight and ten times for cotton cloth what it formerly brought. Are you gentlemen from the sugar and cotton belts ready for the Congress to fix the price on sugar and cotton?

We have been paying two or three times as much for woolen clothing as we formerly paid. Are any of the gentlemen of this House ready to fix the price on clothing? This may be said also about meat, fruits, and vegetables. Is there any good reason, if this sort of legislation is to go through, for us to refuse later on when we may be called upon to give some dictator the power to fix the prices on sugar, meats, clothing, furniture, flour, and other commodities? Does anyone indulge the hope that this would tend to increase production or reduce the cost of living? It would bring about confusion and ruin. The slogan of the Republican Party in 1920 was "Less government in business and more business in government." I still adhere to that policy. I feel quite sure that those pushing this legislation will live to see the day when they will wish the Congress had not taken this action.

FORMER ADMINISTRATION RESPONSIBLE FOR PRESENT INDUSTRIAL CONDITION.

The American Federation of Labor had a representative in the person of Mr. Edgar Wallace, who is vice president of the American Federation of Labor, to appear before the committee that had this bill in charge, as the representative of labor, to express the views of labor on this bill. Mr. Wallace went on record for himself and labor as being opposed to the Government fixing prices on commodities or on coal. I quote the following from a part of his statement:

I want to say this: That I am not in favor of any fixation of prices at the mines or anywhere else. The reason I am opposed to that is based upon past experience. The experience is that the Government fixes a maximum price, and that maximum price immediately becomes the minimum price. Furthermore, the Government can not, by its act, confiscate the property of the citizen, and hence the mine that is not economical, or the mine that is inefficiently managed, or the high-cost mine, becomes the standard, and the cost of coal is raised instead of being reduced at any attempt at price fixation that the Government can make and keep within its powers granted by the Constitution.

If the gentlemen here will let their memory go back to the two industries that have been most disturbed in the last few years, you will find that they were industries that ran constantly prior to the war. There may have been local strikes here and there, but there was nothing very serious. There was never a railroad strike in the 30 years prior to the war of such consequence that it endangered the public. There was never a coal strike prior to the World War of such consequence that it endangered the public welfare generally, but since or during the war, recognizing those two industries as essential industries, there was Government price fixing in connection with them. There was Government price fixing and Government wage fixing at that time, and from that time there has been a tendency to demand Government interference, or a tendency on the part of the Government to interfere. Instead of preventing disturbance in those industries, they have caused a disturbance in the industries. The men in looking to the Government for their wages will hold the Government responsible for the disagreeable circumstances that arise in their everyday life because of the wage they lack, or because of the wage that they think they should have but which they have not got. The blame is put on the Government, and I doubt whether the Government itself can stand under those circumstances. I repeat that the fact is that when the owners of the industry and their men were let go untrammeled, each recognizing the other's rights, they had no such disturbances, and the sooner we get back to that condition the sooner we will have eliminated the periodical disturbances. I think that if we permit the Government now to intercede to the extent of fixing wages and fixing prices we will only have another just such disturbance in the immediate future or in the near future. That condition will continue.

Mr. Wallace is a very intelligent man and has made a careful study of the effect of Government interference in business and in price fixing. He charges that our present industrial troubles are due to governmental interference, and while he does not say so, yet he can only refer to the action of the Wilson administration.

GOOD WAGES AND FAIR PRICES.

Nearly all of the persons who spoke in favor of this bill denounced the miners and coal operators as profiteers. Some of them have gone so far as to charge that there is an understanding between the coal operators and the mine leaders to bring on and keep up these strikes so that the miners may profiteer in high wages and the coal operators in high prices for coal. I am sure there is not a word of truth in these statements. The operators do not want strikes and stoppage of their mines and neither do the miners. Very few of the people who are making such statements have any idea as to what they are talking about. They know nothing of the hardships and dangers encountered by the coal miner. For the last two or three years I do not think in my section they have averaged much more than two days per week, but they and their families must live seven days per week. They live in small houses and under very adverse conditions. Very few of them can save any money even by exercising the greatest economy. They must labor under very adverse conditions at the best. Many of them work in the water and mud day after day, in bad air, and in some cases they must lie down in this mud and water to dig the coal and to put it in the small mine cars. I am sure that none of the persons who have denounced them would go through what the average miner must go through even if he were paid several times the wages the average miner receives. I know of no occupation that is more harassing and about which there is more drudgery and exposure than coal mining. Very few of them can give their families the advantages that the average citizen should have in the way of shelter, clothing, food, recreation, and education, and it hurts me to hear Members of Congress speak of them as profiteers. How can any man begrudge the miner his small wage and less than half time, in the grime, mud, and away from the light of day?

Very few persons and only those who have been in and about coal mines know the drawbacks of the coal-mining industry. When prices are reasonably good there is always a shortage of cars, and when cars are plentiful there is a shortage of orders for coal. There can more things happen in and around a coal mine than any other industry that I know anything about. Up until the war began, for about 15 years, the average coal operator could not reasonably expect more than 5 to 10 cents per ton profit, and they are always well satisfied with a profit of from 10 to 20 cents per ton, and from this must come the wear and tear and their taxes. It is silly to think that coal operators want their business torn up with a strike or want their mines closed down. The overhead charge of a mine when it is closed down is very heavy, and a well-ordered mine soon goes to pieces through falling slate, accumulation of water, and other causes. A great many operators run their mines at a loss rather than to close them down during certain seasons of the year.

CARS, CARS, AND MORE CARS.

The solution of the price and distribution of coal is not the one proposed by this bill, in appointing a dictator over the coal and railroad industries. This is simply a transportation problem. There are enough mines in operation and enough miners to produce 50 per cent more coal than this country can consume and export. All the coal industry needs is cars. Cars, and lots of cars, will solve both the price and distribution of coal. The soft-coal mines are running overtime and will soon produce a surplus of coal in this country, but there is not sufficient transportation facilities to move the coal that is mined. Some of the proponents of this measure state that this bill is principally to meet the anthracite situation, that there is a scarcity of anthracite coal. There is nothing under this bill that will produce a pound of coal. There is nothing under this bill that proposes any scheme or plan for the settlement of the anthracite-coal strike or the railroad strike.

The main purpose of this bill and the only benefit that would come from this bill is to force the coal from the coal-producing States into the hands of the railroads, wholesalers, and middlemen of the noncoal-producing States. It seems to me the matter that should be worked on is the settlement of the railroad strike. I did not favor the Labor Board as the best plan for the settlement of disputes between the railroads and their workers. I favored what is known as the Anderson amendment. That provided that disputes between the railroads and their workers should be settled through and by a board of their selection. It seems to me the Labor Board has not been able to bring about peace but appears to have incurred the ill will and aroused the suspicions not only of the railroad workers but the railroad owners. This board seems to have failed in its mission. The shop crafts that are now striking and the trackmen are the lowest paid employees of the railroad. The Railroad Labor Board cut their wages very materially. I think they cut many of them too deep and have reduced their wages below what is fair and reasonable as provided by the law. It seems to me the Railroad Labor Board should take up this question again, reconsider it and look into it with great care, and grant to the men wages that are just and reasonable, as the law provides. I think with the proper steps they could convince the shopmen that they intend to treat them fairly and that they will treat them fairly, and get this railroad strike settled and get the trains to moving, and let the coal people and the railroad people run the mines and railroads, and in a few short weeks everybody will have plenty of coal and prices will go tumbling. I do not think that we can dig coal, run the railroads, or distribute the coal by force or through commissions. The only solution of the fuel problem is transportation. Get the railroad men satisfied and go to running the trains.

SUPPLY AND DEMAND.

While I live in a great soft-coal mining district, I am not engaged in the operation of any coal mine. I have closely observed this industry for more than 25 years. I know of the ups and downs, the hardships and handicaps of both the miner and the operator. I know that these regulatory measures—red tape—will hamper and clog the coal-mining industry and the wheels of transportation, and if you pass this bill you will cut down production instead of increasing production. This measure will entail endless delays and produce thousands of inequalities. You propose in cases where operators have contracts for yearly output to force them to disregard their contracts and ship coal at the direction of this fuel distributor and to persons from whom they may never collect their money. This often happened under the administration of the Lever Act. Many operators lost thousands of dollars by being forced to ship to people who turned out to be insolvent. As an illustration of how Government control retards production, during the war under the Lever Act on the Cumberland Valley division of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, where I live, everyone put forth every effort to reach the highest point of production, but they could never bring production up to as much as 900 cars per day. In May and June, 1922, with no Government interference, the same section and the same mines produced over 1,200 cars of coal per day. You give the coal miners and operators plenty of cars and in six weeks many of them will be begging for orders. Congress may try, but I doubt if we will ever succeed in overturning the law of supply and demand. By this bill you will protect the railroads, a few wholesalers, coal brokers, and middlemen, but who is going to protect the millions of consumers who must look to the wholesaler and the retailer to get their coal?

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will ask the gentleman if he can explain why the Ohio River is not used for transporting coal, especially from the coal district down the river?

Mr. ROBSION. In my district—that is, a part of it—I am advised that the railroads are trying to throttle or prevent the improvement of Cumberland River and water transportation, and I guess it is the same condition on the Ohio River. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Has the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] anyone who wishes to speak?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not now.

Mr. WINSLOW. Is there any regulation in regard to equalizing the time consumed on the two sides?

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no definite arrangement.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the Chair kindly inform me how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 57 minutes remaining, and the other side have 94 minutes remaining.

Mr. BARKLEY. How much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. Ninety-four minutes to the gentleman's side.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not keeping the time for those opposed to the bill. How much time have I left of the hour and a half that I had under my control?

The CHAIRMAN. There was no provision as to who was to control the time on that side except the gentleman himself.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yielded half of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], so that time is not within my control. That was the understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the Chair will recognize the gentlemen's arrangement, and if the gentleman will notify the Chair how much time he has used and how much the gentleman from Texas has used, that will be considered as the basis for future division of time.

Mr. WINSLOW. The Chair suggested that he did not know how much time had been consumed against the bill on that side. I have kept that record carefully. There have been 37 minutes consumed against the bill on that side.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, how much time has been consumed in all?

The CHAIRMAN. There have been 189 minutes used in all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is a little more than half of the total time. I wonder if it would be agreeable to the gentleman——

Mr. WINSLOW. We have speakers on our side, Mr. Chairman, but I think we ought to have a fairly equal distribution of the opportunities to speak.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will make the point of order that there is no quorum present unless the gentleman wishes to use more time.

Mr. WINSLOW. Do I understand there is no one on that side who is willing to come forward to equalize the time?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have no information about that.

Mr. RAYBURN. What does the gentleman mean by equalizing the time? It is my impression that those opposed to the bill have used more time than the proponents of the bill.

Mr. WINSLOW. I do not know but the gentleman is right about that, putting it in that way.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] used a few minutes less than an hour, and the gentleman from Massachusetts has yielded to two or three gentlemen on that side who opposed the bill. I myself have yielded more than 30 minutes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I will yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this bill, because I am in sympathy with its purpose and intent, that of attempting to curb the profiteers in coal, and of saving the people from the necessity of having to pay exorbitant prices for their fuel. I believe it is absolutely essential that we do all we can to prevent coal profiteering in this emergency. Yet I am very frank to say that I do not share the hope and expectations of those who believe that legislation of this character will wholly perform its intended purpose. It will undoubtedly prevent prices from going to the height to which they might go except for such legislation, and yet there is always the danger in connection with any attempt at the regulation of prices, with a view of preventing profiteering of actually maintaining a higher price level after the peak of the emergency has passed than would otherwise be maintained or exist. Mr. Edgar Wallace, legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor, made a statement yesterday before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, some portions of which I heartily agree with. I think Mr. Wallace stated the case with a good deal of accuracy. Mr. Wallace reminded the committee of our experience in matters of this sort and the difficulties that surround any attempt at price fixing or price regulation. He referred to the fact that we have no authority, in a time of peace, no authority that has been recognized up to this time, to directly fix prices of commodities. The best we can do when we desire to prevent profiteering is to reach the matter indirectly, as we attempt to do in this legislation.

It is true we can scarcely excuse ourselves if we fail to make an effort to prevent extortion and the wicked rise of coal prices in the face of a condition of coal shortage and national emergency. And yet all of our experience proves that do the best we can in this regard, while we shall undoubtedly prevent prices from going as high as they otherwise would for a time, our very effort to better the condition of affairs and to keep prices within reason are likely to tend to maintain price levels above what they should be when the emergency has passed and normal conditions are restored.

The newspapers of yesterday told us that the committee now attempting to secure voluntary agreements in regard to prices was thinking of fixing the price of bituminous coal at $11 a ton in Washington. I do not pretend to be fully and accurately informed in regard to the cost to the dealer of bituminous coal laid down in the city of Washington under present conditions, but I do know that coal ought not cost the dealer in the city of Washington at this time much over half of $11, and that a price of $11 would give some one an unconscionable profit on soft coal delivered to the consumer.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. Does the gentleman mean without the freight rate or with the freight rate?

Mr. MONDELL. I am talking about the price of coal laid down in Washington.

Mr. EDMONDS. The freight rate is more than half of the sum the gentleman mentions.

Mr. MONDELL. That may be true.

Mr. EDMONDS. It is nearly $3 a ton.

Mr. MONDELL. And $2.50 at the mines is a good price under the present wage rate. Where does the gentleman get $11 a ton.

Mr. EDMONDS. Where a man has opened a 4-foot vein he can not mine at $2.25 and make any profit.

Mr. MONDELL. I said I believed bituminous coal should not cost the dealer much more than half of $11 laid down in Washington. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says the freight is $3 per ton and that it costs $2.25 or more a ton to mine a thin vein. Very well; let us assume that all Washington coal comes from thin veins, which it does not, and gives the operator the liberal profit of 75 cents a ton, and the cost laid down is only $6 per ton. Who is to get the $5 per ton?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Hoover yesterday made a statement before the committee, which you will find in the hearings, that some of the operators in Kentucky were selling coal at the mines at $3.75 a ton and some of them were selling at $12 a ton.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, we are trying by this legislation to prevent that extortion. Three dollars and seventy-five cents is a good round figure, and even under present costs it gives the operator of a well-conducted mine a splendid profit. Even that is much more than coal should sell at in normal times. The man that is charging $12, or half of that figure, should be checked if we can do it. I think this legislation will put an end to any $12 price at the pit mouth. Let me suggest to my friend that if the bituminous miners go to work, as they seem now to be doing, it will not be many days until no coal operator anywhere in the United States will find anybody making inquiries for $12 or $10 or $8 coal. But I admit that there is a very acute and unfortunate situation which we are bound to try to cure. I do not, however, desire to hold out to anyone the hope that legislation of this character will in the long run bring prices to a proper level. We are attempting to do the best we can to prevent the demand for and the payment of outrageous prices for coal. But do the best we can through legislation, experience reminds us that in the long run prices would probably reach a lower and a fairer level without the action of a fuel distributer.

And that leads me to this suggestion: I hope that after the passage of this act some one will be found for fuel director under it wise enough not to try to run the entire coal business of America through the keyhole of his office; that in the main the industry will be allowed to proceed in its customary way. The average operator is not holding up his customers, in my opinion. The man who has the same customers year after year, generally under a contract, but whether under a contract or not, is not the man who is demanding these enormously high prices. The director's office should care for those cases where men are asking unreasonable prices. The danger is, and the practice always was during the last administration, to attempt to drag all the business of a mighty nation through the keyhole of an administrative office. The unwinding of the red tape and the delay inevitably consequent upon it very frequently brought delays and difficulties that cost the consumer more than the temporary advance of price if market conditions had been allowed to proceed in their usual and normal way. If a maximum price is fixed by an official agency in a time when demand outruns supply, it must of necessity be a price high enough to encourage the maximum of production, and that means a price high enough to allow all mines to operate; to allow wagon mines to operate, not in a normal way but in the production of coal for territory outside of that ordinarily supplied.

The maximum price must be high or the great production desired is checked. If human nature were such that that maximum would be accepted as a maximum, and otherwise coal were sold at a fair profit, all would be well, but the maximum becomes the minimum, the uniform, the usual price. Then, when the peak of demand is off and the supply is plentiful and the laws of supply and demand, if allowed to operate, would greatly reduce the price there is always the danger that these gentlemen who have taken over the coal business of the country shall cling to their administration of affairs and actually maintain prices higher than they would be if the laws of supply and demand were allowed to operate.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a portion of the remarks of Mr. Edgar Wallace, to which I have referred, made before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce yesterday. I do not know that I fully agree with Mr. Wallace, but I do agree with the views he expressed very largely.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to include in his remarks certain portions of the testimony delivered by Mr. Wallace. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. Wallace's remarks were as follows:

Mr. Chairman, my attention was called to this bill yesterday, and I have given it some study. As I understand it, the bill takes cognizance of the fact that nearly all the coal bins in the country are empty; that the bituminous coal miners have started to work, but that there is a danger, judging by past experience, that everyone will try to fill his coal bin completely immediately; that that will cause competition in buying, or, in fact, a buyers' panic, and that there will be a runaway market in which the prices will go soaring; and that in order to avert such a situation, as I understand it, there are provisions in this bill that there shall be a coal distributer controlling it. As I understand it, it is provided that the industries shall get what coal they need immediately to keep them going, but that no one shall be allowed to get all the coal he desires, or so much coal as to make it impossible for other people to get coal, and so, in that way, it is sought to avert a buyers' panic. We are in favor of that bill, or I would say, we are in favor of that much of the bill. We think it would have a tendency to eliminate the parasite from the industry that generally appears in such circumstances as the present—that is to say, the wash buyer, if you understand what I mean by that term. I mean the man who never does anything toward producing a ton of coal; the man who does not consume any coal; the man who fills no purpose, but who in times of panic will buy a number of cars of coal, take a profit from it, and possibly pass it on to others who are just such buyers as himself.

I believe the bill could be made more explicit if it would outlaw just such purchasers as that. As I have said, inasmuch as the buying public, or the coal consumers, would be assured that the Government would see that they got coal as they needed it, and, recognizing that the bituminous coal industry can not only produce the peak demand but can produce 25 per cent more than the peak demand, I believe that that part of the bill will be sufficient, also, to protect the public. I want to say this: That I am not in favor of any fixation of prices at the mines or anywhere else. The reason I am opposed to that is based upon past experience. The experience is that the Government fixes a maximum price, and that maximum price immediately becomes the minimum price. Furthermore, the Government can not, by its act, confiscate the property of the citizen, and hence the mine that is not economical, or the mine that is inefficiently managed, or the high-cost mine, becomes the standard, and the cost of coal is raised instead of being reduced by any attempt at price fixation that the Government can make and keep within its powers granted by the Constitution. Now, I believe that by protecting the consumers from this condition, or by averting fear, which is panic, and by making them recognize that the Government will see to it that they will get coal as they need it and when they need it, and the recognition of the fact that the industry is capable of producing plenty of coal, you will be able to prevent a runaway market. It will result in distributing the coal on hand as it is produced evenly over the country, and it will be beneficial. I want to say in connection with this that my fear of price fixation is based upon past experience.

If the gentlemen here will let their memory go back to the two industries that have been most disturbed in the last few years, you will find that they were industries that ran constantly prior to the war. There may have been local strikes here and there, but there was nothing very serious. There was never a railroad strike in the 30 years prior to the war of such consequence that it endangered the public. There was never a coal strike prior to the World War of such consequence that it endangered the public welfare generally, but since or during the war, recognizing those two industries as essential industries, there was Government price fixing in connection with them. There was Government price fixing and Government wage fixing at that time, and from that time there has been a tendency to demand Government interference, or a tendency on the part of the Government to interfere. Instead of preventing disturbance in those industries, they have caused a disturbance in the industries. The men in looking to the Government for their wages will hold the Government responsible for the disagreeable circumstances that arise in their everyday life because of the wage they lack, or because of the wage that they think they should have, but which they have not got. The blame is put on the Government, and I doubt whether the Government itself can stand under those circumstances. I repeat that the fact is that when the owners of the industry and their men were let go untrammeled, each recognizing the other's rights, they had no such disturbances, and the sooner we get back to that condition the sooner we will have eliminated the periodical disturbances. I think that if we permit the Government now to intercede to the extent of fixing wages and fixing prices we will only have another just such disturbance in the immediate future or in the near future. That condition will continue.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion let me say that I will vote for the bill because I believe legislation on the subject is under the circumstances probably necessary, but I do not vote for it with great enthusiasm. I vote for it in the hope that it will check and curb the profiteer. Properly administered I believe it will to a large extent. I also indulge the hope that we shall have few occasions in the history of the Republic when it is necessary to pass legislation of this character. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there are two phases that seem to be involved in the consideration of this bill. The first might be called the academic and the other the practical phase of the proposed legislation, and what it will probably effect or fail to accomplish. Like a good many other members of the committee, I served here during the period of the World War. During that time it was necessary for us under the emergencies of war to pass a number of unusual laws and confer unusual powers. Among them was the Lever Fuel Administration Act. Like some other gentlemen who have spoken before me, I represent a district engaged largely in the coal-mining industry, and I have some rather vivid recollections of the practical administration of that act during the war. That bill, under which the price of wheat was also regulated, was passed as an extreme war-time emergency act, and it clothed an executive branch of the Government with unusual and extraordinary powers. However, we are not confronted with a situation of that sort at the present time; the Government now is in a status of peace; and while it is true that there is in the country a rather unusual and distressing economic and industrial situation, I want to recall that this is not a unique experience in the history of our Government. In my recollection of affairs we have had a number of periods of depression and industrial crises no less acute than this which now confronts the country, and in order to solve the dilemmas confronting us at that time it was not necessary for us to go out into this absolutely new field of extraordinary legislation. We depended for the solution of those questions upon the natural economic working out of those difficulties, and I think that in a large measure we can depend upon that in this crisis. The bituminous coal strike in a large measure has been settled. Normal production in that field will soon be accomplished.

I see in this afternoon's issue of the Evening Star that the conflict between the anthracite coal miners and the operators is on the very verge of being settled, and probably will be within a week. The result of that will be that within a very short time we will be resolved back into a state of normal production of coal in both branches of the industry. As the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] has well pointed out in his remarks, this country has an ample supply and production under normal conditions to more than meet the requirements of the country. I know that the coal mines in my section only a few months ago were delighted to get very low prices for their product, and half the coal mines in my district not more than six or eight months ago were absolutely closed down because there was no demand for their product. That situation will be returned to within a very short time. The question of coal profiteering in meeting an exigency is not the real question involved here. As has well been pointed out, the acute difficulty of the country to-day is caused by the transportation situation, and no effort is being made in this legislation to meet and solve the thing which is causing the trouble. The gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], a member of the committee, admitted upon being questioned by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] that this bill absolutely carried no power either to the coal distributer or to the Interstate Commerce Commission to in any way penalize or punish the coal broker, who, as a matter of fact, is directly responsible for this profiteering proposition, but it seeks to offer the sole remedy of undertaking to penalize the profiteering coal operator; and, as a matter of fact, there is very little of that done in the general line of coal operations in this country, either in Alabama or in any of the other coal fields. So I say I do not think this legislation is justified or proper now as a practical proposition.

Simply because you have what might appear to be a rather pressing national emergency with reference to our fuel, you come in here and say there is a national emergency that justifies remedial legislation of an extraordinary character in that regard, and in a few months from now you may have some other proposition involving some other industry in the country that might present a temporary emergency of some sort, and you are embarking on a practice that you will be compelled to apply in any temporary emergency of an industrial or economic nature that might arise in the future.

I think it is a dangerous venture upon which we are now undertaking to embark, because it is absolutely without precedent in the history of our legislation. I think it is clothing the fuel distributer with temporary powers that are going to be very complicated, and that instead of effecting the purposes for which they are intended are going to create more confusion in the supply of fuel to the country. And if your memories will revert to the administration of the fuel act during the war you will readily recall many of the difficulties that confronted you in your official connection with that bureau. I believe that instead of increasing the amount of production of coal in this country, and therefore relieving to that extent the present necessities of the people, the effect of the legislation will be to reduce the amount of coal.

I have many small coal-mining industries in my home county and district, with only a small daily output—wagon mines, as they have been referred to here, and which contribute individually very little, but in the aggregate a considerable amount to the production of coal—and the people could not, in the maze of fuel legislation here, get their car supplies, with the result that it will inure to the benefit of the big coal miners who have existing contracts and to the detriment of numberless small mine operations in the country everywhere that have not those advantages. And I want to make a prophecy to you gentlemen who represent mines of that sort, that they are going to keep you busy to protect their interests and keep them running. And I am opposed to this bill because I think it trenches dangerously near to constitutional violation, if not entirely so. I believe it is setting a dangerous and vicious precedent in times of peace, and I do not believe it will effectuate the purpose that the proponents of the bill argue it will produce. Therefore I shall vote against it. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am not alarmed so much about the step that is taken here as I am about the direction in which we are traveling. I maintain that this is a very critical time for us to begin the breaking down of the spirit of the Constitution. Most of us who have been schooled to have reverence for our form of government which our fathers gave us believe that every man should have the opportunity to work out his own salvation unhampered by legal restraint if possible. I believe that this is a Government of opportunity, and that we dare not by legislation in peace time regulate and control to the extent of depriving our people of their initiative and their legitimate right to acquire wealth and develop industry. It has been said here, I think, this afternoon, although I have not heard much of the discussion, that if you regulate coal to-day you will regulate something else to-morrow. Why, I am going home one of these days; and if this bill passes, I will see an old farmer friend who wrote me some time ago and said, "Oscar, I have 72 head of hogs to be marketed right away. The price is low. It is in the power of Congress to fix the price. We farmers are being ruined, and you can not afford to let it happen. Fix the price of hogs and hurry up." I told him we did not have the power in peace time to do so. Some of these gentlemen from the East are going to say that the price of hogs is too high; that it ought to be regulated; that the packers should be told that they should only pay so much for a cow, a sheep, or a hog, and thereby reduce the cost of living. You can freeze from lack of warm, nourishing food or lack of clothes as well as from the lack of fuel. If you have the right to regulate one, you have the right to regulate the other. If an emergency concerning one can arise to justify this kind of legislation, it also can arise concerning the other.

Are we going to admit here that under our Constitution and our form of government Congress has the right to do the same thing that they do in Russia to-day, regulate prices and profits and almost everything of human interest by law? I have spent much of my time telling my constituents that during peace times, under our Constitution, we could not fix prices to control the high cost of living. Have I been wrong all this time? When did such a spirit of change in the fundamentals come to this body? When did our genial majority leader, who makes a speech against the bill but will vote for it, have such a change of heart? And those who are advocating this bill surely can not convince this House that this bill does not regulate the price of coal. It is a fundamental in law that you can not do indirectly what you can not do directly. The power is given in this bill to deny interstate commerce to anyone who sells coal at a certain figure. Do you know of any more effective way of fixing the price of coal? It is a mere subterfuge for you to say that that is not fixing the price. This is surely putting "government in business" with a vengeance. I would not want any better case, as a lawyer, than to go into the Federal court and enjoin the Interstate Commerce Commission from denying a client of mine the right to the shipment of his product because he sold at a price higher than was fixed by this fuel administrator under this proposed law. Do you mean to say that a Government administrator can fix the prices of all the products of the American producer?

If this law passes you will be called upon to regulate the price of shoes, clothing, and food. God knows they have been too high. And you men from the Northeast that are bristling with prejudice against the coal-mining industry, who are here to-day demanding your coal at a low figure and are willing to undermine the principles of the Constitution to get it, will reap the harvest that you sow. We know you make a good profit on your gloves, shoes, fabrics, and knit goods, and upon all the products which you manufacture, and they are as vital to the life, health, and happiness of our people as fuel; and if you have the right to regulate the selling price of one you have the right to regulate the other.

Last week you passed a law to find the facts concerning the coal industry for the purpose of future legislation. What in God's world do you want to find facts for if you are going to legislate and ruin the industry without the facts? Certainly you ought to have the facts. The President says, "I do not know anything about the industry," and demands a fact-finding agency. Now comes the President and asks us to pass a law giving the commission arbitrary power to fix the price of the commodity before the facts are found, and with an admission that you can not find the facts in less than a year.

They say that there is an emergency. You can declare an emergency at any time on anything necessary to the comfort of the people if this law stands. If a majority of this Congress can declare an emergency, we will declare one to-morrow on shoes and on many other products.

And you will have my friend from New York [Mr. LONDON], who smiles at me, voting with you all the time, because he believes in that kind of government, but most of you gentlemen do not believe in that kind of government.

"Oh," you say, "there is a national emergency existing that is driving us to it." The anthracite coal strike will be settled in a day or two. You know they can not hold out long after the bituminous strike is settled, and very soon all the mines will be at work. Already mines that have been idle for 10 months are opening, and they will soon be able to produce coal in abundance, at a high figure, it is true. The reason why there are so many coal mines in the country is that emergencies are so frequently occurring which boost the price and keep them going. We are trying to find the facts so as to get away from such emergencies, but it is not by having the Government violate the Constitution by fixing prices that we will get away from those emergencies. No; I think when you find out the facts you will have coal production in the summer time. I think you will require the railroad companies to store their coal, and they use one-third of all the coal that is produced in the United States. It is recognized that there are too many coal mines and too many coal miners in the United States. This is declared by John L. Lewis and also by representatives of the operators. We may deny aliens the right to work in coal mines. I do not know about this, but the thought occurs to me. I am not sure about this; I want to think about it. It is contended by some well-informed mining men that their presence in coal mines endangers the lives of every man in the mine. But I know this, that you can not solve this most dreadful problem by destroying your constitutional form of government and by setting a precedent that will bring ruin and confusion in the future. That is not a proper or desired solution of the problem. You have got to work it out on economic principles. Let the efficient competing mines compete with each other, and then you will frequently get the price of coal down below the cost of production, as it was before this crisis, and then some inefficient mines will go out of business.

You say the people are now paying $10 a ton for soft coal. That is largely because of the middlemen, the wholesaler and the retailer. Yet this bill does not touch them. Hands off the wholesaler and retailer and middlemen, but get after the mine operator and the miner! That is the slogan of the champions of the measure. One man takes the coal from the mine operator and puts on a profit of $2, and another one takes the same coal and puts on another profit of $2, but you do not seek to control those men at all.

I can show you mines all over this country that were mining coal at a loss before the strike. They had to keep their mines in operation. Of course, if they were all of them hoggish men—some of them are not—they would want to see a strike come on so that they could put up the price, and, of course, they are now getting an inflated price. If all these mines and these miners were working coal would be plentiful and cheap. This emergency, as you call it, will soon pass. Then we will work out this perplexing industrial problem without being confronted with the proposition that Congress has set the precedent that under the guise of an emergency it can take the property of its citizens and compensate as it sees fit in a time of peace. Indiana passed a coal control act. They attempted to control the price and distribution of the coal in that State. On November 27, 1920, the Vandalia Coal Co. and the Vigo Coal Products Co. prayed for an injunction restraining the State coal and food commission from interfering with their disposition of the coal produced in their mines on the following grounds:

First. That there was a direct interference with interstate commerce.
Second. An impairment of the completion of preexisting contracts.
Third. That the orders compelled the owner of coal land to sever the coal from his soil.
Fourth. That the orders interfered with the proper handling of coal, which was by its nature subject to risk of spontaneous combustion and consequent destruction.
Fifth. That there was a threat of execution of penalties.

Another point under the fourth head was that orders directing shipment to designated consignees involved entering into transactions with unknown persons whose credit was not known to be of such a nature as to warrant shipment without security. Each of these grounds was held to be a valid one for the issuance of an interlocutory injunction.

Mr. Ogle is president of the National Coal Association—he was president of both of the above corporations then—and he obtained a restraining order against the commission for the reasons I have cited. The State was trying to sell the product of these mines to irresponsible buyers. They were trying to prevent them from selling coal outside the State. They were told that they had to sell the coal within the State to certain fellows. They obtained the injunction from the court on the ground that there was a direct interference with interstate commerce. Can anyone contend that there will not be an interference with intrastate commerce if you can go into a State and say, "You must send this coal to a certain place outside the State"?

That injunction was granted by a Federal court. If it can grant an injunction against a State so controlling coal, how easily could it grant an injunction against the Federal Government handling it? What rights have we that are not given by the States?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. MAPES. Is that the same coal association that argued before the court in the District of Columbia that the production of coal was in interstate commerce?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I did not get the gentleman's point.

Mr. MAPES. Was the argument that the gentleman was reading from made by the same association that argued before the District court in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. No. That is the Maynard Coal Co. This is the Ogle Coal Products Co. and the Vandalia Coal Co.

Mr. MAPES. They both belong to the same National Coal Association, do they not?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I think so; Mr. Ogle belongs to it.

Now, with reference to the priority feature of this bill. During the war Mr. McAdoo said that stone was a nonessential. He shut down our stone quarries, and they remained shut down for two years, and our people suffered in consequence. Do you suppose to-day they are going to let the stone people have any coal for a so-called nonessential industry if coal continues scarce? The stone people are just getting on their feet again, but building operations will have to stop because they can not get the stone, and stone operations will have to stop because they can not get coal. I ask, Are the property rights of these people to be subject to such regulation and ruin as that? If so, we have no constitutional guaranties any more. Only 12 per cent of the coal produced in this country goes for domestic uses, for family consumption. The other 88 per cent is shipped to manufacturing concerns and railroads in carload lots and a small per cent is consumed at the mines. The railroads of the country will take care of themselves. They have the power to commandeer, and the Interstate Commerce Commission already has the power to get railroad coal. But you are creating a fuel administrator so that Senator So-and-so and Representative So-and-so have got to go down and see his lordship, the fuel administrator, in order to get coal for their constituents, and the fellow who has the longest pole will get it and the other fellow will feel aggrieved at a government that will be so unfair to him.

You leave the distribution of cars to the fuel administrator, and we have got to walk down Pennsylvania Avenue and tell him, on bended knee, that we want some cars in which to ship coal, and unless he is unlike any dictator I ever heard of he will be influenced by powerful influences. That is the chief reason why I am against Government ownership of great industries. That is the kind of government they have in Russia to-day that is bringing so much sorrow and death to its people. That is bureaucracy. Yet you are willing to try this experiment which every one of us in his heart of hearts knows is against the very bedrock principles of this Government. One of the strongest arguments against Government control of prices during a shortage is that if it makes the price low it retards and discourages production when the maximum of production is desired, and then when production has caught up with demand, if the price is high the consumer for a long period of time pays too much.

The present flurry must be declared to be an emergency, and a new power under the "welfare" clause of the Constitution must be tried out. John Marshall did not waver in time of "emergency" or we would have had no constitutional guaranties at all. He stood foursquare to the winds of public clamor and said these principles are those upon which the generations yet unborn must lean. Abraham Lincoln did not waver in time of "emergency." By refusing to temporize and stay public clamor he saved the Union, and the Union and all it stands for is here to-day for us to protect. Yet we are going on record here to-morrow as being willing to give the Government the power to fix the price of a man's toil; because if you have the right to fix the price of a man's commodity you have the right to fix the price of the toil that makes the commodity.

Mr. LONDON arose.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I wish to say to my friend from New York that if he supports this bill he is starting on the road that leads inevitably to the doctrine that a legislative body has the right to fix wages of the toiler who makes the commodity. I hope there is no man in the sound of my voice, whether he represents capital or labor, who believes the wages of the toiler should be left to the uncertainty of legislative action, with all its prejudices engendered by politics, sectionalism, and class prejudice.

Mr. VAILE. If you fix the price of commodities, do you not in effect fix the price of labor?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. You do absolutely, and that is the direction in which you are going here. You are dividing your country up into sections to fight each other, whereas, as it is now, they work out their own salvation. Are you going to have the agricultural interests arrayed against the manufacturing interests? Are you going to have them come here to see who has the most power with a Government bureau? I say, if you do not want that, do not take this step. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I assume that his remarks will be on this subject, as the debate is limited to the bill under consideration.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is not going to insert the speech of somebody else on prohibition? [Laughter.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No, sir.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to announce to the House that I now have the pleasure of yielding to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL], who desires the same consideration as my friend from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD]. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, this bill has "teeth" in it, and I shall vote for it with certain modifications which, I understand, are to be made in it. The men, the women, and the little children of my district to-day are in dread of the rapid approach of a winter which threatens to be coalless. The great industries of my district, the business and industrial center of Baltimore and Maryland, are threatened with stoppage because of the lack of coal. The cessation of these industries means starvation for thousands of my constituents.

In this Congress I have consistently fought any extension of the Federal Government's bureaucratic domination, but to-day there exists an extraordinary crisis which calls for measures similar to those we employed in the recent war. The bill before us for consideration (H. R. 12472) is a measure "to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributer, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel."

The national emergency which exists is very clearly expressed in the bill which has been reported by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. No one to-day can deny that the preamble to the bill is correct. It reads as follows: "That by reason of the prolonged interruption in the operation of a substantial part of the coal-mining industry in the United States, and of the impairment in the service of certain carriers engaged in commerce between the States, and by reason of the disturbance in economic and industrial conditions caused by the World War, a national emergency exists which endangers the public health and general welfare of the people of the United States, injures industry and business generally throughout the United States, causes extortion, limits the supply of heat, light, and power, threatens to obstruct and hamper the operation of the Government of the United States and of its several departments, the transportation of the mails, the operation and efficiency of the Army and the Navy, and the operation of carriers engaged in commerce among the several States and with foreign countries."

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] this afternoon referred to this measure as one of the most important that has come before us for our consideration. I agree with him. I am, however, in favor of the measure with certain modifications. I am inclined to favor, for instance, the elimination of section 9, which confers in perpetuity powers upon the President which by this bill are called for by the present emergency.

There is no man in the United States who has had more experience in such matters as coal distribution in time of emergency than the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hoover. In reference to this bill he has stated, "I am convinced there is a very great necessity in the country for some restraint on profiteering in coal and some further authority in the matter of distribution." He has also said that "It does seem to me that there is a public necessity for action; that there should be some restraint on the extortionate prices." He testified before the committee, "Our limit of coal at fair prices is a limitation on transportation, not of mining." He also stated that "We are behind some 35,000,000 tons in the production of anthracite coal." We have the authority of Secretary Hoover for the statement that about a month ago, as the coal situation became more tense, speculation began to grow among dealers in coal; at least 30 per cent of them were obviously profiteering in coal. The administration sought to extend purely voluntary measures of restraint by asking the governors of the States, as Secretary Hoover testified, if they would not set up local machinery, and this was done in a great many States; but in many instances the States, like the Federal Government, lacked any specific legislative authority.

I think that the underlying principle of this bill was well expressed to the committee by Mr. Farrell, the general counsel of the Interstate Commerce Commission, when he stated that in this bill Congress is providing that if the coal operator "does sell for shipment in interstate commerce he shall not exact an exorbitant price."

Fundamental opposition to Government interference in business has been repeatedly expressed by me on the floor of this House, but in such an emergency as at present exists I feel that the Interstate Commerce Commission should have the power granted by this bill. The hearings before the committee show that the present emergency is not one of coal production but of coal movement. The coal is being produced, and the operators are anxious to ship.

For the welfare of the people of my district, and of my State, and of the whole Nation, I feel we should promptly pass this measure, with certain modifications which I understand are to be made in it.

On motion of Mr. WINSLOW, the committee rose; and Mr. STAFFORD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12472 and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of interstate streams.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of interstate streams. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I obtained leave to print in the RECORD an amendment which I propose to offer. The amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SANDERS of Indiana: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"SECTION 1. That by reason of the shortage in coal and railroad equipment and in order that the Interstate Commerce Commission may have adequate information concerning the fuel situation, the President is authorized for a period of one year from the date this act takes effect to appoint a Federal fuel distributor and fix his compensation. He shall perform his duties under the authority and direction of the President. It shall be the duty of the Federal fuel distributor to ascertain (a) the available supply of coal and whether there exists within the United States or any part thereof a shortage or impending shortage of coal or other fuel and the extent of such shortage; (b) the fields of production of coal and other fuel and the principal markets to which such production is or may be transported and distributed and the means and methods of distribution thereat; (c) the kind and location of the consumers; and (d) whether persons, firms, corporations, regions, municipalities, or communities should receive priority in transportation and distribution, and the degree thereof, and any other facts relating to the transportation and distribution of coal and other fuel; and when so ascertained the Federal fuel distributor shall make appropriate recommendations pertaining thereto to the Interstate Commerce Commission from time to time either on his own motion or upon request of the commission, to the end that an equitable distribution of coal and other fuel may be secured so as best to meet the emergency and promote the general welfare.

"SEC. 2. Until the President shall determine that the shortage of coal and lack of sufficient car service no longer exists and makes proclamation thereof the provisions of paragraph 12 of section 1 of the interstate commerce act shall not be effective.

"SEC. 3. Every person or corporation, whether carrier or shipper, who shall knowingly offer, grant, or give, or solicit, accept, or receive any concession or discrimination in respect of car service, as the same is defined in paragraph 10 of section 1 of the interstate commerce act, in violation of any order, direction, or rule of the Interstate Commerce Commission in respect thereto, or who shall by any willful misrepresentation or by any fraudulent device or means whatsoever, procure or cause to be issued any order or direction for priority hereunder shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1000 nor more than $20,000 or imprisonment for a term of not exceeding two years, or both such fine and imprisonment.

"SEC. 4. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $250,000, available until expended, for the purposes of this act, including payment of personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and all expenses incident to organizing the Federal fuel distribution, and not exceeding $50,000 thereof shall be available for reimbursement and payment upon specific approval of the President of expenses incurred since May 15, 1922, in connection with the matters embraced in the title of this act under authority of the President."

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker, recently in my great home city, Atlanta, twelve hundred wonderful, winsome women, composing the membership of the Atlanta Woman's Club, erected a beautiful auditorium in connection with their beautiful clubhouse on Peachtree Street. It is the largest and handsomest auditorium, I believe, ever erected by any woman's club in America.

It was my high honor to be invited to deliver the dedication address at the opening of this new building, and I was profoundly impressed with the power and possibilities of leadership on the part of our newly emancipated women citizens. My subject on that occasion was "Woman's Winsome Americanism," and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by publishing that address in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. May I ask the gentleman if there will be any photographs of those wonderful, winsome women? [Laughter.]

Mr. UPSHAW. No; I am sorry to say there will be no photographs of these beautiful, forward-looking constituents of mine, but you can visualize the beauty and greatness of their soul and character by the grandeur of their achievement. I list here the names of the building committee of this club that has given such an inspiring example to the women of America:

MEMBERS OF THE BUILDING COMMITTEE.

Mrs. B. M. Boykin, president Atlanta Woman's Club; Mrs. Alonzo Richardson, chairman building committee; Mrs. Hamilton Douglas; Mrs. Arthur Henry Hazzard; Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith; Mrs. Irving S. Thomas; Mrs. A. McD. Wilson; Mrs. Newton C. Wing; Mrs. McCord Roberts, secretary to the president.

WOMAN'S WINSOME AMERICANISM.

Madame President, members of the Atlanta Woman's Club, ladies and gentlemen: "Woman's Winsome Americanism" is as much a fascinating fact in action as it is an inspiring theme for this dedication hour. The impact of its measureless meaning brings a mighty challenge alike to the ranks of American chivalry and the realm of practical patriotism.

Indeed, the very erection of this beautiful building, with woman as the alpha and omega of resourceful and victorious perseverance, gives to Atlanta and to organized womanhood all over America an almost startling, concrete illustration of what winsome womanhood can do when she takes counsel of her community needs and resolves and declares, "This thing shall be done."

It is related that when "Old Hickory" Jackson's body servant was asked if he thought his "Marse Andrew" was going to heaven when he died, the old negro replied, "I dunno, sah, Boss, but if Ole Master set his head to go dar, he's going dar."

Anybody who saw this building so long as an illustration of the nebular hypothesis, who then witnessed it evolve from tentative and diminutive beginnings into its present spacious and gracious completeness, will readily agree that some forward-looking, resolute, resourceful women "set their heads" after the fashion of Old Hickory, saying, "This thing shall be done for the sake of a greater Atlanta and a more progressive and useful womanhood."

GLAD HE VOTED FOR WOMAN'S EMANCIPATION.

When I survey this magnificent achievement of the worth-while women of my great home city and remember, too, all the practical, patriotic service from so many angles which they have rendered, and will yet render the public, I am gladder than ever that I voted in Congress for the political emancipation of woman—for a governmental recognition of the fact that you women (bless your winsome souls) have just as much sense as the ugly men whom you bless and inspire with your daily presence, and just as much patriotism as the jabbering foreigners who are allowed to come over here and vote before they can even speak the English language.

Now, if some of you gentlemen want to—you men who don't like intelligent, patriotic women to vote because you are afraid they will make you "walk a chalk line" in the election of righteous officials—if you want to, I say, you can put your arm around a jabbering foreigner and lead him up beneath the American flag and tell him to rejoice in his new-found wealth of privilege and power in the "land of the free and the home of the brave," but I prefer to put my arm around the emancipated American woman (no, no, that don't sound quite right), I mean my wife, of course, but I will take my stand by the side of the American woman and ask her to look anew at the American flag and remember that the beauty of its stars and the glory of its stripes mean, at last, her fundamental equity, not only in personal obligation but in personal privilege.

Verily, if intelligence, character, and patriotism are essential qualifications for political equity, show me the man who will dare assert that woman can not qualify. That poor blind man would just about have to cook his own breakfast to-morrow morning and mend his own trousers and darn his own socks from now until the judgment day.

"TELL IT NOT IN GATH."

And ah, winsome and winning, vigorous and victorious handmaidens of Georgia—"Tell it not in Gath, whisper it not in the streets of Askelon"—that in the fact of your many achievements, past, present, and to come, my treasured comrades of the male persuasion will no longer look upon you as "dreamers who dream that you are dreaming," but as citizens who know that you are voting! Selah! and e pluribus unum!

I heard of a pedantic young schoolteacher on whom some of his verdant neighbors called. "Professor," they said as they showed him a new silver dollar, "they tell us there ain't nothing what you don't know. Please tell us what this new language is—e pluribus unum, it don't sound like United States." And the young teacher, knitting his brow and scratching his head, replied: "Certainly, I know what it means—er—er—that is, I did know what it means—oh, yes, I got it now—e pluribus unum—that means there's plenty more where that comes from." And the suave, complacent—and yet (they might as well confess it)—somewhat excited gentlemen with "jolted" political ambitions, who, to say the least, were not conspicuous in seeking your political emancipation, will find out before you have been very long in action that there are plenty more where you came from, and that although many of the fairest and brightest women in Georgia who had been rocked in the cradle of southern chivalry and steeped in the sentiment of "woman's sweet dependence" did not desire the ballot, they accept it now as a sacred responsibility, realizing the truth that my father taught me around a family altar, "If good citizens do not control this Government, bad citizens will."

WOMAN'S UNIQUE AMERICANISM.

This brings us to a frank discussion of woman's peculiar relationship to Americanism, for woman's Americanism is as unique as it is winsome. Americanism, in itself, is a word of worthy origin, and it ought to be a word of definite and undisputed meaning. But the exigencies, the passions, and the problems growing out of the great conflict through which our Nation has just passed and whose complex problems still press for solution have taken that very worthy word and subjected it to varying and colorful interpretations. We remember with a smile how opposing local and national candidates in different political camps grabbed that word and ran off with it, dancing the war dance and holding high carnival over "Americanism" as the theme of their song and the slogan of their battle. Editors epitomized it, preachers preached it, teachers taught it, patriots proclaimed it, politicians paraded it, each with different angles of meaning, until millions of laymen shouted, "Which way I fly is Americanism! What is Americanism, anyhow?" One man declared, while the crowd whooped: "I am for America first, last, and all the time—let the rest of the world go to the devil!" Yea, yea, and nay, nay! I stand for America first, last, and all the time, but my reverence for God and my love for mankind will not allow me to say, "Let the rest of the world go to the devil."

THE SCHOOLHOUSE, THE BIBLE, AND THE AMERICAN FLAG.

Without apology—indeed, with 100 per cent pride—I declare that I belong to that inspiring company of young patriots, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, who stand for three great foundation stones in building the temple of stable, intelligent, God-fearing citizenship—the schoolhouse, the Bible, and the American flag. But if we stand for the beneficence and the emancipation that comes from the education of the masses, we can not be so selfish as to deny that wholesome beneficence to any man or woman whom God has made; and if we believe in that greater, that regenerating, that transforming beneficence taught by the old-time Bible, we certainly would not deny that saving, uplifting influence to any of God's creatures under the sun; and if we really believe in the beauty and glory of the American flag—that flag that has never led us into a selfish war, and, therefore, thank God, has never known defeat—if we believe, with Emerson, that America is God's last, best national effort in behalf of the human race, we would make our beautiful flag not only the supreme object of our Nation's love, but the inspiration—God help us—of all the upward-struggling peoples of this burdened, restless world.

I think that the best definition of Americanism that I have yet heard was given at a patriotic rally in Washington by that stalwart son of the South, Josephus Daniels, who performed the glorious paradox of making the Navy "dry." The then Secretary of the Navy said: "I believe in 100 per cent Americanism—and then some."

The "100 per cent Americanism" means, of course, an intelligent devotion to America's best upbuilding, with no phase or form of binding allegiance to any foreign power or potentate. And the "then some" means our proud and grateful recognition of America's divinely appointed leadership in the fellowship of nations, and America's consecrated purpose to dedicate that leadership to the good of humanity and the glory of God.

MUST BE LOYAL.

The Americanism that must help America solve its complex problems must, first of all, be loyal. And that loyalty must be based on character and intelligence. Women citizens will find here a tremendous challenge to their genius and their patriotism.

It will not help—indeed, it will greatly hinder—the growth of that full-orbed Americanism which is absolutely essential to our national safety if segments and colonies of foreign ideals and foreign influences are allowed to grow and multiply on American soil. To that end I have introduced in Congress a bill making it unlawful to put the name of any foreign country before the name of America in the caption of any organization—fraternal, commercial, or ecclesiastical. No more "Little Italies," "Little Germanies," "Little Russias" or "Little Irelands" seeking to make foreign ideals and foreign customs dominate the free, the simple Americanism of America.

If America meets and solves her own internal problem we can not do it with hyphenated Americanism. It must be undiluted, "100 per cent proof."

I have also introduced a companion bill making it unlawful to publish and circulate through the mails any periodical in any foreign language that does not carry an English translation in a parallel column. Think of the eventualities in this country if America were attacked from without and betrayed from within, with one-third of our population under domination of foreign ideals. This is not narrow—this is "safety first."

A HIGH AND HOLY TASK.

To this high and holy task—making and keeping America pure—measureless in scope and with tenure eternal, patriotic, God-fearing womanhood comes with an eager and joyous consecration of all her winsome wondrous powers. And why is woman's unique patriotism called a "winsome Americanism"? Because the giver of her peculiar brand of citizenship is winsome in its presentation. The star beam has not left her eye and the roses have not left her cheeks, because she has studied political economy and constitutional government in school and will henceforth wrap a regnant conscience around a spotless ballot in the practical expression of her ideals and the guardian assertion of her character. Hers to give to us that embryonic citizenship which, according to Jacob Riis, is "the to-morrow of the Republic," and hers to help see to it that America shall be a fit place in which her children may grow into full-orbed, God-fearing citizens.

If man's citizenship has made us all think of masculinity in virtues as well as vices, then woman's citizenship is to make us think of the finer side of patriotism. She is to beautify the temple of Americanism! She is to adorn it with pictures, enrich it with ideals, glorify it with purity, and fill it with all the music and the radiance which her magnetic personality can alone impart.

Woman—modest, tender, gentle—sent to brighten sterner life,
Woman in the sweet relation—mother, sister, sweetheart, wife;
Not without its deeper import was she cast in beauty's mold—
Woman is of finer nature, higher purpose, whiter-souled. * * *

That is man's real concept of woman's nature and woman's refining influence when touched and led by the hand of God. She will not "rock the cradle" less, but she will "rock" the fellow more who interferes with the little young American in that cradle by passing laws that stab her heart and poison the social, civic, and political fountain where the children of her home must drink to their mental and moral deformity and their spiritual undoing.

LOYAL TO LAWS OF GOD AND MAN.

No man who is worthy the name can bring himself to think of the woman he loves as mother, sister, sweetheart, or wife as being disloyal to the laws of God or the laws of man. It is bad enough to think of an irreverent, irreligious man, but the picture of an irreverent, irreligious woman makes the world stagger. The supremest need of our Nation to-day in these testing times of personal and national travail is the God-fearing citizenship that must rise to meet the hour from the family altar of an old-time Christian home.

And from this Christian citizenship that must project itself beyond the club room, the lodge room, and the church-house door must spring and cling that vital reverence for the Constitution of our Government and the laws of our country which is enjoined by the laws of God and essential to the perpetuity of our Nation.

In the closing moments of this great dedication hour let us as patriots—not as man-citizens or woman-citizens, but as full-orbed American citizens—pronounce again that ringing shibboleth of patriotism, "The American Creed." William Tyler Page, the brilliant author of that inspiring classic, personally presented me this copy for this high and ardent hour.

Let this wonderful audience of patriotic women reverently stand while we dedicate this beautiful new building and ourselves afresh to our children, our flag, and our God.

THE AMERICAN CREED.

"I believe in the United States of America as a government of the people, by the people, for the people, whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a Republic; a sovereign Nation of many sovereign States; a perfect Union, one and inseparable; established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice, and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes.

"I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it, to support its Constitution, to obey its laws, to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies."

One of America's most insidious enemies is the illicit liquor traffic, which tramples the Constitution of the United States, debauches the citizenship without which our Nation can not endure, and defies the sacred emblem which we have, legally and constitutionally, "a stainless flag." The man or the woman, high or low, who helps encourage the crimes of lawbreakers and liars, forgets the fact that the eighteenth amendment is just as much a part of the Constitution as the nineteenth amendment and was placed there by a much more signal majority. Not only the self-respect and sobriety of our sons and daughters are at stake, but the fate, the heart, the hope, and the happiness of the watching, staggering nations of the earth.

To break this law on stylish Peachtree Street and in wealthy Druid Hills is just as much a crime—indeed, because of gilded trappings and far-reaching influence, more a crime than in the black, back alley of ignorant defiance. It is not enough for women citizens to sing anthems about patriotism and dream beautiful Eutopian dreams about standing by the Constitution and the flag. "The ideal woman is she who thinks what others only dream, who says what others only think, who does what others only say, and who glorifies in what others dare but do!"

It is the high and deathless evangel of "woman's winsome Americanism" to help preserve the stainless majesty of the beautiful flag that protects her home, and whether in the kingdom temporal or the kingdom eternal, fulfill Goldsmith's dream of "The Village Preacher," who—

"Lured to brighter worlds and led the way."

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will ask the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] if Calendar Wednesday has been set aside?

Mr. MONDELL. Calendar Wednesday has not been set aside.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What does the gentleman want to do about that?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to dispense with the business in order on Calendar Wednesday to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, August 30, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. WINSLOW: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H. R. 12472. A bill to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributer, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel; with amendments (Rept. No. 1196). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SMITHWICK: A bill (H. R. 12488) to increase the appropriation for the collection and distribution of market information by the Bureau of Markets; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. CULLEN: A bill (H. R. 12489) to amend the Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, Public Law No. 259, Sixty-seventh Congress, approved June 30, 1922; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOGAN: A bill (H. R. 12490) to erect a statue of Edward Douglass White; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. SHAW: A bill (H. R. 12491) authorizing the acceptance from the State of Illinois of the Old Salem State Park, Petersburg, Ill.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. SANDERS of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 12492) to direct the Secretary of the Interior to grant to certain persons and corporations leases of certain lands, and the oil and gas deposits therein, lying south of the medial line of the main channel of Red River in Oklahoma, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. ANTHONY: A bill (H. R. 12493) amending the act of June 30, 1922, making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CULLEN: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, relating to the control of the flood waters of the Mississippi River; to the Committee on Flood Control.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BURROUGHS: A bill (H. R. 12494) granting a pension to Mary E. Bassett; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COPLEY: A bill (H. R. 12495) granting a pension to Bertram Bell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DARROW: A bill (H. R. 12496) granting an increase of pension to Ada L. Kinsey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FAIRCHILD: A bill (H. R. 12497) granting a pension to Mary Adzetta Mechan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: A bill (H. R. 12498) granting a pension to Dudley H. Wright; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 12499) granting an increase of pension to Lindia Bentley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KOPP: A bill (H. R. 12500) granting a pension to Harriett L. Sheets; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12501) granting an increase of pension to Belle Torrence; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 12502) granting an increase of pension to George H. Clay; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12503) granting an increase of pension to Louisa Fields; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12504) granting an increase of pension to William Cunagim; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12505) granting an increase of pension to Dennis B. Conley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MAPES: A bill (H. R. 12506) granting an increase of pension to Fred Kape; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MILLSPAUGH: A bill (H. R. 12507) granting an increase of pension to Elenor J. Valeu; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REECE: A bill (H. R. 12508) granting a pension to Lona Dowell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SEARS: A bill (H. R. 12509) for the relief of Archibald L. Macnair; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SMITHWICK: A bill (H. R. 12510) for the relief of occupants of certain premises within the naval station at Pensacola, Fla.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SPEAKS: A bill (H. R. 12511) granting an increase of pension to Mary Bee; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WURZBACH: A bill (H. R. 12512) granting an increase of pension to Clara E. Cheesman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12513) granting an increase of pension to Helen C. Blumer; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WEAVER: A bill (H. R. 12514) granting a pension to Robert Garrett; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6245. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of Thomas B. Healey, business manager of the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association No. 33, New York City, favoring retirement and longevity pay for engineers in United States Army Mine Planter Service just the same as is now provided for officers of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

6246. By Mr. FRENCH: Petition of St. Anthony Kiwanis Club, of St. Anthony, Idaho, condemning the lawlessness in Herrin, Ill., on June 22, 1922, and expressing the condemnation of the members of the Kiwanis Club on account of the crimes committed; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6247. By Mr. FULLER: Petition of the Rockford (Ill.) Milling Machine Co. favoring adequate protective duties on machine tools; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6248. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Mr. William Kaspar, Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the 40 per cent tariff on wire cloth; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6249. Also, petition of Association of Missouri Banks and Trust Companies opposed to branch banking, St. Louis, Mo.; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, August 30, 1922.

(Legislative day of Friday, August 25, 1922.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frelinghuysen	Myers	Simmons
Ball	Gerry	Nelson	Smith
Borah	Gooding	New	Smoot
Brandegee	Hale	Newberry	Stanfield
Broussard	Heflin	Nicholson	Sterling
Bursum	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Sutherland
Cameron	Kellogg	Pepper	Trammell
Capper	Kendrick	Phipps	Underwood
Colt	Keyes	Pittman	Wadsworth
Culberson	La Follette	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Lenroot	Rawson	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Lodge	Reed, Mo.	Warren
Dial	McCumber	Reed, Pa.	Watson, Ga.
Dillingham	McKellar	Robinson	Watson, Ind.
Edge	McLean	Sheppard	Williams
Fletcher	McNary	Shortridge	Willis

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

SENATOR FROM MICHIGAN—CORRECTION.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, on August 24, in the course of some discussion of the Newberry case precipitated by the presentation for incorporation in the record by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] of the letter of Secretary Hughes on that subject, I read into the record what purported to be an interview with Judge William S. Kenyon upon the Hughes letter. I was in error in attributing the remarks thus made to Judge Kenyon.

For the sake of truthfulness of the record and accuracy, I now announce that I was in error in supposing that the sentiments were expressed by Judge Kenyon, who gave no interview on the subject. It is unnecessary to state how I came to fall into the error, but the remarks were wrongfully attributed to him. However, I am perfectly certain that if Judge Kenyon were still a Member of this body he would have expressed views quite like those which were attributed to him in the article from which I quoted.

RELEASE OF POLITICAL PRISONERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a resolution of the Federated Textile Unions of America adopted at its recent convention in New York, N. Y., favoring the release of all political prisoners in the country, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9866) authorizing the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. to sue the United States to recover damages resulting from collision, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 896) thereon.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN introduced a bill (S. 3968) to improve the navigability of waters of the United States by preventing oil pollution thereof, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COMPENSATION OF WORLD WAR VETERANS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which will be read by the Secretary.

The READING CLERK. On page 9, strike out lines 17 to 24, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof:

SEC. 305. Immediately upon the passage of this act the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall ascertain the individuals who are veterans as defined in section 2 and, as to each veteran, the number of days of overseas service and of home service, as defined in section 2, for which he is entitled to receive adjusted-service credit, and their findings shall not be subject to review by the General Accounting Office, and payments made by disbursing officers of the War and Navy Departments, made in accordance with such findings, shall be passed to their credit.

Mr. LENROOT. The only change made is in the last clause of the paragraph—

And payments made by disbursing officers of the War and Navy Departments, made in accordance with such findings, shall be passed to their credit.

I have offered the amendment because of a letter from the finance officers of the War Department. It relates only to administration, the saving of red tape, and also the saving of some money in administration. I have talked with the chairman of the committee and I think he is willing to let it go to conference.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am perfectly willing to let it go to conference, that we may study it there to better advantage than we can here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. I now offer another amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin offers a further amendment which the Secretary will read.

The READING CLERK. On page 11, strike out lines 8 to 11, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof:

SEC. 402. Payment shall be made by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy according as to whether the veteran's service for which he is entitled to receive adjusted service pay was with the military forces or with the naval forces: Provided, That if such service of the veteran was in both forces he shall be paid by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy according to the force in which he first served during the compensable service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. SIMMONS. What is the character of the amendment which has just been proposed, Mr. President?

Mr. LENROOT. I will explain that it is another amendment suggested by the finance office of the War Department and relating only to administration. As the bill now reads, if a veteran entitled to compensation happens now to be serving in the Navy, under the bill that compensation must be paid by the Navy Department, although he had no service in the Navy during the war. Under the amendment the compensation will be made by the department in which the service during the war was rendered, and if service during the war was rendered in both departments the compensation shall be paid by the department where the service first occurred. The object of the amendment is simply to save money and unnecessary work in the administration of the law.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand the amendment is earnestly recommended by the finance officers of the War Department.

Mr. LENROOT. The only purpose of the amendment is to simplify the administration.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is now on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is preparing an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I merely wish to have the yeas and nays ordered on the so-called Bursum amendment.

Mr. BURSUM. Before the yeas and nays shall be ordered I desire to say a word.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not intend to cut the Senator off. There was nothing being done, and I merely did not want the vote to come without the yeas and nays.

Mr. BURSUM. The Senator from North Carolina desires to suggest a substitute for a section of my amendment, and he is now preparing it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the substitute proposed by the Senator from New Mexico to strike out section 805 of the substitute amendment and to insert the amendment which I offered on yesterday, but of which I have not now before me a copy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina, which, as the Chair understands, is to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. SIMMONS. In applying to the pending amendment the amendment which I offered, and which was adopted, on yesterday to the bill I wish to change it by striking out, in line 23, the words "of Titles IV and V." Those words are not appropriate to the pending amendment. With that modification, I now offer my amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] proposes, on pages 20 and 21 of the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM], to strike out section 805, as follows:

SEC. 805. That whenever it is deemed to be for the best interests of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is authorized to sell any bonds or other obligations of any foreign Government refunded or converted by the World War Foreign Debt Commission under authority of the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922, upon such terms and conditions as such Secretary may prescribe, and to apply the proceeds of such sales and any payments received on account of the principal of such bonds and other obligations to defray any expenditures incurred under the provisions of this act.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 805. There is hereby appropriated such amount as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, to be paid out of and to be a first charge upon the interest received by the United States on obligations of foreign Governments. If at any time the amount of such interest is not sufficient to meet the appropriation hereby made the same shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I desire that my proposed amendment be modified in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I suggest that the Senator from New Mexico has a right to modify his proposal, and that he accepts the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico has the right to so modify his amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. And he has indicated that he desires to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from New Mexico desires to modify his amendment.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I desire to modify my substitute in accordance with the suggestion which has been made by the Senator from North Carolina. As stated by the Secretary, the amendment as modified will provide that the conditions of financing shall be the same as provided in the amendment which was adopted on yesterday by the Senate as a part of the committee bill.

Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in regard to my proposed substitute. It is not my purpose to embarrass or to complicate the pending bill, but the substitute has been offered with a view of making a businesslike settlement of this obligation, a settlement on such a basis as a business man would ordinarily adopt in liquidating a debt. It does not curtail the allowance to the soldier of $1 per day for service at home and $1.25 for service overseas, but there is merely a difference in the method of financing.

The substitute provides for the payment within a year, or as soon as may be practicable after the passage of the proposed act, of 50 per cent of the allowance for the service of the ex-service man and of the other 50 per cent within five years thereafter. The deferred payment carries with it interest at the rate of 3½ per cent.

My objection to the plan provided by the committee bill as reported is based on the method of financing, in that it uses directly the credit of the ex-service man and indirectly the credit of the Government, and yet proposes to pay for that privilege a high rate of interest, which, under the authority provided for in the bill, may amount to approximately 7½ per cent. The bill as reported by the committee provides that an amount equal to 50 per cent of the adjusted compensation may be borrowed from the banks of the country and the certificates be pledged as collateral. In other words, such certificates are negotiable under those conditions, and interest may be charged to the extent of not exceeding 2 per cent plus the rate of the Federal reserve bank in the district wherein the loan shall be made.

That means that when the Government of the United States issues its obligations, to be repaid in three years or in 1926, those obligations may bear interest at a rate as high as 7½ per cent. That is exactly what it means.

My objection to the plan proposed by the committee is that it offers an opportunity to profiteers not only to profit at the expense of the Government but to profit at the expense of the veterans. For instance, 50 per cent of the outstanding certificates on the basis of adjusted compensation would amount approximately to $700,000,000. Therefore, $700,000,000 may be borrowed at rates as high as 7½ per cent, although the Government is behind the obligations and the Government pledges in the law that the money will be paid out of the Treasury at the time of maturity. So the bill as reported means the issuance by the Government of certificates of indebtedness to be repaid at an interest rate of 7½ per cent while it is notoriously known that the Government has a credit basis of 3½ per cent at the present time. Seven and a half per cent might have been a fair rate for the bonds of France at the end of the war, and the bonds of France were sold on a basis of 7½ per cent in this country.

Under the circumstances to which I have referred the result will be that associations will be formed to take up these loans on the basis of 7½ per cent, and such associations will make the difference between the 3½ per cent and 7½ per cent annually, representing a profit of 4 per cent. On $700,000,000 such a profit will amount to $28,000,000 a year and for three years will aggregate $84,000,000. Three per cent of that amount will come out of the pockets of the veteran, and will approximate, in round numbers, $63,000,000, while $21,000,000 will come out of the Treasury of the Government.

I submit, Mr. President, that it is childish to formulate that sort of a policy and say that we have not issued outstanding obligations. It reminds me of the ostrich undertaking to hide from view by burying his head in the sand. We say we issue no certificates, but, as a matter of fact, we do issue certificates. The proposed law on its face pledges the Treasury to pay these loans in three years, namely, 1926, at extortionate rates of interest, and thereby puts a premium upon profiteering, and most of the money will come out of the veteran. He will not be benefited by it. On the other hand, there is a great difference between the committee bill and the substitute which I have offered in the matter of the carrying charges of the obligations incurred. My amendment, as I have said, provides for the payment of one-half cash, the payment of the other half at the end of five years; but if both items were carried for 20 years the charges under the proposed substitute would be $45,000,000 a year, while under the committee bill as reported the annual charge would be $90,000,000 a year; and upon the premise that we borrowed the money and did not pay it for 20 years, the difference between the total final cost of the bill as reported and the amendment offered by me would be the difference, approximately, between $2,400,000,000 and $4,000,000,000.

So under the substitute proposal we will not only promptly pay the veteran the money which we are providing for him but we will save the Government in the transaction nearly a billion and a half dollars. That is the difference between the bill as reported and the amendment offered by me. If we are going to pay this money, if it is a debt which we owe—and I say that it is a debt—I can not for the life of me see where the objection can come. The Government uses its own credit on the best terms obtainable, which we know now can be obtained on a basis of 3½ per cent in the public money market.

I can not understand why we should issue a certificate of indebtedness—and that is what we are doing under the bill as reported by the committee; it is nothing more nor less than a certificate of indebtedness—which permits a rate of interest which may amount to 7½ per cent. Such a plan will permit profiteering to the extent of $84,000,000 above the market value of money at the present time, and $61,000,000 of the $84,000,000 will come out of the pocket of the veteran, for the reason that the Government pays the veteran 4½ per cent and the veteran must pay 7½ per cent annually for this three-year loan.

Why can we not act as would a business concern, as would a banking concern? If we owe the money, let us borrow it on our own credit, let us obtain it upon the best terms possible, and let us liquidate this indebtedness honorably and in keeping with the transactions of a great and powerful government.

This bill is called an adjusted compensation bill. I do not quarrel with the title, but I do not think that is a proper name. It ought to be called an adjusted accounting between the Government and the veterans. I recognize, and I think every man who has given thought to the subject recognizes, that the Government has withheld from the veterans sums of money which it was not rightfully or morally entitled to withhold, such as the insurance of $7.50 a month which was deducted from the pay of every veteran, and such as the allotments to dependents, amounting to as much as $15 a month. We granted a bonus of $20 a month to the civil employees of the Government. There is no reason why we should not have accorded the same treatment to the veteran, to the soldier who was fighting for us. These sums in the aggregate will amount to more than the sum provided for in either of these bills. They are both alike, so far as that part of it is concerned—the dollar a day for home service and the dollar and a quarter a day for overseas service. It is true that some veterans may receive more under the bill than they would receive by an auditing, but others would receive less. The minimum sum, if the rightful claims were to be audited, would come to $27 a month, and the maximum would come to $47 a month; so that the bill is very nearly right. I think it will average a little under what is rightfully due the veteran.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator has touched upon one point. I should like to get information from the committee as to why it is that in section 502, subdivision (b), the bill limits or defines the character of the banks where these papers may be discounted, and then states that the bank accepting the certificate and the note of the veteran shall have the right to charge 2 per cent in addition to the rate of rediscount obtaining in the district where the bank at which the paper is discounted is located. In other words, if the rate of rediscount at a regional bank in a given district is 5 per cent, then the bank is authorized to charge the veteran 7 per cent for the rediscount of his paper. If the rate of rediscount should advance—as it did advance upon the word and authority of the powers that be here in Washington that have charge of our banking system—to 6 per cent, then the bank would charge 8 per cent. The rate of rediscount varies in various districts. Therefore the veterans would pay various rates to obtain money from the banks upon a Government security.

Upon the face of it, that looks as though we were offering a bonus to the banks to carry for a certain length of time this Government obligation, and we will allow them to subtract it from the soldier himself. There is no division. The Government gets none of that. It is paying a rate of interest of 4½ per cent, I believe; but the soldier, in rediscounting his paper, has to pay the ordinary commercial rate of interest in order to get an advance on the amount that we promised to pay him, and for a year he has to pay 7½ to 8 per cent; and I suppose that when he hands in his note the discount will be immediately taken out, which, under the ordinary 8 per cent rate, would amount to 9 per cent, because he advances the discount when he gets the money.

Inasmuch as the banks are practically Government banks, under the control of Government officials, I do not understand why we can not stipulate that the rate of interest that the veteran shall pay for the money advanced shall be exactly equal to the rate of interest that the Government shall pay on the paper to him. I should like to have an explanation as to why the committee saw fit to take the Government's obligations and leave them to be hawked on the market simply as prime commercial paper, to the detriment of those that we are professing to try to serve.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator. There is nothing in the bill saying that the bank shall charge a certain rate of interest. All there is in the bill is the same provision that there would be in a usury law, that the bank shall not charge more than that, just as it may be an offense, perhaps, in the State of Kentucky to charge more than 6 per cent; it may be an offense in my State to charge more than 12 per cent. The party does not need to make the loan unless he sees fit. The bank may not want to make the loan at all, even at those rates; but we are saying to the bank: "You can not go beyond such a rate. If you go beyond such a rate, it will be equivalent to usury"; and it is simply a limitation. If we said nothing about it, the banks might charge 10 or 12 per cent; but we say: "You shall not go more than 2 per cent above the discount rates in the particular district."

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes. I suppose I am talking now in the time of the Senator from South Carolina. I am answering his question. I am not certain whether his time is up or not.

Mr. BURSUM. I was going to ask the Senator if he ever heard of banks charging less than the law limited them to. In usual commercial business, has the general experience been that banks charge less than they are allowed to by law?

Mr. McCUMBER. Why, yes, as a rule; but we all know—take it in my State—money is pretty scarce. I think the ordinary banks that you would go to would be inclined to charge very much more than 2 per cent above what is called the regular Federal reserve discount rate, and we want, at least, to prohibit them going above that.

Now, Mr. President, I want to speak for a moment upon the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

I confess that I can easily understand how an enemy of this compensation bill should eagerly vote for any kind of an amendment that would load it down, that would tend to kill it. I probably would do the same thing if I wanted to see it killed; but I can not understand how a professed friend of the bill would seek to put on it amendments which would endanger its life.

I wish Senators would stop for a moment, and not approach any kind of a new amendment with absolute recklessness in the discussion of this bill. It is well known that we have to guide the bill through somewhat delicate channels if we are to have it enacted into law.

We are trying to avoid just as many obstacles as we can. We are trying to put it in a position in which there will be no excuse for the Executive to disagree with the two Houses of Congress, and we ought not to attempt to load it down with a provision that would exaggerate the differences that have existed between the Executive and the Congress, as evidenced by the statements that have been made in the press, as evidenced by the discussion on the floor, as evidenced by the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury of a year ago, as evidenced by the special message of the President to the Senate when he asked that the bill be referred back to the committee. Those things ought to indicate to Senators that we have some difficulty in so shaping this legislation that at least it can meet all prior objections. What new ones may arise upon the horizon I know not.

The House has tried to make a bill that would meet the objections that were urged by the Executive from time to time. The Senate Committee on Finance was actuated by exactly the same desire. We have made amendments, some very important ones, to this bill. I shall not discuss their merits, or what effect they may have on the bill; but here suddenly comes in a substitute that is to throw into discard every amendment the Senate has made, and approach this subject from an entirely different standpoint, one which requires in the years 1923 and 1924 a sum to be paid many times greater than is required under the bill as it is now drawn. As we present the bill, there will not be an expense of more than $78,000,000 for 1923, and not more than $92,000,000, I think, for 1924, dropping down to some $70,000,000, and then going down rapidly for the succeeding years. That ought not to interfere with any financial policy of this Government. As to the other proposal, while I think we could take care of it, I do think nevertheless that those who have grave fears of its effect might consider that it was loading on the Treasury too much of a burden for the next year or two. What I want is a bill that will pass, and then I want it signed.

I think this amendment, which throws aside entirely the labors of the House and of the Senate committee, and of the Senate as well up to this time, and makes a sudden change, is most detrimental to the interests of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM].

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, this amendment has a good deal of merit, and I would be glad to support it under ordinary circumstances. A few days ago I offered two amendments to this bill, one even more liberal in its terms than this amendment, providing for an immediate cash payment to the soldiers of the compensation found to be due them, and another amendment proposing an additional option, so that whatever adjusted compensation is found to be due should be applied to the payment of the premiums due on Government insurance, which is now under very difficult circumstances, being carried by nearly 500,000 veterans.

What has happened here since this debate began indicates that the first duty of those who really believe in this cause is to avoid having this bill submarined by loading it down with amendments which can not command the approval of the other branch of Congress or the financial officers of the administration.

Therefore I am not going to move those amendments. I am not going to vote for this amendment, although I think the committee bill is weak, is imperfect, although I think it could be greatly improved; but it is the best that can be passed by a majority vote of this body, and it at least removes all the objections that have been made to it by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Executive. Therefore I am going to do what I can to get action now, to prevent further delays, and to send this bill to the Executive; and if he vetoes it, not have him veto it because of any amendment which may have been added to it, but veto it on its merits. Neither am I going to give the Republican majority in Congress an excuse to kill this bill in conference by differences over new amendments.

This is the bill which has been approved by the House; this is the only bill which could receive a majority vote of the Republican members of the Senate Finance Committee and therefore receive a favorable report. If the bill is imperfect the majority party will be held responsible, and I intend to do nothing to give them an excuse to sidestep that responsibility.

This bill was drafted with the sole purpose and end in view of removing the financial objections raised by the Executive and the Secretary of the Treasury, and this bill, so far as I am able to interpret the language of the Senator from North Dakota, removes all objections of form upon the part of the Executive. To attach to it other amendments that materially change its form is to invite a veto. The chief objection made to the amendment of a bonus bill now has been the state of the Treasury. This bill levies no heavy burden on the Treasury now. To vote for an amendment that calls for an immediate cash payment will, in the light of what we know to be the attitude of the administration, surely furnish an excuse and reason for vetoing this bill on some other basis than its real merits.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. GERRY. Has the President stated that he would accept this bill as reported by the committee, if passed?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do not understand that he has, but I do understand that he has said to the Senator from North Dakota, in substance, that in form this is satisfactory; and it meets the objection which the Secretary of the Treasury made, namely, that the condition of the Treasury did not warrant paying a substantial cash bonus at this time.

Mr. GERRY. It is my understanding that the President has not made any statement that he would sign this bill if it was submitted to him, but he stated that he would not sign any adjusted compensation bill unless there was included in the measure a means of raising the revenue.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I am relying upon the statement made by the Senator from North Dakota, which, in substance, is that of all the bills introduced this is the one which is most likely to receive Executive approval, and that it has been drafted and submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the Executive to remove the objections made by them on financial grounds. The amendment I intended to offer was more liberal in its terms, and I would like to vote for it. But I am not going to give the Executive any excuse to veto this bill because there has been attached to it some provision which falls under his financial objection. There are some Senators here who are so antagonistic to this bill that they will vote for any amendment proposed that may lead to a tie-up here in Congress or prevent its final enactment. The result is that we may easily by offering amendments get a situation here where we have a measure made by the votes of the enemies of the bonus. I believe too much in the cause to be a party to bring about confusion.

Imperfect as this bill is, yet we are confronted with this situation: If we want to get rid of this issue, if we want to pass a bonus bill which will be likely to receive the sanction and approval of the Executive, we ought to take the one which has been drafted with the sole intent and purpose of removing the objections heretofore made by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Executive.

Therefore, Mr. President, I do not propose to offer perfecting amendments which will give any excuse to the Executive to veto this bill or to raise the question that we are not now financially in a position to pay this bonus, much as I believe that if there is a moral obligation to pay compensation to these soldiers it ought to be met now, it ought to be paid in cash, and that the Treasury of the United States is capable of meeting that obligation, and that it would be better for the country in the long run to meet the obligation now with a cash payment and close this just account.

But there is a still greater question here, the question of getting some legislation, of getting a bonus bill which will meet with Executive approval. Therefore, as a Democrat, I am going to support the bill which Republicans have drafted in large part, which Republicans in both branches of Congress have agreed to, and put the question up to the Executive solely and alone on the proposition whether he favors a bonus or not. I intend to do what I can to make the Executive take his stand in the open on this meritorious proposal to adjust the compensation of our ex-service men.

I hope the real friends of this measure are not blind to the fact that the enemies of this measure are ready to vote for any or all amendments that will bring about confusion of the issue and that will encourage a veto. There are two ways to defeat a bill; directly and indirectly loading a bill with amendments is a very helpful way to kill this bill. I therefore shall support the bill most likely to get enacted.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to advise the Senator from New Mexico that under the unanimous-consent agreement he can not be permitted to speak again.

Mr. BURSUM. I do not think I used up my 20 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unanimous-consent agreement provides that no Senator shall speak more than once on an amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, if we are about to approach a vote. If anyone desires to speak, I shall not make the point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	Myers	Smith
Ball	Hale	Nelson	Smoot
Borah	Heflin	New	Stanfield
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Newberry	Sterling
Bursum	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Swanson
Cameron	Kellogg	Oddie	Townsend
Capper	Kendrick	Pepper	Trammell
Colt	Keyes	Phipps	Underwood
Culberson	King	Pittman	Wadsworth
Cummins	La Follette	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Lenroot	Rawson	Warren
Dial	Lodge	Reed, Pa.	Watson, Ga.
Dillingham	McCormick	Robinson	Watson, Ind.
Edge	McCumber	Sheppard	Williams
Fletcher	McKellar	Shields	Willis
Gerry	McLean	Shortridge
Glass	McNary	Simmons

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I intend to support this so-called Bursum amendment because I believe that it is an improvement on the bill brought in by the committee. The amendment provides that the soldiers shall receive 50 per cent of their adjusted compensation in cash, and that will mean that many men who to-day are so much in need of aid, some of them in dire straits, will receive their adjusted compensation when it will do them the most good. It will also be a saving to the Treasury, as the total amount to be raised under it, as borne out by the statement of the experts, will be a billion and a half dollars less than under the committee bill.

In regard to the contention that there is more likelihood of the President vetoing this substitute than there is of his vetoing the committee bill, I can find nothing to justify that assumption. There has been no definite statement from the President that I have seen or heard that he will sign the bill reported by the committee. I for one do not intend to take a responsibility which I feel I should bear and put it upon anybody else's shoulders.

I want to see that justice is done to the soldier; I want to see that proper legislation for relief, adequate relief, is passed for the men who made great sacrifices for us, many of whom with their families are suffering, some on account of the fact that the Government bureau for giving aid to the injured and the wounded and the sick has not functioned properly, and they are not receiving that necessary assistance; others because of the industrial conditions.

I would like to see the immediate relief go even further than that contained in the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico, but under these circumstances I intend to support that amendment because, as I said before, it is an improvement on the committee bill, it would be better for the soldier and better for the Treasury and for the country.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, within the limited time we have had for consideration of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico I have not had an opportunity to give very careful consideration to its various provisions, but this I know, that his amendment is nothing more or less than an entirely new bill upon the subject. It is by misnomer called an amendment. It should be called a substitute for the bill offered by the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what it is called.

Mr. BURSUM. It was offered as a substitute.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Now it is confessed that it is a substitute bill. The Senate within the brief time it has had to consider the question, with a limitation of 20 minutes upon debate, is called upon to pass upon an entirely different bill from that proposed by the committee.

I have been intensely interested in doing justice to the American soldier who defended and fought for our country in its hour of peril. I have felt that the Nation owed to him a debt of gratitude that could not be paid in dollars and cents, but that it might in a feeble way be expressed by some substantial token at the hands of Congress and that we should no longer refuse to give expression to the Nation's gratitude to those who rallied to the colors when called to go forth and battle for our Republic.

The bill proposed by the committee, so far as my information goes, and certainly so far as the information is concerned which has reached me from my State, has the approval of the ex-service men. They have accepted it as satisfactory, or at least as the best they felt they could obtain.

Now, if we were to depart from that measure and adopt an entirely different provision, in all probability we would bring about the defeat of the proposal that the soldier shall receive relief at the present time. Of course that is purely a matter of conjecture and a matter of speculation, but certainly if the substitute is adopted it may not be concurred in by the House, and if it was then it would probably meet with the Executive veto. We would have departed from the wishes of the ex-service men, those of us who believe that they should have some adjusted compensation extended to them, and by so doing may defeat their cause. As for my part, I prefer to support the bill offered by the committee—the bill which has been thoroughly digested, thoroughly considered from the angle of compensation for the soldiers and also with a view to not imposing too great financial hardship and taxation burden upon the American people in consequence of the enactment of such legislation.

The substitute proposed by the Senator from New Mexico provides that one-half of the bonus shall be paid in cash immediately to those who make application for a cash payment. To meet this cash payment it is estimated, so I am informed, at least $750,000,000 would be required. That is in contrast with a requirement of $76,000,000 or $78,000,000 to be provided during the first year under the bill reported by the committee. Where are we going to raise that difference in the requirement to meet the cash payment under the two measures? If somebody knows where it can be raised otherwise than by taxing the American people I would like to have him point out the source of deriving that revenue and those funds except by taxation of the American people.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I will yield for a question.

Mr. BURSUM. I will ask the Senator what the difference is between borrowing $750,000,000 upon the credit of the Government direct, and borrowing $750,000,000 upon the credit of the Government indirectly through the banks, and if it is not true whatever moneys may be in the Treasury are the property of the people and it makes no difference whether we take the money from the banks indirectly or whether we borrow the money directly by the Government?

Mr. TRAMMELL. The difference in the two proposals is that one provides for raising only about $78,000,000 within the first year while the other provides for a payment which would amount to approximately $750,000,000 in the first year. There is considerable difference between raising the smaller sum and raising the larger, whether we raise it directly or indirectly, whether we raise it upon Government security direct or whether we raise it by some circuitous route of providing the funds.

Mr. BURSUM. What about the $700,000,000 which is to be paid by 1926, within three years, at a high rate of interest?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Could we not raise the $750,000,000 by collection of the foreign debt?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I would much prefer to have it provided in that way, and so far as I am concerned I think we ought to collect the foreign debt. Certainly there is enough to be derived from that source to meet the obligation that may be incurred under the pending measure.

Mr. BORAH. Why not collect $750,000,000? We could collect it as easily as we could collect $78,000,000.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am discussing the substitute offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BORAH. So am I.

Mr. TRAMMELL. It does not provide for collecting that debt.

Mr. BORAH. But there was an amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] yesterday, which was practically unanimously agreed to by the Senate, under which there would be no trouble at all about collecting it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. It does not provide that it has to be collected, but it says that if it is collected it shall be applied, and if it is not collected then the obligation shall be paid from other funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. That is the provision.

As a friend of the soldier, desiring to support legislation which has his approval and which is acceptable to him, I can not drift away and support a substitute for the bill which may jeopardize the soldier receiving any recognition at the hands of the Government. Certainly, in my opinion, the substitute is more likely to jeopardize his interests than the enactment of the measure proposed by the committee. For the reasons thus briefly outlined by me, I hope the substitute will be defeated, and that the bill as reported by the committee will receive the approval of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the old, eternal warfare betwixt tweedledee and tweedledum is going on and of course will continue to go on as long as the human race lives and as long as human beings have to do something which they more or less desire to cover up. The original bill and the substitute remind me a great deal of that old and eternal warfare. Each man, whether with the amendment or with the bill, is attempting to repeat one of the most comical scenes in one of the best old English novels.

Dr. Warren wrote "Ten Thousand a Year." When Tittlebat Titmouse became a candidate for Parliament, his candidacy was carried on by a very distinguished lawyer by the name of Oily Gammon, who was of the great firm of Quirk, Gammon and Snap, who were the original inventors of the lawyers' phrase, "Admit nothing, waive nothing, deny everything."

When the time came to run Tittlebat Titmouse, who up to that time had never had any virtues of any description, but who later, when he was elected to Parliament, was found to be able to imitate the crow of a cock so perfectly as to represent a rallying cry of his own party very much in the House of Commons, Oily Gammon announced Tittlebat's election platform, and his platform was to pass a bill "to give everybody everything without taking anything from anybody."

That is about what you are all up to. You are trying to pass a bill giving not everybody everthing but some three or four million people a whole lot of things and you are pretending that it will not cost anybody much of anything. The substitute, so far as I can see, is the more plausible pretense of that character than the original bill, and therefore I am going to vote for the substitute. It does at least recognize that the payment has to be made ultimately by bonds or taxes or in some other way. The bill does not recognize that it has to be paid in any way in the world. You are attempting to convince the soldier that he will get somewhere between three and five billion dollars and attempting to convince the American people that they will never have to pay any taxes to enable the soldier to get it.

It is a bill "to give nearly everybody nearly everything and to take almost nothing from anybody." That is the bill and that is all there is to it. It is all pretense. Why do you not come out openly and obey what the President said is right and sound? Put upon the bill the taxes that shall raise the amount of money that you are voting. You know that sooner or later, directly or indirectly, the American taxpayer must pay it. Why not, then, have the courage to put it in the bill? I know your answer, "But we are afraid to put it in the bill." That is your honest answer if you make any at all. "We are afraid to put it in the bill. It would render the bill so obnoxious that it would not pass or it would render the bill so obnoxious that those who vote for it never would come back to this sacred body." You are afraid to put the tax or the bonds in the bill. You hope to have it hanging over as a responsibility to be met by legerdemain of some description in the future. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] hopes that it will be paid by Serbia and Belgium and Italy and France and Great Britain.

So far as I can learn, only one of those powers is ever going to pay its debt, and that is Great Britain; she will pay hers. Italy is about bankrupt; Serbia has for many years not been anything else; Czechoslovakia has a little bit of money, but not enough to pay up and avoid revolution. The civilized world ought to cooperate to help Belgium, instead of cooperating to make Belgium pay for having been ruthlessly and unprovokedly invaded by the German armies.

Senators may say that is sentiment and that sentiment is "rot." I believe a Senator yesterday made a long speech, the sum and substance of which was that sentiment was rot. Sentiment is the only thing in the world that is not rot. The boldest, bravest, and strongest man that ever lived, after a few years, becomes dust and rot; the most beautiful woman that ever rivaled in charms the Venus or the Diana becomes rot after a little while; the most innocent child, with the clearest blue eyes, becomes rot; but a principle, an idea, a sentiment, never becomes rot. It is the only thing that never does.

The very first principle of statesmanship and the first great sentiment is to have the courage to do what you are going to do openly. If you are going to pass a bill which will result in levying upon the American people to the third and fourth generations of those who now live an immense amount of money, then come out and have the courage to do it; but between the pretenses and evasions the particular pretense and evasion offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] is the more plausible and the more praiseworthy of the two. It comes nearer being honest and nearer being courageous.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How would the Senator from Mississippi get around the provision of the Constitution which requires all revenue legislation to originate in the House of Representatives?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, that question had been debated a great deal in Great Britain before it arose here, and it has been debated here. I once made a speech upon the floor of this body contending that the right construction of that provision would include all appropriation bills as well as revenue bills, because originally in the House of Commons revenue bills not only pertained to the raising of money by taxation but also the spending of money by act of Parliament; but I do not wish to go again into all that. I have in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD about 8 or 9 pages upon that subject, but Congress did not quite agree with me about it. I agreed with the House of Representatives that not only all bills imposing taxes but that all bills making appropriations out of the Treasury are revenue bills and should originate in the House of Representatives; but my opinion upon that subject is somewhat peculiar and a little lonesome. In this debate I am assuming that the parliamentary record of what in my private opinion is wrong has been historically recognized as right.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This is not a matter of appropriation. The question is, should we put on this bill a provision for raising revenue to meet its provisions: How are we going to get over the constitutional provision that the Senate has no power to originate such legislation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall not enter into that. The House of Representatives has sent this bill over here and there is not a Senator here who does not know that it necessitates taxation. Necessitating taxation, and the Senate having the power to amend a bill which necessitates taxation, it can do it by providing new methods of taxation or new methods of payment not involving immediate taxation, and that has been the uniform course of American parliamentary history.

However, Mr. President, how is the money to be raised that will pay for the Liberty bonds and the Victory bonds? By taxation, is it not? How can we avoid that taxation by simply providing that a certain amount of money collected from our foreign debtors shall be appropriated out of the Treasury to a certain purpose? We do not avoid it; we merely deflect it. We must finally make the taxation apply to the taxpayer. The House of Representatives avoided its duty because it did not have the courage to face it. It said that it would not provide any method whatever of paying this money, although it was going to appropriate it out of such sums in the Treasury as were "not otherwise appropriated."

However, all the sums in the Treasury are appropriated for the next year and there will be a deficit, I believe, of several hundred million dollars. That is the courage that is exhibited by the House side and by this side. The Constitution says that the House shall originate revenue measures, but it also says that the Senate shall have the power to amend them. This is a revenue measure absolutely and necessarily, and no honest man can deny that there must be taxes levied, collected, and paid in order to meet its obligations.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Mississippi has just stated that this is a revenue measure because it makes necessary the imposition of taxes in order to meet the obligations which it creates. Is that the Senator's definition of a bill raising revenue? Another question: Does the Senator not know that the Congress is in the habit of passing appropriation bills without providing the revenue in those bills with which to meet the obligations created?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, Congress has several bad habits. The Senator has just pointed out one. Yes; whenever there is money in the Treasury that course is excusable, but when we have not, which we now have not and which the Senator knows we have not, we ought to take a straighter course.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask the Senator why he insists upon applying to this particular bill the principle of requiring——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not applying the principle to the particular bill; I am applying it to this particular situation which I have mentioned. We have not the money in the Treasury, and the Senator knows we have not got it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; but we are also making appropriations for hundreds of other subjects, though we have not the money in the Treasury to meet them. We have authorized by amendment to this bill the appropriation of $350,000,000 for reclamation purposes, and yet we have not the money in the Treasury to meet that obligation. We are also authorizing appropriations for divers other subjects.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why insist upon imposing in this particular bill a revenue provision——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think I am talking under a time limit, and must, therefore, decline to yield further. I know what the Senator from Arkansas has stated, and I also know that three or four or five wrongs do not make a right, and that we ought not to be doing the very things against which the Senator enters his solemn complaint.

Now, however, our income-tax yield is running behind from forty to fifty million dollars a month—I believe that is the figure—and we are expected to come out at the end of the fiscal year with a deficit of from $300,000,000 to $400,000,000 in the payment of current expenses. Every man knows that not a dollar of the money proposed to be granted under the pending bill can be paid, provided all the other appropriations which were passed previously are paid, unless some taxation is levied upon the American people. To go back to what I said before, this is an attempt to make the soldier believe he is getting nearly everything and to make the taxpayer believe he is not paying anything. Other Senators know as well as I do that that is not true; that that is a false pretense; that every dollar that a soldier gets, if he gets it, somebody must pay. Other Senators know as well as I do that public money does not come down like manna from heaven to the children of Israel in the desert; they know as well as I do that the Government is not an independent financial entity; that it has no pocketbook at all, but that its so-called pocketbook is the pocketbook of all the people who pay the taxes.

If we are not going to do any better, we had better provide in this bill for the issuance of bonds. That would avoid the constitutional question, because Congress has a right to provide for the issuance of bonds under a bill originating either in the Senate or in the House, according to our uniform, though, in my opinion, mistaken practice. If we are not going to pay the cost of this bill out of taxation, why not pay it out of bonds, and let the bill provide that the bonds shall be issued and floated at whatever the price they will float when bought by the people? The truth is, however, it is desired to avoid the appearance that it costs anything, but it is only the appearance that can be avoided; the thing itself can not be avoided.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] a question or two before making the observations which I intend to make with respect to the substitute amendment proposed by him. I did not hear the first part of the Senator's explanation of his amendment this morning, but as I understand it, if his proposed amendment shall be adopted the total obligation assumed by the Government in payment of adjusted compensation, and not including interest, would amount to about $1,560,000,000. Am I right?

Mr. BURSUM. That is correct.

Mr. POMERENE. Under the Senator's plan it is proposed that one-half of that amount shall be paid in cash and that the Government's obligations shall be given for the other half. Am I right about that?

Mr. BURSUM. That is correct, except there is a provision that there shall be paid in full all those claims amounting to $50 or less.

Mr. POMERENE. And the deferred payments are to earn 6½ per cent annual interest?

Mr. BURSUM. That is true.

Mr. POMERENE. I also understand that, assuming the Government would have to borrow the money with which to pay both the cash payment and to pay the bonds or certificates at the time of their maturity, the Senator estimates the interest thereon will amount to, in round numbers, about $1,000,000,000, assuming that the money must be borrowed for a period of 20 years.

Mr. BURSUM. Nine hundred million dollars plus the interest on $60,000,000, which would be about $5,000,000 more, making a total of about $905,000,000.

Mr. POMERENE. So that the Senator estimates that the total cost of his proposed substitute, including interest, will be $2,465,000,000.

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; that is approximately correct.

Mr. POMERENE. I thank the Senator for that information.

I notice by the report which has been presented by the committee that the total cost of the pending McCumber bill will be, in round numbers, about $4,000,000,000. The estimated cost as set forth in the report is $3,845,659,481. For the purpose of my remarks I am going to assume that the sum is about $4,000,000,000, although from the investigation and study which I have given this subject I am inclined to think the total cost under the McCumber bill will be something over $4,000,000,000. Now, the business proposition presents itself: Shall we so legislate here to-day on this subject as to incur an indebtedness of $4,000,000,000, or shall we so legislate as to make that indebtedness $2,465,000,000? What does business judgment suggest to the Senate of the United States? What is our duty to the taxpayer?

More than that, one of the reasons for passing this law at this time is the need of the veteran. Under the McCumber bill we pay in cash those found to have a service credit of $50 or less. To the balance of them we give a certificate payable in 20 years. The veteran can not use his certificate except to go out and make a loan. If he can not get a loan, if the banks for some reason or other refuse to make the loan—and it is only banks that are authorized to make the loan, not individuals—when they make their loan they are entitled to charge 2 per cent in excess of the amount which they must pay when they go to the Federal reserve bank for a rediscount; and, as has been pointed out very clearly by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the rate of interest which the veteran may have to pay in one bank district may be 5 per cent, in another it may be 6, in another it may be 7; and to me that is the most objectionable feature of the McCumber bill.

We say to the veterans: "Here is a piece of paper. Go and hawk it about the banks to see whether or not you can get a loan." What more do we do? We say to the veteran, "We owe you $100. We are going to increase that 25 per cent; we are going to have it draw 4½ per cent compound interest to meet your present necessitous financial condition." Is it going to be any credit to the United States to have these countless certificates hawked about from one bank to another?

No, Mr. President; I can understand how there can be an honest difference of opinion as to whether or not we shall pass any legislation upon this subject at the present time; but having decided that we are going to do it, let us do it in some form which will comport with the dignity and honor of the country. Let us as a Government, if necessary, raise these funds—and I am not going to discuss that question now—but let us raise the money and not ask the veteran to go out and raise it. I would as soon see every bank place up in front of its door the three balls with which some are familiar as to have the veterans go around in this kind of a way. We say we are doing this for the love of the veteran. If we are going to do something, let us do it in a manly way. By adopting the amendment presented here by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] we are saving to the Government and to the taxpayers of the country approximately $1,500,000,000.

Why, Senators, assume this was your personal obligation. How would you finance it? By issuing your notes and having the holders go around and hawk them about from bank to bank? I think not. I think you would devise some plan whereby you could go to some one bank or a combination of banks, present your obligations with your securities, and have them discounted.

If an individual debtor should scatter his small obligations about in this way, the commercial world would say he was in failing circumstances. Is the situation changed because the Government is the debtor?

Mr. President, I do not care at the present time to take up the general proposition. I may do that a little later, but as business men, as Senators who are supposed to have a regard for the Public Treasury as well as for the taxpayers and an abiding interest in the veterans themselves, let us give this recognition in a straightforward way. Let us get the money and have done with it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I feel very much as my friend the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] feels upon this subject. I am anxious to provide adjusted compensation for the soldiers. I am afraid that there is a disposition on the part of some of those who oppose adjusted compensation to load down this bill with so many amendments that it will be in such shape as would afford the President a good many excuses to veto it. We do not want that to happen.

The bill, in the main, as it came from the House is, I understand, acceptable to the ex-service men, and we have improved that bill by the amendment offered on yesterday by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

That amendment provides for the collection and use of the interest on the debt due us by foreign countries for the purpose of paying this adjusted compensation to our soldiers. That interest amounts now to more than $1,000,000,000. I called to the attention of the Senate yesterday the fact that France and England had paid to private interests in Wall Street $1,700,000,000, and I submitted then and submit now that if France and England can pay debts in this country due to private persons they certainly can pay the interest upon the debts due to us. When France and England have used the money they have borrowed from us to square the debt with their soldiers, to pay them an adjusted compensation, they can not now complain if we demand interest upon that money sufficient to square the account with our own soldiers.

Mr. President, the news of the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], if it was cabled to Europe last night, threw consternation into the camp of some of our American editors sojourning now in the Old World. For weeks and months a propaganda has been carried on to cancel this indebtedness to the American people. Wall Street interests are seeking to have it canceled. Certain American financiers will make hundreds of millions of dollars if they can have it canceled. Their pay as commissions upon this $11,000,000,000 would amount to several hundred millions of dollars. If certain newspapers in this combine with Wall Street financiers can engineer this deal through and deprive these soldiers of adjusted compensation and have this debt canceled, as they hope to do, they will all make big money out of the deal. Some of them are not moved in any way by sympathy for the people of the countries that owe us. They are moved by what they are going to get in cold cash if they can get our Government to cancel this debt of billions.

The Washington Post this morning has a misleading article about this foreign debt—and I want to say that no Senator in this body ever heard before of the suggestion that it contains. The proposition has been to cancel this debt. Men high in authority in this land have been working to cancel this debt. Newspapers, prominent dailies, have advocated canceling this debt. The editors to whom I have referred time and time again are in Europe now, some of them, sojourning for a time, looking out for ways and means of shaping public opinion in the United States to get our people worked up to the point where they will forgive this debt, while 4,000,000 of American soldiers, who saved the liberty of the world, are mistreated, neglected, and seemingly forgotten.

Here is what this article says. It is a nice suggestion on the printed page of a big daily paper in Washington:

But the amendment to set aside interest on America's foreign obligations for the bonus involves other considerations which admittedly can not be overlooked. In the first place these funds have been counted upon to reduce America's national debt and liquidate Liberty bonds, Treasury certificates, etc.

That is the first suggestion we have had to that effect. This thing was being babied along to suit the cancellation group; but when the Senate yesterday, by a good vote, voted to collect the interest upon this foreign debt it sent consternation into the quarters of the money changers of the Republic. This morning they are sounding the alarm. They are going to try to have that provision taken out of this bill. Watch for that.

Here is an opportunity to pay this soldiers' adjusted compensation without taking a nickel out of the Treasury, without taxing the American people one five-cent piece, by demanding enough of this foreign debt to square the account with our soldiers.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think the Senator will see, if he reads the article very carefully, that it probably does not make a misstatement in reference to the bonds. I think the second Liberty loan act provides that the proceeds of the sale of those bonds shall be used for the liquidation of the public debt. Where the Senator differs and where the Senate differs from the article in the paper is that that provision of the statute applies simply to the sale or disposition of the bonds. It does not apply to the disposition of the interest on the bonds, to which our amendment does apply.

But it is true, as they say there, that these bonds have already been cared for in the sense that when they are sold or paid the proceeds shall be applied upon the bonds which have been issued at that time.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I now come back to my proposition that this debt is long past due. It is over $10,000,000,000, and the interest has accumulated until it amounts to more than a billion dollars and none of it has been paid. The propaganda has been going on in this country to forgive this debt, to cancel this debt, to wipe it out. Men stand up in this body and talk about how hard it would be to raise a half billion dollars for our soldiers, men who are ready in secret council to vote to forgive this debt of $10,000,000,000 and let it be wiped out entirely.

I call to mind again what I witnessed here when those boys were going off to battle, how these men who have since forgotten cheered and how they seemed to point with pride to those gallant soldiers of our country. I recall the time, to which I have referred once before, when on the firing line in France the question was a little in doubt for a time as to who would win the day. Some of our soldiers were there participating with the Allies, and we were hoping and praying in our hearts that the Allies could hold the line until our men could arrive. We were saying, "If they do hold it until our boys get there, our cause will be triumphant."

One day our boys arrived at the battle front in France. Then the casualty lists commenced to appear in the newspapers here at home. The Washington Post, a copy of which I hold in my hand, had columns filled with the names of the gallant boys, in the flower of their young manhood, killed in action the day before, carrying the spirit of America with our flag. Those casualty lists grew larger and larger as the days came and went, and as we read down the columns all of us saw the names of boys from our States who had fallen in the conflict serving our country. These purse-proud, hidebound profiteers were then saying, "We would be willing to give half we have if we could win this war and bring those boys home in safety." They had a little heart left then, some pride and patriotism, and were willing then to divide what they had. They said they would be willing to give half they had if they could just end the war in victory and bring the boys home. Those boys, God bless them, ended it in victory and came home—most of them—and what did they find? They found the Republicans in power in both branches of Congress.

What have you done for them? You have shut the door in their faces for four years; and they are still standing out yonder neglected and seemingly forgotten, asking simply that you grant to them adjusted compensation of $1.25 a day—a human being, a brave young American out on the battle line, with death raining all around him, $1.25 a day—and you are voicing here the profiteer's spirit, saying that you can not raise the money to pay these boys.

The foreign countries owe us $10,000,000,000, and you do not want to collect it. They have a lot of friends around here who have not come out in the open yet, but who favor the cancellation of the debt. Here we are, with the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina adopted, and it provides for going after the interest on that debt. This morning when Wall Street woke up and found that we had started toward the collection of that debt they sounded the alarm to those of the inner council, where they have been planning for months to have the Government cancel that debt and maybe make a million dollars in commissions. This disturbed their well-laid plans to have the debt canceled, through which action they expected to make millions.

Yet Senators on the other side stand up here and talk about the valor of the soldier, and how much they love him; but they would not insult him by offering him adjusted compensation. The Master said, "I was hungry, and ye gave me to eat. I was naked, and ye clothed me," and "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me." But these men think so much of these boys now they do not want to warm up their stomachs with a good warm meal, and they do not want to put good clothes on their backs, because they are afraid they will hurt their feelings and cheapen their patriotism.

Do you know what they remind me of, those who say, "I honor and love him," and shake his hand and put their arms around him as if to kiss him, and then vote to deny him adjusted compensation?

They remind me of Joab and Amasa. What happened to Amasa? He walked out in front of his men, and Joab approached him as a friend, with a cloak on, and with a sword hidden in the folds of his cloak, and as Amasa walked along regarding him as a friend, Joab walked up to him, took him by the beard, as if to kiss him, and said, "How is it with thee, my brother?" and then stabbed him under the fifth rib with his sword. We are having that treatment accorded to the American soldier by Senators, who say, "How is it with thee, my brave boy, honored soldier of my country?" They put their arms around him and say, "How is it with thee?" but stab him with the dagger of neglect, injustice, and ingratitude. That is what we are having, while some are scheming behind the curtains to forgive the debt in order to make millions and hundreds of millions in commissions.

My prayer is: God of the Republic, touch the moral consciousness of the men in this body and touch the hearts of the Members in the other branch, touch the spirit of the President, arouse the men and women of the Republic. God save our Republic from such international bartering, and God save our soldiers from such un-American, unjust, and cruel treatment.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, there are occasions when I agree with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and one is afforded by what he said this morning with reference to the imposition of a direct tax for the payment of this so-called bonus. If the bill is to be passed at all, I think that is the only possible honest way to provide for it.

I would therefore vote for the imposition of a sales tax, as I have several times said, to provide the money with which to pay the bonus, if this bill is to be passed. I doubt very much whether such a provision would prevail; but I think it is the only honest way for the Senate and for Congress to approach this subject, to frankly and squarely impose a tax to be devoted to that specific and particular purpose.

Mr. McCUMBER. and Mr. ROBINSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NEW. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. ROBINSON. How does the Senator expect——

Mr. NEW. The Senator from North Dakota was addressing me.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understood the Senator to yield to me.

Mr. NEW. I will yield to the Senator in a moment.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator does not admit for a single moment that the Senate can originate a bill for revenue, does he?

Mr. NEW. No.

Mr. McCUMBER. Therefore it is not in our power even to put an amendment on the bill providing for a tax.

Mr. NEW. I am addressing myself to the subject generally. Now I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from North Dakota has asked the question I intended to ask.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I shall also vote for the Bursum amendment, because I think it is a vast improvement over the McCumber bill, which is now before this body. I voted for the McNary amendment, and I voted for it in good faith, because I believe that amendment provides an opportunity for the soldier to get something ultimately that will be worth his while, whereas the McCumber bill, in my judgment, gives him something that is entirely inadequate and in a way that does him no good whatever, now or later.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] mentioned a moment ago the fact that the second Liberty loan act provides that the foreign debt when paid shall be devoted to the extinguishment of those bonds.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. NEW. In a moment. Last night when the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina was presented for adoption, I think I was the only Member of this body who voted against it, and I voted against it partly because I thought I recalled such a provision in one of the Liberty loan acts. I thought I knew also that the present provisions for the sinking fund take into account the expectancy that a certain sum shall be received from interest on those bonds and devoted to that subject. Now I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I just want to call the Senator's attention to the provision about which he is talking. I have it before me. It is not in the second Liberty loan act, but in the first Liberty loan act, under which $3,000,000 were loaned to our allies. It is found in section 3, and I am going to read it to the Senator, so that he and others who are interested in it may see the exact wording of this provision. It is as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, is hereby authorized to receive on or before maturity payment for any obligations of such foreign governments purchased on behalf of the United States, and to sell at not less than the purchase price any of such obligations and to apply the proceeds thereof and any payments made by foreign governments on account of their said obligations to the redemption or purchase at not more than par and accrued interest of any bonds of the United States issued under authority of this act; and if such bonds are not available for this purpose, the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem or purchase any other outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the United States which may at such time be subject to call or which may be purchased at not more than par and accrued interest.

That provision does not occur in the subsequent acts under which the money was loaned. It applies in the first place, therefore, simply to the $3,000,000,000 first loaned to our allies. The Senator can see also that it is a mere authority. It is not a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Senator will also see that it does not appropriate the money. It does not place a trust around this money in any way whatsoever. It is a mere authority, and it can be applied not only to those obligations issued under the act but to any other interest-bearing obligation issued under the act, and for that reason I think certainly there is no trust surrounding even this $3,000,000,000 loan.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I had not read the act last night, nor have I read it this morning, but my recollection of it has been refreshed, and I am still of the opinion that the obligation rests upon the Government to devote the money received from those foreign loans to the extinguishment of the Liberty bonds. Certain it is that those bonds were sold to the public upon the strength of the declaration made by the Government of the United States that the proceeds of the foreign loans, whatever they might amount to, would be devoted to that end.

Mr. LODGE. May I say that it is most certain that there was no such provision in that law, providing what we should do with the proceeds in any way. I helped to draw the bill, and I think I am right.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator repeat the statement? We could not hear it over here.

Mr. LODGE. I said there was nothing in the act which prevented our using the funds from those debts, when repaid, for any purpose we choose, as I recall the act. I do not have it before me at the moment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. LODGE. I took part in drawing the act with the Senator from North Carolina, and there is no restriction. We could use the money from that debt, when repaid, for any purpose we choose.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator is correct.

Mr. NEW. However that may be, I am as certain as I am that I stand here, that the bonds were sold to the American public upon that guaranty by the Government of the United States.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think possibly the Senator from Indiana has been misled by some publication or some propaganda which has been going on. There is nothing in the law, as I recall it, that requires a specific use of the money.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. NEW. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. I was very much interested a moment ago in the Senator's reference to the wisdom of imposing a sales tax to provide money with which to pay the bonus. I assume, without any question of doubt in my own mind, that those Senators who are particularly strong for the passage of the bill want the soldiers to get the money. Is it not true, from all information we have, that the bonus bill can not become a law unless the method of producing the revenue is provided through the medium of the sales tax? Is there not every indication pointing to that as a fact, that unless the sales tax is actually adopted as the method of obtaining the revenue, it is at least questionable whether the bonus bill will ultimately become a law?

Mr. NEW. Does the Senator mean by that to ask me if I believe that the President would veto any bill that did not contain a provision of that kind?

Mr. EDGE. Certainly. There is every indication that we have seen in the public print to that effect. Personally, I take that viewpoint and gather that understanding.

Mr. NEW. I have no authority whatever to represent the President in any such matter. I know what he has publicly said in this Chamber. I know from his various utterances from time to time how his mind is running with reference to the matter, but I have not at any time or at any place assumed to state what he would or would not do. That is for him to say. But speaking for myself I repeat what I said in the first instance, that I think the only honest and fair way to approach the question at all is to do it by the imposition of a tax that is to be devoted to that specific purpose.

Mr. President, I think that a lot of the argument which has been going on here is all folly. It has been to the effect that diversion of the proceeds which we are to receive from the foreign loans is to be made to relieve the American public of the burden that would otherwise have to be imposed by a direct tax. Why, Mr. President, that is so simple and so manifestly absurd on the face of it that one ought not to dignify it by a reference. If we do not take the money received from the bonds and apply it to the payment of the public debt, of sheer necessity we must raise a like sum of money from other sources and by other means to be devoted to that particular thing. There is no getting around it. There is no way to pay a debt except by digging down and getting the money to pay it, not even, as was suggested here yesterday, by the giving of a note.

I think that the Senate yielded to an attack of emotional insanity in attempting to provide for the payment of the bonus by the diversion of money that is to be received from a public debt. Why, we have not that money. We have no guaranty that we shall ever get it. Senators talk about propaganda that has been indulged in looking to the forgiving of those debts. Yes, Mr. President, there has been propaganda. I have read what Mr. James M. Cox said the other day and what Mr. William Jennings Bryan has said and what various other people in both political parties have from time to time said on that subject, but I have looked in vain for anything that has ever been said by any responsible officer of this administration which indicated a purpose on the part of the administration to forgive the debts that are owing to us by our former allies. I think they are regarded as just obligations and that it is the purpose to collect them. Furthermore, Mr. President, this Congress has created a commission for the purpose of negotiating for the payment of those obligations, and now we come in here and incorporate in an amendment, and I think without proper deliberation, a provision that in every way interferes with and hampers the conduct of that commission in the consideration of the subject. I can not agree to that at all. It was by reason of that fact that I voted as I did on the division last evening.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENDRICK in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. BURSUM. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to the fact that about $3,000,000,000 has already been paid by the taxpayers of this country on account of those bonds. The interest has been paid by the taxpayers of the country. While it is true that for the time being the foreign debt was expected to be paid, it was not forthcoming, it was not available, and therefore it could not be used, but the taxpayers of the country have paid about $3,000,000,000. Therefore, I assume that to that extent the foreign debt would be absolutely free for such use as the Congress might deem proper to make of it at least to that extent.

Mr. NEW. I am not willing to concede that any of the money owing to the United States shall be absolutely free until the debt that the United States has solemnly promised to pay has been paid. I believe that the Government should consider its obligations as private parties consider theirs, and so long as the Government owes money, and particularly when it owes it to its own people who have bought its bonds with money earned in the sweat of their faces, that it is due to the maintenance of the honor of the Government that those bonds be taken up as quickly as possible.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. NEW. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like to ask the Senator if there is any debt more sacred than the debt we owe to the soldiers who saved the life of the Nation and the liberty of the world?

Mr. NEW. Oh, Mr. President, that is an academic question. I do not think it is to be taken seriously at all.

Mr. HEFLIN. It does not seem to be taken very seriously by the Republican Party.

Mr. NEW. Of course, there is no debt that equals a debt of honor and an obligation of that character. But, Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama to the contrary notwithstanding, that kind of a debt can not be paid in dollars and cents.

Mr. HEFLIN. But it makes the soldier mighty comfortable by giving him something to eat and wear.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, we lent to foreign nations some $10,000,000,000, and, with unpaid interest, I think the debt now amounts to more than $11,000,000,000. That money is just as much ours to dispose of, if we ever get any of it, as any other part of the funds of the Nation. Assuming that the pending bill or a bill is passed providing for the payment of the adjusted compensation to the soldiers, that obligation will be paid. The argument of my good friend from Indiana would be that we must not pay anything or spend any money while there is an outstanding bond of the Government. We have gone on for a good while with bonds outstanding making large appropriations simply for the ordinary work of carrying on the business of the Government. Of course, that must be done.

These debts are all bonded debts with time limit. If we get any payment of interest from a foreign debt, we can devote that, like any other revenue of the Government, to any purpose that we may choose. There is nothing sacred about the return of money from that debt, nothing whatever. We borrowed the money of the people for a great deal more than that debt to pay the expenses of the war, but we go on carrying on the business of the Government and paying the debt as we go, as all other nations do and as we have always done.

If the pending bill passes in any form, as I hope it shall, we shall have to pay the obligation it creates, and whether we take the money from loans paid back to the United States or whether we take it in any other way the people of the United States are going to pay it. I myself much prefer that it should be raised directly by taxation, and have said so in public many times. I think the House ought to have put on the bill a provision for raising the money by taxation. If the bill passes, the money will have to be paid by the people of the United States sooner or later. It is all going to be paid, and it can not be avoided. The direct way always seems to me the best way. As for putting on such a provision now, constitutionally we can not originate a revenue tax here. We can not raise revenue by an amendment to a bill which is not a revenue bill. It is out of the question to put it on here. If we did put it on the pending bill it would not be the sales tax that would go on, but it would be the excess-profits tax.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon a question?

Mr. LODGE. With pleasure.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I heard the Senator say that he hoped this legislation would be enacted, but that we could not put a taxation provision upon the bill because of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; that is my judgment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does that prevent our sending the bill back to the House with an injunction that they shall perform their constitutional duty before we attempt to make it a law?

Mr. LODGE. Of course, we can reject the bill in various ways, and one of them is to kill it in conference, as will be done by the Bursum amendment, in my judgment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Could we not pass the bill with an amendment which would require the House to perform its constitutional function?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think we can put on the bill an admittedly unconstitutional amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then if it is unconstitutional because the House has not originated taxation in connection with it, how does it come to its passage with that defect in the bill?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it has that defect as it stands.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the point of difference between us.

Mr. LODGE. I think we are creating a charge upon the Treasury by issuing certificates which will all have to be paid sooner or later, of course, and, if necessary, be paid by taxation; but I do not think at this stage we can attach an amendment to the bill which we admit is unconstitutional.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I am aiming at. Why could we not, then, attach an amendment to the bill providing for certificates or providing for bonds which would require the House of Representatives either absolutely to accept that provision or to originate a tax scheme in connection with the bill?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think we can compel the House in that way. Of course, to send it back with a provision that no House of Representatives would ever accept would be one way of killing the bill, and that is, of course, what this amendment would do, and every Senator who is against the passage of the bill would vote for such an amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in offering the amendment which is now the subject of discussion I had three definite objects in view: First, inasmuch as the President had stated through the press that he would not sign the bill unless it provided means for the payment of the amount required, I wished to supply the means of payment so as to remove all excuse or reason on the part of the President for vetoing the measure.

Secondly, Mr. President, I knew that there were certain interests in the United States which were very apprehensive that if this measure should pass it would result in additional taxation, and, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, they had in mind particularly an excess-profits tax and perhaps to some extent a sales tax. I thought it was important in connection with this matter, if possible and feasible, to quiet those apprehensions on the part of the business interests of the country. If the bill had passed without any provision for the payment of the obligation incurred, that apprehension would have been accentuated. The business interests would have been in constant fear that resort might be had again to an excess-profits tax or that the income tax might be increased or that a sales tax might be imposed.

Thirdly, when a similar amendment was offered by me some time ago to the revenue bill—I did not take the time to refer to this point yesterday—I urged its adoption upon the ground, among others, that the dedication of this fund for the payment of our obligations to the soldiers would take away from foreign countries some of the inclination to insist upon the cancellation of their debts to America, and that it would be notice to them that we did not intend to cancel their debts. I have for a long time thought that the constant hope in the breasts of the statesmen of foreign countries that sooner or later these debts might be canceled has interfered with and retarded the adjustment of our foreign loans.

Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], who is the sole Senator in this body who on yesterday voted against this amendment, voices here to-day as the reason for his opposition some suggestions which I have read in one or, perhaps, two newspapers. He broadly intimates that the adoption of the amendment may lead to a veto on the part of the President. If that is true, Mr. President, then one of the reasons which prompted me in offering the amendment, and I think one of the reasons which prompted the Senate in supporting the amendment, was based upon a false assumption of the effect of the amendment upon the presidential mind.

If I understand the attitude of the President of the United States with reference to this measure it is expressed in the message which he delivered to the Senate at the time he asked that the bill be recommitted to the Finance Committee. I think we have the right to take the President at his word and to assume that he has been candid with the Congress. In his message he said that the Treasury of the United States was in such financial straits that it would be inexpedient and unwise to pass legislation proposing to create additional obligations requiring immediate payment; in fact, he went so far as to say that, if it would not bankrupt the Treasury at that time, it would greatly embarrass the Treasury and the administration of the finances of the Government. Later he supplemented that statement with the suggestion that if a sales tax were provided that difficulty would be removed; that is, he indicated that he would prefer, if this legislation were to be enacted, that the money be raised by a sales tax. That suggestion met with universal criticism and disapproval throughout the country. Then the President, if the authorized statements emanating from the White House are to be accepted, indicated that he would require, as a condition precedent to signing the bill, that the means of its payment be provided in the act itself.

For months, in connection with the question as to whether the President would approve or disapprove the bill, the idea in the public mind—and that idea was created by statements from the White House—was that it would not meet with a veto if the means were provided for its payment. That meant, of course, if those means were provided in such a way as not to embarrass the Treasury in the manner indicated in the President's message.

At the time the President's message was delivered the proposition was to pay the whole amount of this indebtedness in cash or by some land settlement. The insurance feature had not then been introduced or suggested. The amount that then would have been required would have run up into the billions, and an appropriation of money to that amount would have been, in the conditions in which we then found ourselves and, indeed, in which we now find ourselves, embarrassing; but that danger is obviated by the provisions of the bill which we are considering. The bill we are now considering does not provide for many years to come an appropriation that will reach as much as $100,000,000 in any one year. Surely, under such circumstances, the President's position must be interpreted to mean that if we provide a way of payment for this lesser sum such action will not embarrass the Treasury, and his objection to the legislation—which I understood him then to declare he favored in principle—would be removed. We now propose to provide even an easier way, so far as the difficulties of financing by the Government are concerned. We provide for the dedication to this purpose of the interest, or so much as may be necessary of the interest, accruing from obligations of foreign governments owed to us.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SIMMONS. I trust the Senator will pardon me for one moment.

So, Mr. President, I can see no reason, if this bill be passed, why the President of the United States should veto it upon the grounds of opposition stated at the time he asked that the measure be recommitted to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish the Senator would withhold the interruption, because I am afraid I will exhaust my 20 minutes before I say what I desire to say. If I have any time left after concluding I shall be glad to yield.

The Senator from Indiana says that we have dedicated the money to be derived from foreign obligations to the liquidation of the Liberty bonds and Victory bonds issued by our Government. The Senator is quite in error, Mr. President, because there is nothing in the law which makes any such provision or imposes any such condition as that. If there were, it would not be in the nature of a condition. No holder of those bonds to-day doubts their solvency; no holder anticipates any defalcation in the payment of interest or of principal when due, and it would be perfectly legitimate for us by subsequent legislation to modify such a provision if it were embodied in legislation, but in fact no provision of that sort was made.

I have seen in the newspapers—and the Senator from Indiana gave expression to that apprehension—that the adoption of this amendment would in some way or other embarrass and handicap the commission which is now engaged in trying to adjust the amount of the indebtedness due by foreign countries to our Government. What has that commission, Mr. President, to do with the disposition which the United States intends to make or shall make of the interest which it receives or of the bonds when they are delivered? What right have the foreign debtors of the United States to interfere in any way with the American Government's disposal of the interest which they pay us or with the bonds which they deliver to us? Of course the suggestion that my amendment would interfere with the funding of the debt is without merit or force, and, indeed, is quite absurd.

So far as foreign Governments are concerned, one thing that this amendment will do, and one thing that we desire it to do, is this: Those foreign Governments will be given to understand, once and for all time, that the United States intends that these obligations shall be met, and that we do not intend voluntarily to surrender or cancel them. We want to put an end to any vain and unreasonable hopes upon the part of our debtors that something may turn up whereby the United States may be cajoled or persuaded to a relinquishment of those debts. There is much that affects the stability of business conditions in the United States involved in that situation. These debts are large. Measured by any other obligations that ever existed in this world, they are gigantic; and yet, while some of our debtors may not be able to meet them in full, most of these debts are due us by countries that are to-day in just as good condition as we are.

I do not care what you say about the difficulties of France; I know that to-day there is no country in the world that is more prosperous than France. There is no country in which business affairs are moving on as smoothly as they are in France. France to-day is able to maintain the biggest army, outside of Russia, in the world, and she is maintaining it. Her factories are running full time. They have been rehabilitated. Her sons find constant and lucrative employment. She is able to pay, and, as for me, I say let her understand that she must pay her just debt to America.

So far as Great Britain is concerned, while she has incurred an immense obligation, not only to us but otherwise, no country in this world is better able to meet her financial obligations than Great Britain. If she has some little difficulties at this time, they are difficulties which can be overcome by a great empire like that—an empire upon which the sun never sets; an empire that has her colonies scattered throughout the world feeding her domestic industries. She is just as able to pay her obligations as the United States is to pay our own obligations. Let England also understand that we have already given her enough, and that she must pay her debt to America.

This talk about cancellation of the debts, this hesitation about the settlement of these obligations, ought in some way or other to be brought to an end; and I know of no better way to do it than to have an act passed dedicating the interest accruing from that indebtedness to the payment of the soldiers—the soldiers who not only fought for the civilization of the world and to avenge the outrages that had been perpetrated upon the honor and the dignity of this country but who fought primarily to preserve the liberties and the civilization of the Governments that owe us these debts. We want them to understand that this indebtedness was incurred in the effort of the United States to help and save them, and that we are going to pay over, as we collect it, the interest upon this money that they owe us to the boys who fought their battle as well as our battle.

Now I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I just wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the interest to be collected from England alone will amply finance the payments under this bill all the way through; and England has already, by her financial ministers, expressed her firm determination to begin some time in November to pay the interest regularly.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is not any doubt about the statement which the Senator makes. I stated yesterday that if we did not collect interest for the next two or three years from any of the debtor governments except Great Britain that fund would be amply sufficient to meet the cash payments provided under this bill. It would not be sufficient to meet the cash payments provided under the substitute now offered by the Senator from New Mexico, however.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was just going to call the Senator's attention to that fact.

Mr. SIMMONS. Not only that, but one year's payment of interest by Great Britain would probably amount to more than two years' payments under this bill. I think I am substantially correct in making that statement.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, later during the consideration of this bill I hope to discuss the question of the foreign debt and its availability for the purpose of paying these ex-service men. What I desire to call attention to particularly at this time is the stress which has been laid upon the proposition by the able Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] when he opened the debate and reiterated by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], that this bill now meets the objections which have been made heretofore by the President and by the Secretary of the Treasury, and therefore that there is no occasion to fear what they both seem possibly to anticipate—objection upon the part of the President.

I have no means of knowing what the President's views are at the present time with reference to this measure, and I do not discuss that question at all; but I call attention to the fact that if we go back to the President's address upon the 12th of July, 1921, we will find that this bill does not meet at all the objections which the President made at that time, and which he later repeated in his letter to Mr. FORDNEY, and which Mr. Mellon has repeated upon two different occasions in his letters.

I call attention to some of the views expressed by the President in July, 1921. He says:

The enactment of the compensation bill in the midst of the struggle for readjustment and restoration would hinder every effort and greatly imperil the financial stability of our country.

Can it be said that restoration and readjustment are completed?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to say to the Senator that while I think he was not in the Chamber when I was discussing the matter, I stated that at the time the President delivered that message the bill then pending, and which he asked to have recommitted, practically provided for cash payments, which would have involved a tremendous outlay by the Treasury, amounting to three or four billions of dollars. The bill that we have under consideration now is one that provides only for a small annual payment.

Mr. BORAH. It is not, Mr. President, the cash payment alone which embarrasses the program of restoration and readjustment. That which embarrasses that program is putting upon the Government an additional obligation, whether paid to-day or to-morrow, of from four to five or six billions of dollars. It is perfectly idle to say that notwithstanding the fact that you impose that tremendous obligation upon the Government which we have to face, because to-day you only draw $78,000,000 of it, therefore it does not embarrass or impede the program of restoration and rehabilitation.

But the President further states: "This menacing effort to expend billions in gratuities will imperil our capacity to discharge our first obligation to those we must not fail to aid." What is the situation with reference to our obligation to the disabled men of to-day compared with what it was at the time the President spoke? I call attention to the fact that at the present time we are expending $488,000,000 a year upon the disabled soldiers, about $1,264,000 every day of the year, and about $1,000 every minute of the day; and that will increase during the next two years so that it is calculated that it will easily reach $800,000,000 a year. So the obligation with reference to taking care of the disabled soldier is greater, heavier, and more burdensome by far than it was at the time the President spoke a year ago, and it is now disclosed that it is to continue to increase at a more rapid rate than was anticipated at that time.

I pause here to say that while I am perfectly satisfied that no able-bodied soldier would permit himself to be placed in a position where he would in any way embarrass taking care of the disabled soldier, nevertheless it must be perfectly apparent to anyone who will stop and consider the matter that imposing an additional obligation on the Government of from four to six billion dollars a year will embarrass the Government in meeting its full obligation to the disabled soldier. Indeed, it is now claimed that by reason of the fact that the Government is seeking to economize we are already failing to do our part by the disabled soldier, and when we add to it the obligation which we already have we will fail, in my judgment, more pronouncedly to meet that obligation which everyone surely desires to have met in full degree.

I will read into the record a statement showing the expenditures. The expenditures to April 1 of last year were as follows:

Military and naval family allowances	$298,615,000
Military and naval compensation	557,150,000
Insurance	23,000,000
Administration	83,896,880
Hospitalization	224,729,402
Hospital construction	47,095,000
Vocational training	469,133,370
Disposition of remains	33,473,782
Bonus allowance at the close of the war	48,682,200
Payments to beneficiaries of Army men and officers	2,495,000

Amounting up to that time to $1,996,260,634; and since that time it has increased until this year we are preparing to expend $488,000,000. So I say not only that the objection which the President raised at that time, that it would embarrass us in the reconstruction and rehabilitation of the industrial and financial condition of the country, has not been taken care of, but that the other proposition of embarrassing us in taking care of the soldier is more accentuated than it was at the time the President spoke.

The second objection to which the President referred was as follows:

Even were there not the threatened paralysis of our Treasury, with its fatal reflexes on all our activities which concerns our prosperity, would it not be better to await the settlement of our foreign loans? At such a time it would be a bestowal on the part of our Government when it is able to bestow.

There has been no settlement or adjustment of the foreign loans. France had her representative here for the purpose of discussing the question of the settlement of the foreign loan, and what was his message? His message was not only that France could not pay her foreign debt but, frankly, that she was not in a position to pay the interest on her foreign debt. A few days after the conference broke up between the premiers of France and England the representative of France here dealing with the question of the foreign loan was called home.

The Senator from North Carolina says that France is perfectly able to pay. It may be so; I will undertake to present some figures a little later which, in my judgment, will present another side to that question. But suppose that in his mind or in my mind France is able to pay, but France sends her representative here and says that she is not going to pay because she is unable to pay. What kind of a gratuity is it you extend to the American soldier to say that he will be paid out of what France proposes to give?

Likewise, Mr. President, with reference to the other foreign countries. We all expect those countries in time to pay their debts. We have put it in our congressional enactment that no power except Congress can cancel those debts, and I venture to say that neither you nor I will live long enough to see the United States cancel those debts. The terms and conditions under which cancellation would be considered, if at all, will not soon be presented to this country. But the canceling of the debts and the collecting of the debts at a specified time, or when we get ready to collect them, are two different propositions entirely.

I ask the able Senator from North Carolina, how are you going to collect the debt from France?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will answer the Senator very frankly that we can not forcibly collect the debt from France or any other foreign government that owes us a penny.

Mr. BORAH. That is precisely the situation. So we are saying to the soldier, and, most of all, we are saying to, the taxpayer, "You are going to be relieved by our taking this money out of the payments of the interest upon the foreign debt," when they have already notified us that they are unable to pay, and it is conceded we can not force them to pay.

Mr. SIMMONS. While we can not force those Governments to pay us without going to war, we rely upon the integrity and honor of governments in all our international transactions, and it is assumed that if a government is able to pay it does pay or loses its standing among the nations of the earth. We have to rely in this case, as we would have to rely in any other case of a debt due us by a foreign government, upon their honor.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, it is not precisely so, because I remember, and probably the Senator from North Carolina does, that the old Continental currency, issued by the people of that day, standing as high in honor as any people on the surface of the globe, has never yet been paid.

Mr. BORAH. They might have been lacking in national honor. Again, the President said:

It is quite as unthinkable to reduce our tax burden while committing our Treasury to an additional obligation which ranges from three to five billions of dollars.

Mr. President, I have not the time to go into this at length under the 20-minute rule, but later on I am going to present to the Senator from North Carolina and to the Senate the actual figures, which will disclose that not only have we failed to reduce our tax burden, either in the municipalities, the States, or the Nation, but that we are daily adding to those tax burdens, and that instead of our being in a better condition to meet this burden than we were on the 12th of July, 1921, a consideration of the actual facts, as the taxpayer has to come in contact with them, shows that we are in a less desirable position to meet it than we were in 1921, because we have been doing as we are doing with reference to this matter; we have been utterly disregardful of the Treasury of the United States, and the governors have been equally disregardful of the treasuries of the respective States.

Again, the President said:

A modest offering to the millions of service men is a poor palliative to more millions who may be out of employment. Stabilized finance and well-established confidence are both essential to restored industry and commerce.

Later, in his letter to Mr. FORDNEY on the 16th of February, 1922, he had this to say:

My best judgment is that any compensation legislation enacted at this time ought to carry with it provisions for raising the needed revenue.

This bill utterly flouts the President's suggestion in that regard. It is well known, if the public prints be correct, that he so regards it. There has been no attempt in this bill to meet this suggestion of the President, and the Senate will unhesitatingly vote down any attempt to meet it, because we are wriggling here between the taxpayer and the bonus men, seeking to pay the one without offending the other. The Senate would not for a single moment entertain any proposition to put a single dollar additional tax upon the taxpayers of this country at this time. Why? Simply because it brings home to the taxpayer a concrete illustration of what this bill means.

Again he said:

It is not an agreeable thing to suggest that action be postponed again, but, frankly, I do not find myself favorable to the piecemeal-payment plan, which is manifestly designed to avoid embarrassment to the Treasury. The long-drawn-out payments will not afford an effective helpfulness to the service men.

Does this bill conform to the President's wishes in that respect? Again he said:

We have no serious problem in beginning the allotments of public lands and the immediate issue of paid-up insurance. The real difficulty lies in the payment of the cash bonus. Rather than provide that the maximum cash payments shall extend over a period of two and one-half years, it would be a vastly better bestowal if we could await the day when we may safely undertake to pay at once in full, so that the award may be turned to real advantage.

Instead of meeting the situation, we have spread it over a period of 40 years. He continued:

Inasmuch as the Treasury is to be called upon to meet more than $6,000,000,000 of maturing obligations in the 16 months immediately before us, it is not possible to recommend the issue of several hundred millions of additional short-time notes. Further excessive borrowing would likely undo all that has been accomplished in readjusting interest rates and stabilizing the financial world, both vitally essential to the resumption of industrial and commercial activities.

Granting that it is not fair to oppose any proposed plan without offering a substitute, let me repeat that I believe the American people will accept the levy of a general sales tax to meet the proposed bonus payments, and we should contribute thereby no added difficulties to the problems of readjustment. If Congress will not adopt such a plan, it would be wise to let the legislation go over until there is a situation which will justify the large outlay.

Mr. President, instead of this bill meeting the objections made by the President, it runs directly counter to some of them, and wholly fails to meet the others. How the President will view it when it finally reaches him I do not know; neither is it any matter of concern to me at this time. I only know that those things which he thought constituted a menace and an insuperable difficulty in 1921 are still with us and equally objectionable, if they were objectionable at that time. I think they were sound objections at that time and they are equally sound and insuperable now.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, it was plain, from the President's message to the Senate last year, that his chief concern in regard to this bill was the immediate drain upon the Treasury which would be imposed by it, and the adverse effect the bill might have in the restoration of our financial condition, and the refunding of the indebtedness which must be refunded in the very near future.

I have been very greatly in sympathy with the idea that our Treasury is not in a condition to bear heavy drains upon it at the present time. That was one of the reasons why I voted on yesterday against the McNary amendment, because it authorized an additional appropriation of $350,000,000 in addition to the $78,000,000 for next year, and about the same amount the year following, imposed by the bill itself. However, my distinguished friend, the Senator from Idaho, voted for that amendment, which may impose a drain upon the Treasury of $350,000,000 before this indebtedness of which the President speaks is refunded.

Complaint is made because this bill does not carry any means for raising the money with which to pay for the obligation which will be incurred under it. The President suggested a sales tax, it is true, but I do not know that the President has anywhere stated that he would veto a bill if the bill were of such a character that it could be seen that the Treasury could meet the obligations which would be imposed by the bill.

There was no more reason for putting a revenue measure upon this bill in the House than there was for putting one upon any bill which comes before the Congress of the United States which imposes an obligation or makes an appropriation. We had the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury several months ago that there would very likely be a very large deficit in the Treasury in the next fiscal year. Did the Senator from Idaho suggest that we ought not to pass the agricultural appropriation bill, or the other appropriation bills, because there was no means provided in the bills for the raising of the revenue which would be required to make the expenditures?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Idaho has not suggested it in reference to this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Then I utterly mistook the Senator's argument.

Mr. BORAH. I said the President had suggested it.

Mr. LENROOT. I certainly understood the Senator from Idaho, in his comments upon the views of the President, to suggest that if this bill were to pass, there ought to be provided a means or mode of raising the revenue which would be required under it. If I mistook the Senator from Idaho in that respect, I beg his pardon.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator misunderstood me. I would not vote for it if it had a provision of that kind in it.

Mr. LENROOT. That I well understood.

Mr. BORAH. I did not say that it ought to have such a provision in it. I said that was one of the objections which the President made, and we have not met the objection.

Mr. LENROOT. The President had a right to suggest it. We, however, have our responsibility as to what shall be done, and that responsibility is ours, and ours alone.

I suggested that there was not very much concern manifested yesterday about adding $350,000,000 to this bill on the part of many of the Senators who are opposed to the bill, some of them upon the ground of the immediate drain it will make upon the Treasury. I rather expect that some of those Senators will vote for the pending amendment, which will make a possible drain upon the Treasury next year of $750,000,000 instead of $78,000,000, as is provided in the committee bill.

In that particular permit me to call attention to the speech of the present occupant of the chair, the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], wherein he stated:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] said it will cost but $78,000,000 in the first year. The Secretary of the Treasury points out that we have a $400,000,000 deficit facing us the first year, and the latest information is that instead of $400,000,000 the deficit will be $500,000,000, and yet lightly does the Senator from North Dakota suggest that we add another $78,000,000 to that deficit.

And yet many of the Senators lightly added $350,000,000 yesterday, and I am afraid some of those Senators are in a few moments deliberately going to vote to add $750,000,000 instead of $78,000,000 as proposed by the committee.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Wisconsin is going to vote for the bill with the $350,000,000 provision in it, is he not?

Mr. LENROOT. I am.

Mr. BORAH. Well, I am going to vote against it with the $350,000,000 provision in it.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, yes; but, Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho knows that the bill is going to pass, and when a Senator votes for amendments that add a great amount of money to the bill, knowing that it is going to pass, it is not very much in justification of his voting to increase the amount of the obligation under the bill for him to say that upon final passage he is going to vote against it.

Mr. BORAH. I know the bill is going to pass, but I do not know so well that it is going to become a law.

Mr. LENROOT. Ah, I quite agree, and I have not a doubt in the world but what that was one of the actuating motives of some Senators in voting for the $350,000,000, in the hope that by the addition of that sum the President might veto the bill when otherwise he might not.

Now, Mr. President, we might as well face the situation as it is. Every vote for the amendment in its effect will be a vote against the bill.

Mr. BURSUM. The Senator is referring to my substitute, is he not?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; the Bursum substitute. No one doubts, from the statements the President has made, that if the substitute be adopted the bill will be vetoed. That being so, how can any friend of adjusted compensation vote for the substitute amendment? Does anyone believe that the service men are going to be deceived? Does anyone believe that any Senator can make the service men of America believe that he is in favor of adjusted compensation when he votes for $750,000,000 to be drained out of the Treasury of the United States next year when he knows the bill will be vetoed by the President of the United States and in all probability can not pass this body over that veto, when if he had voted against the substitute the probability is that the legislation asked for by the service men themselves would be signed and become a law?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. Does the Senator know that the President would veto the bill if the Bursum amendment were incorporated in it?

Mr. LENROOT. I of course am not authorized to speak for the President nor have I had any conversation with him upon the particular subject. But I do say that from the President's public statements but one inference can be drawn by anyone, and that is that a bill which would take out of the Treasury of the United States next year $750,000,000 will be vetoed.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator would state authoritatively that the President would veto it with the Bursum amendment in it, then those who favor adjusted compensation would not, of course, vote for it. But there is nothing that the Senator can point to in any statement ever made by the President that would sustain his assertion.

Mr. LENROOT. Why, did not the Senator listen to the reading of the President's letters by the Senator from Idaho a few moments ago?

Mr. PITTMAN. I have tried to listen to all the ambiguous statements of the President for the last two years.

Mr. LENROOT. I can well understand how there can be some Senators upon the other side of the aisle, and I am glad there are not many of them, who might prefer to vote for a compensation bill in the hope that it would be vetoed by the President of the United States. I am glad to know that the majority upon that side of the aisle do not propose to play politics concerning this important matter.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. BURSUM. The Senator appreciates that it would cost $1,500,000,000 less to liquidate this debt under the provisions of the amendment which I have proposed as compared with the bill reported by the committee. If that be true, would it not be conserving the credit of the country to save that amount of money?

Mr. LENROOT. If we liquidate $1,500,000,000 to-day and pay 4½ per cent interest upon that sum for 20 years, as provided in the bill, we would have paid very nearly the sum that is provided for in the bill. We have not the $1,500,000,000 to take out of the Treasury, and the Senator knows it. The Senator knows there is no money in the Treasury with which to meet the payments under his substitute. There would be no money in the Treasury next year that could be used to meet the payments under his substitute, and he knows it. If his substitute should become a law, there is only one way under the sun by which the payments could be made, and that would be for the Government of the United States to borrow money to meet the payments.

Mr. BURSUM. Precisely so, and that is the only way by which the Government can meet the pledge which is contained in the bill reported from the committee and take up the loans by 1926. There is no other provision for it. It authorizes an extortionate rate of interest which would permit the profiteers to profit to the extent of $81,000,000.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator knows, if he has read the bill, that the bill itself provides against profiteering, that the maximum rate that can be imposed by any bank is 6½ per cent.

Mr. BURSUM. How does it provide it? It does not provide it. What is to prevent a syndicate being organized to take over all of these loans at the rates authorized under the bill, and then float them in the country on the basis of the current credit?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not know of anything to prevent that.

Mr. BURSUM. Then there would be an $81,000,000 melon to be cut.

Mr. LENROOT. That is so far-fetched that I would not undertake to spend time to argue it with the Senator.

Mr. BURSUM. It may be far-fetched, but it is absolutely practical, and it is absolutely what is going to occur, and it is absolutely what is already being planned.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator propose to vote against the bill if his amendment is defeated?

Mr. BURSUM. No.

Mr. LENROOT. Thus the Senator himself proposes to vote for a robbery or the cutting of a melon, as he thinks, of $81,000,000.

Mr. BURSUM. Yes. I am so anxious to give the boys what I think they ought to have that if I am compelled to do so, even though it be a rank proposition, I shall vote for it, because I am compelled to do so. That is the way I feel about it.

Mr. LENROOT. I must say I am more anxious to give relief to the service men than is the Senator from New Mexico, because the Senator from New Mexico must realize, and I think every Senator must realize, that if the Senator's amendment goes to the President of the United States, it will be vetoed and the service men will get nothing.

Mr. BURSUM. But why? What right has the Senator to assume that the President would exercise anything but a friendly attitude, a reasonable analysis, and that his decisions would be based upon what would constitute the best welfare of the country?

Mr. LENROOT. The President has indicated to Congress his views upon the subject.

Mr. BURSUM. So far as I am concerned I feel this way about it, that the allegiance which I owe is to exercise my judgment about what is right and in accordance with my own conscience.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I can not yield further. The Senator from New Mexico said he wants to use his judgment as to what is best for the soldier. He can do that, and by using that judgment deprive the soldier of any benefit whatever under the bill. I can well understand why it is that Senators opposed to any bonus will vote with the Senator from New Mexico. Does not that indicate anything to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I do not yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin declines to yield further.

Mr. LENROOT. It certainly does to every other Senator upon the floor. Why is it that Senators opposed to any adjusted compensation are going to vote for his substitute? There is only one reason, of course, because they feel sure that if the Senator's amendment shall be adopted the service men of the United States would get nothing, and it would defeat the bill. If Senators who led their constituency to believe that they are in favor of the adjusted compensation can fulfill that pledge in any such way as is now proposed by the Senator's substitute, they will find out, Mr. President, that they are very much mistaken. The representatives of the American Legion do not want the Senator's amendment adopted. Representatives of the American Legion, representing the service men of the United States, want the bill adopted as it was reported by the committee.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I do not yield. There is no question about the proposition I have just made. I would not urge that so far as the principle of adjusted compensation is concerned, but granted that there is a moral obligation—and that is the ground upon which I put this, and I will have something to say about it when we come to the final debate—granted that there is a moral obligation, we can not discharge that obligation individually by voting for amendments here which will kill the bill. Therefore, I am opposed to the Bursum amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin, as usual, has attacked everybody who disagrees with him, and has imputed to them ulterior motives. So far as I am concerned I am willing to let my record on behalf of the soldiers of the country stand against that of the Senator from Wisconsin. I would not even compare my sincerity with his, because I am confident of my own sincerity, whether the Senator from Wisconsin is confident of his own or not. His speech, as usual, has had in mind solely the defense of the administration to which he unfortunately belongs. There never was a great issue facing the country or this body that the same motive did not actuate the Senator from Wisconsin, to judge by his speeches. If he has ever had a deeper motive than politics, his language has failed to disclose it to me.

There is no use going back to review the fight for the ratification of the treaty following the Great War, but if anyone should review the history of it they would see exactly the same spirit of defense of the position of the other side of the Chamber by the Senator from Wisconsin that he has made in the pending matter. Step by step the Senator is slipping with his party and with his President, no matter where it lands him, pretending all the time that the thing which actuates his whole soul is love and sympathy for the soldier boys. The Senator's speech is a constant defense of the lack of the support of those soldier boys by his own administration.

If the President is going to veto this bill it is going to be on the sole ground, if he is consistent—and I will give him credit for being consistent, even if the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] does not—that the bill does not provide the means for paying the compensation. It will not be determined by whether the compensation shall be paid in cash or shall be put over for a period of years; it will not depend upon whether one part of it shall be paid in money and another part of it shall be paid in notes of the Government. That has never been taken into consideration; that is an economic proposition that bears on the method of payment and not on how the money shall be raised to pay the obligations, and the Senator from Wisconsin knows that.

As a matter of fact, this committee bill is not what the Senator from Wisconsin promised the soldier boys when he was running for office; this is not what was promised the soldier boys by nine-tenths of the Members of this body when they sought their votes. Oh, no; go back to the original bill which was introduced in the other House and see what they then promised the soldier boys.

Examine that bill. Did they say then that they would not give a cent for adjusted compensation in cash to any soldier whose claim amounted to more than $50? Oh, no; for if they had said that two-thirds of the soldier boys whom they induced to vote for them would not have voted for them. They know that. But now they come in and say, "This satisfies the soldier boys; we are giving them everything that is coming to them." They are giving no cash pay to those who gave the longest service to the Government. What is the difference in the obligation of this Government whether it issues bonds and sells them to the public or whether it issues its notes to the soldier boys and they sell them to the public? In either event the same amount would be involved and the same obligation would be imposed on the public.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But in one case the interest would be less.

Mr. PITTMAN. The only difference is, as suggested by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], that the method of payment in the Bursum amendment would bring down a lesser burden on the people of the country. There is no answer to that whatever.

The whole truth of the proposition is—and it is understood by all Senators in this body—that members of the Republican majority are trying to get away from the speeches which they made to the soldiers when they were running for office. They regret that they pledged these boys adjusted compensation. Some of those who are trying to get away from it now did not believe in it at the time and they do not believe in it now and they are doing everything in their power to slip away from it.

Oh, yes; two years ago when they were running for office and making these promises to the boys they were saying we realize your desperate condition and we are going to help you right away. Does the bill, as reported by the committee, help the soldiers right away? It does not give any help to anybody right away except those who served the shortest time in the Army, those to whom only $50 or less is due. All of the others of those brave boys whom we were going to help right away will not have any cash coming to them. Oh, no; Senators on the other side slip away from the whole proposition. They promised these boys to support the bill which was formulated by the American Legion on behalf of the soldiers, but they have so butchered the bill in the Senate committee that no soldier could recognize it.

The soldiers sought, above everything else, the opportunity to make homes; the opportunity that was given patriotically to the soldiers in Canada, across the line, and ably forwarded by that Government. The House of Representatives gave it to the soldiers in its bill; yet Senators on this floor who promised to support that program have calmly voted to cut out that beneficial provision, and when a less expensive provision was proposed some of those same Senators who to-day are questioning the motives of others voted against the McNary amendment. I think the Senator from Wisconsin was one of them. He is willing to strike out of the House bill the provision for the settlement of the soldiers on the land; he is willing to vote against any cognate proposition, and will not himself suggest any amendment to cover that feature. The Senator from Wisconsin questions the motives of Senators who believe that this committee bill is an injustice to the soldiers, and yet he has voted against every amendment that would tend to bring this bill back to where it was as it came from the other House, and to make it the bill which he promised to support.

There is not any question at all that the Bursum amendment would impose a less burden on the people of the country than the bill as reported by the committee; there is not any doubt that it is the only proposition which has so far been brought forward that will be of any immediate help to the soldiers. Those are the two main considerations—immediate help to the soldiers and the imposition of as small a burden on the people as possible. Those things are not provided for in the bill as reported by the committee, and no one has been able to show that they are. They are, however, partially provided for in the Bursum amendment.

But it is said by certain Senators that they fear if we make this bill any better the President will veto it. Why is it that they suspect their President of being so brutal and unjust? Their President has always expressed a desire immediately to aid in some way the soldiers. Do they suspect that he did not mean that when he said it? Do they suspect his motives also? I do not suspect them; I have no reason to suspect them. The pending amendment will not place a greater burden on the Government, but it will give immediate relief to the soldier, and that is what the President of the United States has contended that he desired to accomplish.

What are the Senators in the majority in this body going to do? Are they going to allow their legislative ideas to be controlled entirely and absolutely by what they fear the President may do? I say "fear," because they have nothing else back of their position except a cowardly fear or some other similar motive.

I wish to say to them that if the President vetoes this measure by reason of the Bursum amendment there will be enough votes in this body to carry it over his head if those who pretend they stand for the soldiers will really stand for the soldiers instead of for politics. As a matter of fact, the only danger the soldiers have to fear is from politicians, and not from the sentiment of the Senate. Two-thirds of this body are for the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill in the form in which it passed the House, which is far more liberal than any bill now before the Senate or any amendment which has been offered to the bill. The truth about the matter is that some of those who pretend that they love the soldier so deeply love their political organization more. They would like not to have to vote on the bill at all; but as they are compelled to vote on something, they want to make it so inconsequential that it will not even require the consideration of the President of the United States.

Nothing can be said against the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico except the reiteration of the constant fear that the President will veto the bill if that amendment shall be adopted, and the very Senators who express that fear are discrediting the head of their own Government and their own administration and imputing motives and desires to him that I find nothing in his declarations whatever to sustain. It is an unworthy attempt to coerce those in this body who favor doing something fair and reasonable for the soldiers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM], as modified.

Mr. LENROOT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROUSSARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when Mr. OVERMAN'S name was called). I wish to announce, and ask that the announcement may stand for the day, that my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay" on the proposed substitute.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], as his colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] has already stated. From that statement I consider myself at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. I do not know how he would vote on this proposition, and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CALDER. I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] and will vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (after having voted in the negative). I observe that my pair, the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], has not voted. I therefore transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following general pairs:

The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY]; and

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—27.

Borah	Gerry	Newberry	Shields
Broussard	Glass	Nicholson	Swanson
Bursum	Hitchcock	Pepper	Underwood
Dial	McNary	Phipps	Wadsworth
Edge	Myers	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	Nelson	Pomerene	Williams
France	New	Reed, Pa.

NAYS—44.

Ashurst	Gooding	McCumber	Smith
Ball	Hale	McKellar	Smoot
Calder	Heflin	McLean	Stanfield
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Sterling
Capper	Kellogg	Ransdell	Sutherland
Colt	Kendrick	Rawson	Townsend
Culberson	Keyes	Reed, Mo.	Trammell
Cummins	La Follette	Robinson	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Lenroot	Sheppard	Warren
Dillingham	Lodge	Shortridge	Watson, Ind.
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Simmons	Willis

NOT VOTING—25.

Brandegee	Harris	Moses	Spencer
Caraway	Harrison	Norbeck	Stanley
du Pont	Johnson	Norris	Watson, Ga.
Elkins	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Weller
Ernst	King	Owen
Fernald	Ladd	Page
Harreld	McKinley	Poindexter

So Mr. BURSUM's amendment, in the nature of a substitute, as modified, was rejected.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, is there an amendment now pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I desire to make a few remarks, but I do not want to cut myself off from the opportunity of speaking later. I do not want to speak at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 42, after line 22, it is proposed to insert the following new title:

TITLE X.—ADJUSTED COMPENSATION TAX.

SEC. 1001. (a) That on and after November 1, 1922, and until November 1, 1925, in addition to all other taxes there shall be levied, collected, and paid (a) upon every commodity manufactured or produced when sold, leased, or licensed for consumption or use without further process of manufacture, a tax equivalent to one-half of 1 per cent of the price for which such commodity is sold, leased, or licensed, such tax to be paid by the manufacturer or producer, and (b) upon every commodity manufactured or produced in a country other than the United States, when imported into the United States for consumption or use without further process of manufacture, a tax equivalent to one-half of 1 per cent of the value at port of entry of such commodity, such tax to be paid by the importer.

(b) That on and after November 1, 1925, in addition to all other taxes there shall be levied, collected, and paid (a) upon every commodity manufactured or produced when sold, leased, or licensed for consumption or use without further process of manufacture, a tax equivalent to one-fourth of 1 per cent of the price for which such commodity is sold, leased, or licensed, such tax to be paid by the manufacturer or producer, and (b) upon every commodity manufactured or produced in a country other than the United States, when imported into the United States for consumption or use without further process of manufacture, a tax equivalent to one-fourth of 1 per cent of the value at port of entry of such commodity, such tax to be paid by the importer.

SEC. 1002. (a) That this title shall not apply to sales, leases, or licenses made during any year in which the total price for which the taxable sales, leases, or licenses are made does not exceed $6,000, nor to sales of refined gold or silver.

(b) If any manufacturer, producer, or importer of any commodity taxable under this title customarily sells, leases, or licenses such commodity at wholesale at the place of manufacture, production, or importation, and also at wholesale at another place, or at retail, the tax in the case of any commodity sold, leased, or licensed otherwise than at wholesale at the place of manufacture, production, or importation shall be computed on the price for which like commodities are sold, leased, or licensed at wholesale at the place of manufacture, production, or importation; or if sold by him at retail only the tax shall be computed on the fair market price at which like commodities are customarily sold, leased, or licensed at wholesale at the place of manufacture, production, or importation.

(c) If any person who manufactures, produces, or imports any commodity taxable under this title (1) sells, leases, or licenses such commodity to a corporation affiliated with such person within the meaning of section 240 of the revenue act of 1921 at less than the fair market price obtainable therefor, the tax thereon shall be computed on the basis of the price at which such commodity is sold, leased, or licensed by such affiliated corporation; and (2) if any such person sells, leases, or licenses such commodity, whether through any agreement, arrangement, or understanding, or otherwise, at less than the fair market price obtainable therefor, either, first, in such manner as directly or indirectly to benefit such person or any person directly or indirectly interested in the business of such person, or, second, with intent to cause such benefit, the amount for which such commodity is sold, leased, or licensed shall be taken to be the amount which would have been received from the sale, lease, or license of such commodity if sold, leased, or licensed at the fair market price obtainable therefor.

(d) Every individual, firm, or corporation liable for any tax imposed under this title shall make monthly returns under oath in duplicate and pay the taxes imposed by such title to the collector for the district in which is located the principal place of business. Such returns shall contain such information and be made in such time and place and in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulation prescribe.

(e) Taxes levied under this title shall, without assessment by the commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per cent, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month from the time when the tax becomes due.

SEC. 1003. (a) That the taxes imposed by this title shall not apply to sales, leases, or licenses made by (1) the United States; (2) any foreign government; (3) any State or Territory or political subdivision thereof or the District of Columbia; (4) any hospital; (5) Army or Navy commissaries and canteens; or (6) any corporation organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual; (7) any public utility; or (8) any farmer as to the product of his farm.

(b) The tax imposed by this title shall not apply to sales, leases, or licenses of any article taxable under Title VI of the revenue act of 1918 or Title VII of the revenue act of 1921.

(c) The taxes imposed by this title shall not apply with respect to articles sold, leased, or licensed for export and in due course so exported.

SEC. 1004. That in the case of any erroneous payment of any tax imposed by this act any person making such erroneous payment may take credit therefor against taxes due upon any subsequent return.

SEC. 1005. That the provisions of this title shall become effective on and after November 1, 1922.

SEC. 1006. That all the provisions of law relating to the levying, collection, and payment of internal-revenue taxes shall be applicable to the levying, collection, and payment of the taxes imposed by this title.

SEC. 1007. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to make all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement of the provisions of this title.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri will state the point of order.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The bill to which this amendment is offered contains no provision for raising revenue. The Constitution, Article I, section 7, provides that—

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

There being no provision in this bill as it comes to us from the House for raising revenue, the Senate is without jurisdiction or power to attach an amendment which proposes, as the pending amendment does, to raise revenue by taxation. The matter being beyond the jurisdiction and without the power of the Senate, I raise the point of order that it is not in order.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is not debatable. The Chair will be very glad to receive advice on the point raised by the Senator from Missouri, but will reserve the privilege of limiting the debate.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. With the indulgence of the Chair, I want to say just a word.

Since I understood that the Senator from Utah would introduce this amendment, I have given the matter some thought and some little attention. My judgment is, with all due deference to the opinion of the Senator from Utah, that the amendment is unconstitutional, in that we have no right to originate a revenue measure in the Senate.

But, at the same time, I disagree with the Senator from Missouri, because I do not believe that it is subject to a point of order. I do not think the question as to whether a matter proposed is or is not constitutional is a matter of procedure. The Senate may vote on it even though it is unconstitutional. It is a question for the Senate to decide, and I do not think our rules of order run contrary to the Constitution, to put it broadly, and I do not believe the amendment is subject to the point of order made by the Senator from Missouri. But, at the same time, however the Chair may rule on that, I trust that when the Senator from Utah begins to discuss it he will address himself to the constitutional right of the Senate to enact this legislation in the first instance.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have not given any particular consideration to this matter, but the suggestion made by the Senator from Indiana seems to me quite well worthy of consideration. Can we decide upon the constitutionality of a measure under a point of order? It would be a very interesting proposition if they could all be disposed of in that way.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I recognize that there is a question as to whether the amendment is even in order. When I first thought of offering this amendment for the purpose of raising a fund to meet the obligations which will be placed upon the Government by the passage of the pending bill I thought there was no question but that we could do it, and in what little time I have had at my disposal of late I have looked up a number of the precedents, and I must admit to the Senate that most of them are in accord with the statement made by the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Utah permit an observation on the part of the Chair?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The advice the Chair sought of the Senators, although the point is not open to debate, is whether the Chair has any authority to pass upon the constitutionality of a bill or an amendment to a bill. The Chair may shorten the debate by saying that the present opinion of the Chair is that the Presiding Officer of the Senate has no authority to pass upon the constitutionality of a measure that is presented which the Senate has under its consideration; that that is a matter for the Senators themselves to decide.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Chair in that particular, and, of course, in this case that is all I shall ask.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not desire at this time to hear a discussion upon the merits of the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, of course, I shall be content simply to have Senators vote upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah will be recognized for a discussion of the amendment immediately after the point of order is decided.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I would not make this point of order if we were simply engaged in passing an ordinary statute which, in the opinion of some Members of the Senate, might be unconstitutional. The point I make goes back of that sort of a question. It goes to the question of the jurisdiction of the Senate over a particular subject matter. The express language of the Constitution is that—

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives.

Here is a measure for raising revenue. It does not originate in the House of Representatives. It therefore is a matter with which the Senate has nothing to do and with which it can have nothing to do if the point is raised. It is like a plea to the jurisdiction of a court. If the court has jurisdiction of a subject matter we all agree that the case must be tried, and if the Senate had jurisdiction of this subject matter we would all agree that the question had to be settled by the vote of the Senate. But if the Constitution of the United States denies to the Senate any right whatsoever to deal with this subject matter unless a bill first comes to us from the House touching upon the same subject matter, then clearly the Senate is without any power whatever to proceed, and being without power to proceed, it seems to me the question can be raised on a point of order.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The question is, can the Chair determine the jurisdiction of the Senate over a question when the constitutionality of the proposition is involved? Can the Chair alone determine that proposition? It does not seem to me, if the Senator from Missouri will permit me, that the Chair alone is to be permitted to determine that question.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Chair only determines it in its opinion. The question is determinable by the Senate on an appeal from the decision of the Chair. I do not know that I could make this point any clearer by talking about it for an hour.

The Constitution is greater than the Senate. The Constitution denies our jurisdiction over a question by express terms. There is no dispute of fact here. The bill is before the President of the Senate. It contains no provision whatever for the raising of revenue. It is not a mooted question; it is not a question of dispute. It is clear and plain and unequivocal. It is then proposed to introduce a matter over which, under the Constitution, we have no jurisdiction, which we have no right to touch, no right to consider; and if we did consider it our act would fall dead.

Mr. BORAH. That would be true of any proposition which was suggested here which is unconstitutional.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No.

Mr. BORAH. If a bill were introduced in the Senate and I should offer an amendment to it, whether it related to revenue or anything else, and it was clearly unconstitutional, the same argument would apply, and instead of the Senate deciding whether or not it had jurisdiction, the Senator from Missouri would contend that that would be a matter for the Chair to decide.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The ordinary case to which the Senator refers, where the Senate may be acting beyond its power but has jurisdiction of the subject matter, is one thing. For instance, the Senate has jurisdiction, along with the other House of Congress, of a multitude of questions. In determining what law it will pass it may go beyond its legal authority. But the subject with which it is dealing may be one with which the Senate can deal. This subject matter the Senate can not deal with.

I do not care to prolong this discussion; it is not so important; but suppose the House of Representatives were to undertake to pass upon and approve the appointment of an ambassador to the Court of St. James; suppose somebody should move that the House of Representatives advise and consent to the appointment. That being a matter with which the House of Representatives has nothing to do, would it not be subject to a point of order? I think it would be.

Mr. President, I have suggested the point. I do not care to prolong the discussion.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, on this point the philosophy of the Senator from Missouri is certainly correct, and I am not sure that his method of procedure is wrong. The Senate on March 2, 1917, attached to the naval appropriation bill certain amendments providing for the issuance of bonds, and as amended returned that bill to the House, and on that same day, a few hours after the House received that bill from the Senate, the following resolution was unanimously agreed to by the House of Representatives:

House Resolution 550.

Resolved, That the amendments providing for the issuance of bonds added by the Senate to the House bill (H. R. 20632) in the opinion of this House contravene the first clause of the seventh section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States and are an infringement of the privileges of this House, and that the said bill with the amendments be respectfully returned to the Senate with a message communicating this resolution.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I understood the Chair had decided that question.

Mr. ASHURST. With due deference to my learned friend, that would not preclude my talking.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I know that.

Mr. ASHURST. I am surprised that such an able Senator as the Senator from North Dakota should even intimate that because a question has been decided we should stop talking about it. Indeed, Mr. President, that is when the discussion begins.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, understanding that the parliamentary question has been disposed of, I want to say just one word on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The parliamentary question has not been disposed of.

Mr. McCUMBER. I would like to have the Chair dispose of it then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is quite ready to rule upon the point of order made by the Senator from Missouri.

Whatever may be the opinion of the present occupant of the chair respecting the constitutionality of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah, the Chair is quite clear that it is not within the jurisdiction or power of the Presiding Officer to pass upon that question, and therefore the point of order is overruled, and the Senator from Utah is recognized if he desires to be recognized for the purpose of presenting the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield the floor if the Senator desires to make a statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not believe there is any lawyer in the Senate who will not admit that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah is violative of that provision of the Constitution which requires all bills for raising revenue to originate in the House of Representatives.

It is perfectly clear to me that if the Senate should adopt the amendment of the Senator from Utah and send the bill to the House of Representatives with that amendment in it, the House, under every precedent that has occurred during the last 20 years and under every one that I have ever heard of, would refuse to receive the bill and would immediately send it back to the Senate on the ground that the Senate had trespassed upon the jurisdiction of the House of Representatives. Is there a Senator familiar with the precedents who doubts that I have stated them correctly?

The House is rightfully jealous of its prerogative in this matter. For many reasons the Constitution reposed in that body the jurisdiction to originate revenue bills, and that body has rightfully safeguarded its exclusive jurisdiction over the subject. It is regarded by the body at the other end of the Capitol as an affront for the Senate of the United States to assume jurisdiction in a case where there can be no doubt in the mind of any well-informed person that the Senate is deliberately trespassing upon the jurisdiction of the House of Representatives. This amendment does not present a question of doubt. It does not present a case where a well-informed Senator may say that in all probability the subject is within the jurisdiction of the Senate. It presents a case where, I repeat, every Senator, even the Senator proposing the amendment, must admit that the provision is violative of the Constitution of the United States in that it seeks to usurp on the part of the Senate the jurisdiction of the House.

These facts being true, it being manifest to all Senators that we have no right to consider and act upon the amendment, it being clear that the House would justly resent an effort upon the part of the Senate to usurp its jurisdiction, I ask the Senate what is the advantage now and what is the justification for frittering away the time of the Senate in the consideration of the amendment? I would not take advantage of the Senator from Utah to make a motion to lay upon the table his amendment, because the Senator from Utah was good enough to yield to me to make this statement.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator may do so so far as I am personally concerned.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then I move to lay upon the table the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to vote against the amendment, but I am not willing to lay it on the table. I am getting tired of the proposition of having the cloture applied in this Chamber in that way.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Idaho wants to discuss the amendment, I withdraw the motion to lay it on the table.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas and to the Senate that so far as I am personally concerned I do not care to discuss the question, and the Senate can vote upon it at any time. I shall not say a word about it, but let it be decided by the Senate. If it feels it is in violation of the Constitution of the United States, I have no objection to the vote being taken. I do not desire to enter into any discussion of the question. I state very frankly to the Senator from Missouri that I think there was a great deal in what he said in his point of order.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him to say just a word of personal explanation?

Mr. McCUMBER. I shall be through in just a moment. I merely desire to say that while we may all agree with the ruling of the Chair, there is not a Senator who does not fully understand the provision of the Constitution that all bills for raising revenue must originate in the House. Now, we all understand that. None of us disagree with it. Furthermore, we all understood our oath when we swore we would support and defend the Constitution of the United States. How on earth a Senator can square that oath with a vote in favor of this amendment upon the bill is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that I did not mean the point of order which I made as any possible attempt to deprive the Senator who introduced the amendment of his rights upon the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, Mr. President, I understood that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I thought it a proper way to raise the point, and I disclaim any thought or any intention to cut the Senator off. That, I thought, was the short way out of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I desire to say just a few words. Of course, we all recognize that the Senate can not originate a revenue bill. The courts have already decided that in the case of the cotton futures act a year or two ago. The bill came over here with some provision to use the post-office power of the Constitution for the enforcement of the law. The Senate took out that provision and put a tax on futures sales to provide means for the enforcement of the law. The district court promptly held that the action of the Senate was unconstitutional.

Of course, if we wanted to kill the pending bill there would be no better way to kill it than to put on it a provision for the raising of revenue if that provision originated in the Senate. Although I am very much opposed to the pending bill, I shall endeavor to try to defeat it, if I can, by direct methods and not indirect methods. Therefore I shall vote against the pending amendment to put a tax provision in the bill.

I did not want to let my vote stand without this explanation, because I feel that if the bill is passed it is going to require from $4,000,000,000 to $7,000,000,000 to meet the obligation imposed. I think that the position which the President of the United States took last year in regard to the matter was entirely correct, that if the Congress is going to impose so great a burden of obligation that must be met, it ought, in imposing that burden, to carry with it the necessary legislation for its payment. If I had an opportunity to vote to put on the bill a tax provision to pay for the obligation that we are putting on the country, and which in the end must be paid by a tax imposed on the people of the United States, I would vote for such an amendment. Of course I can not vote for it here because it would be an idle thing to do. But I want to say that if the Senator from Utah, instead of proposing an amendment which is clearly unconstitutional, would introduce a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate that it return the bill to the House of Representatives with the request that they add to it a taxing amendment which would provide for raising the money to pay the obligations we are going to put on the Government, I would vote for that resolution, because that would be in keeping with the Constitution. I do not want to delay the Senate, but I did not want a negative vote to misrepresent my position on the question that we should raise the revenue if we are going to pass the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want the Senator from Alabama to understand that my original thought was not in any way, shape, or form to try to defeat the bill indirectly by offering the sales tax amendment. In fact, when I first thought of it there was a doubt in my mind whether it would be a violation of the Constitution or not. There are some of the precedents which hold that it is not, but a great majority of them hold that it is. If my purpose can not be accomplished in the way my amendment contemplates, I intend to offer another amendment to the bill, and then I shall speak to that amendment, but it does seem to me, with the obligation we are under at the present time, that it would be the height of folly and unwise in the extreme to load an additional burden upon the Government of the United States at this time. I am perfectly willing that the Senate shall vote on my amendment without even a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I did not finish reading the article which I started to read this morning referring to the amendment on which the Senate voted yesterday afternoon, providing that this money should be raised by collecting the interest on the debt due us from foreign countries. The Washington Post article, from which I read, in part, continues:

> The amendment likewise has the disadvantage of practically "blowing up" the American funding commission now negotiating with foreign powers for the refunding of the debts. Senator SMOOT, who is a member of the commission, naturally regards the amendment as impossible and would have voted against it had he been present.

Mr. President, here is an opportunity, I repeat, to pay adjusted compensation to the American soldier by collecting a debt overdue to this Government, paying the adjusted compensation without issuing Federal reserve notes, without taxing the American people one five-cent piece, without taking a nickel out of the Treasury, without selling any bonds of the United States.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and others come forward now with a sales-tax proposition that would impose a tax burden upon the breakfast table, the dinner table, and the supper table, and would impose a tax upon every consumer in the mass of the 110,000,000 people. Why will Senators on the other side of the Chamber seek to burden the American people in this fashion when we can raise the money by collecting a debt honestly due to the American people? Why is it that Wall Street financiers are considered above the interest and welfare of the American mass? Why is it that the finest types of young men that ever responded to the call of duty must wait four years and more, and then when we come with a solid Democratic vote supporting the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], with the aid of a few Republicans, and put it on the bill providing for the collection of this money, thus relieving our people of the burden of additional taxation, the Senator from Utah should present his sales-tax amendment—the Senator from Utah who is on the commission with four other Republicans, not a Democrat on it, not a progressive, not an independent, but a partisan commission made up purely and wholly of Republicans, five in number, handling this foreign-debt question.

The paper tells us, before the Senator from Utah could be heard, that if he had been present he would have voted against the amendment, and the next day the Senator from Utah, a member of the commission, a leading Republican in this body, soon to be chairman of the great Finance Committee of the Senate, leaves his tariff conference committee long enough to come in to offer an amendment to burden the masses of the American people, already overburdened with taxation, with a sales tax. Every time a poor struggling man or woman would buy a pair of shoes for a baby or any necessity of life it would be necessary to contribute money through the process which the Senator now offers in this Chamber. Why is this step taken at this time? Why is it that Wall Street's influence has been strong enough to shut the door in the faces of the soldiers for four years, and why, when the light is breaking through and we are about to provide a way to pay the boys a debt long due to them, is it attempted to burden the bill with a provision which Senators know can never pass the House? Why is it that those Senators now present a proposition that every man and woman who consumes in this country will rise and protest against? Why offer this injustice to the American soldier and tax him to pay a debt that we owe him? The American ex-service men, many of them, are not able now to buy food; not able to furnish decent clothes; not able now to provide themselves with shelter, and yet the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]—a partisan member of the funding commission, composed of four other partisans, who are handling a debt due to 110,000,000 people without regard to politics, a political Republican partisan commission—comes in here at this late hour and offers upon this bill, which is now moving toward its passage, a sales-tax provision.

I trust, Mr. President, that the amendment will not receive a half dozen votes in this body. Let us solemnly resolve to-day that we will stand by these boys; that no power in the subsidized press, no power in the money changers of Wall Street, no power in the cohorts of Europe, that no combination of the powers of all of those forces shall cause us longer to mistreat and neglect the American soldier.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah is in the nature of a substitute to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert the following——

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand the Senator from Utah has stricken from the printed amendment as he now presents it Title VI, which is headed "Adjusted Compensation."

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment which I now present is not the same as the amendment which the Senator has before him. I can explain the amendment in a very few words.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask if there is a tax provision in the amendment which the Senator from Utah now proposes?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no such provision whatever. I have stricken that out.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If we are to have a vote on the amendment, I should like to have it read to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I also desire that the amendment shall be reported.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the amendment been printed?

Mr. SMOOT. It has been.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have in my hand the copy of a printed amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator has the printed copy of the other amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the amendment about which I was asking the Senator. I see that Title VI relates to an adjusted compensation tax. What I wish to know is, has Title VI of the amendment been stricken out?

Mr. SMOOT. That has been stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

TITLE I.—DEFINITIONS.

SECTION 1. This act may be cited as the "World War adjusted compensation act."

SEC. 2. As used in this act—

(a) The term "veteran" includes any individual, a member of the military or naval forces of the United States at any time after April 5, 1917, and before November 12, 1918, but does not include (1) any individual at any time during such period or thereafter separated from such forces under other than honorable conditions, (2) any conscientious objector who performed no military duty whatever or refused to wear the uniform, or (3) any alien at any time during such period or thereafter discharged from the military or naval forces on account of his alienage;

(b) The term "oversea service" means service on shore in Europe or Asia, exclusive of China, Japan, and the Philippine Islands; and service afloat, not on receiving ships; including in either case the period from the date of embarkation for such service to the date of disembarkation on return from such service, both dates inclusive;

(c) The term "home service" means all service not oversea service;

(d) The term "adjusted service credit" means the amount of the credit computed under the provisions of Title II; and

(e) The term "person" includes a partnership, corporation, or association, as well as an individual.

TITLE II.—ADJUSTED SERVICE CREDIT.

SEC. 201. The amount of adjusted-service credit shall be computed by allowing the following sums for each day of active service in excess of 60 days, in the military or naval forces of the United States, after April 5, 1917, and before July 1, 1919, as shown by the service or other record of the veteran: $1.25 for each day of oversea service, and $1 for each day of home service; but the amount of the credit of a veteran who performed no oversea service shall not exceed $500, and the amount of the credit of a veteran who performed any oversea service shall not exceed $625.

SEC. 202. In computing the adjusted service credit no allowance shall be made to—

(a) Any commissioned officer above the grade of captain in the Army or Marine Corps, lieutenant in the Navy, first lieutenant or first lieutenant of engineers in the Coast Guard, or passed assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, or having the pay and allowances, if not the rank, of any officer superior in rank to any of such grades—in each case for the period of service as such;

(b) Any individual holding a permanent or provisional commission or permanent or acting warrant in any branch of the military or naval forces, or (while holding such commission or warrant) serving under a temporary commission in a higher grade—in each case for the period of service under such commission or warrant or in such higher grade after the accrual of the right to pay thereunder. This subdivision shall not apply to any noncommissioned officer.

(c) Any civilian officer or employee of any branch of the military or naval forces, contract surgeon, cadet of the United States Military Academy, midshipman, cadet of the Coast Guard, member of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, member of the Students' Army Training Corps (except an enlisted man detailed thereto), Philippine Scout, member of the Philippine Guard, member of the Philippine Constabulary, member of the Porto Rico regiment of Infantry, member of the National Guard of Hawaii, member of the insular force of the Navy, member of the Samoan native guard and band of the Navy, or Indian scout—in each case for the period of service as such;

(d) Any individual entering the military or naval forces after November 11, 1918—for any period after such entrance;

(e) Any commissioned or warrant officer performing home service not with troops and receiving commutation of quarters or of subsistence—for the period of such service;

(f) Any member of the Public Health Service—for any period during which he was not detailed for duty with the Army or the Navy;

(g) Any individual granted a farm or industrial furlough—for the period of such furlough; or

(h) Any individual detailed for work on roads or other highway construction or repair work—for the period during which his pay was equalized to conform to the compensation paid to civilian employees in the same or like employment, pursuant to the provisions of section 9 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1919.

SEC. 203. (a) The periods referred to in subdivision (e) of section 202 may be included in the case of any individual if and to the extent that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy jointly find that such service subjected such individual to exceptional hazard. A full statement of all action under this subdivision shall be included in the reports of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy required by section 306.

(b) In computing the credit to any veteran under this title effect shall be given to all subdivisions of section 202 which are applicable.

(c) If part of the service is overseas service and part is home service, the home service shall first be used in computing the 60 days' period referred to in section 201.

(d) For the purpose of computing the 60 days' period referred to in section 201, any period of service after April 5, 1917, and before July 1, 1919, in the military or naval forces in any capacity may be included, notwithstanding allowance of credit for such period, or a part thereof, is prohibited under the provisions of section 202, except that the periods referred to in subdivisions (b), (c), and (d) of that section shall not be included.

(e) For the purposes of section 201, in the case of members of the National Guard or of the National Guard Reserve called into service by the proclamation of the President dated July 3, 1917, the time of service between the date of call into the service as specified in such proclamation and August 5, 1917, both dates inclusive, shall be deemed to be active service in the military or naval forces of the United States.

TITLE III.—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

APPLICATION BY VETERAN.

SEC. 301. (a) The veteran shall file application for an adjusted service certificate as provided in Title IV with the Secretary of War, if he is serving in, or his last service was with, the military forces; or with the Secretary of the Navy, if he is serving in, or his last service was with, the naval forces.

(b) Such application shall be made on or before July 1, 1923, and if not made on or before such date shall be held void.

(c) An application shall be made (1) personally by the veteran, or (2) in case physical or mental incapacity prevents the making of a personal application, then by such representative of the veteran and in such manner as the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall jointly by regulation prescribe. An application made by a representative other than one authorized by any such regulation shall be void.

(d) The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall jointly make any regulations necessary to the efficient administration of the provisions of this section.

SEC. 302. (a) As soon as practicable after the receipt of a valid application the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, shall transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury a certificate setting forth—

(1) That the applicant is a veteran;

(2) His name and address; and

(3) The amount of his adjusted service credit.

(b) Upon receipt of such certificate the officer to whom it is transmitted shall proceed to extend to the veteran the benefits conferred as provided for in this act.

PUBLICITY.

SEC. 303. (a) The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, jointly prepare and publish a pamphlet or pamphlets containing a digest and explanation of the provisions of this act and shall from time to time thereafter jointly prepare and publish such additional or supplementary information as may be found necessary.

(b) The officer having charge of the administration of the adjusted service certificate plan, or part thereof, shall transmit to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy as soon as practicable after the passage of this act full information and explanations as to the matters of which such officer has charge, which shall be considered by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy in preparing the publications referred to in subdivision (a).

(c) The publications provided for in subdivision (a) shall be distributed in such manner as the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may determine to be most effective to inform veterans of their rights under this act.

STATISTICS.

SEC. 304. Immediately upon the passage of this act the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall ascertain the individuals who are veterans as defined in section 2 and, as to each veteran, the number of days of oversea service and of home service, as defined in section 2, for which he is entitled to receive adjusted service credit; and their decisions shall not be subject to review by the General Accounting Office.

ADMINISTRATIVE REGULATIONS.

SEC. 305. Any officer charged with any function under this act shall make such regulations, not inconsistent with this act, as may be necessary to the efficient administration of such function.

REPORTS.

SEC. 306. Any officer charged with the administration of the adjusted service certificate plan under this act, or of any part thereof, shall make a full report to Congress on the first Monday of December of each year.

EXEMPTION FROM ATTACHMENT AND TAXATION.

SEC. 307. No sum payable under this act to a veteran, or to his estate, or to any beneficiary named under Title IV, and no adjusted service certificate shall be subject to attachment, levy, or seizure under any legal or equitable process, or to National or State taxation.

UNLAWFUL FEES.

SEC. 308. Any person who charges or collects, or attempts to charge or collect, either directly or indirectly, any fee or other compensation for assisting in any manner a veteran in obtaining any of the benefits or privileges to which he is entitled under the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $500, or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

TITLE IV.—ADJUSTED SERVICE CERTIFICATES.

SEC. 401. The Secretary of the Treasury, upon certification from the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as provided in section 302, is hereby directed to issue without cost to the veteran designated therein an adjusted service certificate (hereinafter in this title referred to as a "certificate") of a face value equal to the sum of (1) the adjusted service credit of the veteran increased by 25 per cent, plus (2) interest thereon for 20 years at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, compounded annually (such amount being approximately equal to 3.015 times the adjusted service credit of the veteran). The certificate shall be dated, and all rights conferred under the provisions of this title shall take effect as of October 1, 1922. The veteran shall name the beneficiary of the certificate and may from time to time, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, alter such beneficiary. The amount of the face value of the certificate (unless the certificate has been canceled as hereinafter in this title provided) shall be payable (1) to the veteran on September 30, 1942, or (2) upon the death of the veteran prior thereto, to the beneficiary named; except that if such beneficiary dies before the veteran and no new beneficiary is named, or if the beneficiary in the first instance has not yet been named, the amount of the face value of the certificate shall be paid to the estate of the veteran.

SEC. 402. A certificate or any right conferred under the provisions of this title shall not be negotiable, assignable, or serve as security for a loan. Any negotiation, assignment, or loan in violation of the provisions of this section shall be void, the certificate shall be canceled, and all rights conferred shall be extinguished.

TITLE V.—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

SEC. 501. The officers having charge of the administration of any of the provisions of this act are authorized to appoint such officers, employees, and agents in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and to make such expenditures for rent, furniture, office equipment, printing, binding, telegrams, telephone, law books, books of reference, stationery, motor-propelled vehicles or trucks used for official purposes, traveling expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4 for officers, agents, and other employees, for the purchase of reports and materials for publications, and for other contingent and miscellaneous expenses, as may be necessary efficiently to execute the purposes of this act and as may be provided for by the Congress from time to time. With the exception of such special experts as may be found necessary for the conduct of the work, all such appointments shall be made subject to the civil service laws; but for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of section 304 such appointments may be made without regard to such laws until the services of persons duly qualified under such laws are available. In all appointments under this section preference shall, so far as practicable, be given to veterans.

SEC. 502. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 503. Whoever knowingly makes any false or fraudulent statement of a material fact in any application, certificate, or document made under the provisions of Title III or IV, or of any regulation made under any such title, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 504. The Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy shall severally submit to Congress in the manner provided by law estimates of the amounts necessary to be expended in carrying out such provisions of this act as each is charged with administering, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, amounts sufficient to defray such expenditures.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, whatever is granted to the veteran of the World War by the Government of the United States as a donation, a gift, or compensation in any form ought to be with a view of assisting not only the veteran himself but those that are dependent upon him; and this amendment, briefly stated, is to give to each veteran a paid-up policy, payable 20 years from the date of the policy or at his death.

The veteran pays nothing whatever. The amount of the policy depends upon the length of his service, running all the way from $1,400 to $2,000. During the 20 years he does not receive one cent from the Government if he lives; and if he dies, no matter what time it may be, if it is only one week after taking out the insurance, his estate receives the full face value of the insurance.

The pending bill grants the soldier small amounts, dribbled out at different times; and as the soldier receives it I say without a question of a doubt that 90 per cent of all of it will be spent within a year or two years after the final payment is made.

Every Senator knows the history of insurance received by beneficiaries, not only in this country but in all the countries of the world. The records of the insurance companies tell the story completely, the same story that has been told ever since the beginning of insurance—that 92 per cent of the insurance received by the beneficiaries of persons carrying insurance is spent within three years after the death of the insured. That, I think, can not be disputed.

I want, if I can, whatever is given to the soldier, to see that it is in an amount that will help those who are dependent upon him. If the soldier to-day, in the very vigor of life, can not make a living, with the loyalty of the people of the United States to him, willing to give him preference, and with legislation that we have passed giving him preferences—if he can not make a living to-day, when on earth will he be able to do it? If he dies within a month, his dependents get the full amount of the insurance. If he lives a year or five years or ten years, and then dies, his beneficiaries get the full amount of the insurance, and the amount of the insurance will be an amount that is worth while; and if there is ever a time when help is needed it is when the breadwinner is taken from the family.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The mortality tables which are used by the insurance companies in ascertaining the probable life of an applicant for insurance are based upon what may be termed insurable status. Persons who have not that status are not considered in arriving at the rates to be fixed.

How would the Senator ascertain the insurance rate to be paid upon, say, 4,000,000 men of varied insurability, some of them in such physical condition that they might fairly be expected to survive only a short time, and others in a vigorous and healthy condition?

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment provides that every soldier shall have this insurance.

Mr. ROBINSON. I know that; but does the Government itself grant the insurance?

Mr. SMOOT. The Government grants the insurance, and carries the risk.

Mr. ROBINSON. And it is without regard to the insurability or the noninsurability of the soldier?

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely; that is one thing I think ought to be, because if the soldier is not disabled to a sufficient degree to receive compensation from the Government, I think it is nothing more than right that the Government of the United States should carry his insurance, even though the regular insurance companies would not insure the man.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, the plan would not be presented by the Senator from Utah unless it were contemplated that it should be made applicable to practically all veterans.

Mr. SMOOT. It is applicable to all of the veterans.

Mr. ROBINSON. It would be unthinkable that insurance should be granted to only a few individuals, and they the healthy ones, the least likely to need it.

Mr. SMOOT. They are the least likely to need it, and I want to say to the Senator that I would not think of offering such a proposition to the Senate. Every soldier is entitled to the insurance.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I was not able, because I was otherwise occupied, to follow the colloquy between the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Arkansas; but do I understand that this would be in lieu of the insurance which a great many of these men have already taken out?

Mr. SMOOT. This is compensation granted to every soldier, no matter whether he is carrying $10,000, $5,000, or $1,000 of insurance, or no insurance. This is compensation for the soldiers, and they get it.

Mr. POMERENE. This is in addition to what they already carry?

Mr. SMOOT. In addition to all they are carrying.

Mr. ROBINSON. How does the Senator arrive at the amount a soldier should receive?

Mr. SMOOT. By the actuary tables used by every insurance company in the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. But those apply to persons in normal condition exclusively, insurable persons.

Mr. SMOOT. We put them all in that class.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator allow one interruption?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has the Senator an estimate of what this will cost?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; for each year up to 1943, when the payment will be made. To save time, as long as the Senator has asked the question, I might as well call attention to that now. I will give the figures in millions only. They are as follows:

1923	$39,000,000
1924	39,000,000
1925	39,000,000
1926	39,000,000
1927	39,000,000
1928	39,000,000
1929	39,000,000
1930	39,000,000
1931	40,000,000
1932	40,000,000
1933	40,000,000
1934	41,000,000
1935	41,000,000
1936	42,000,000
1937	42,000,000
1938	43,000,000
1939	44,000,000
1940	45,000,000
1941	46,000,000
1942	47,000,000
1943	1,723,258,143

That is at the maturity of the 20-year period.

Mr. SIMMONS. Are all these policies for the same amount?

Mr. SMOOT. It all depends on the length of the service.

Mr. SIMMONS. In other words, you take the cash payment to which each soldier would be entitled and then you make out the paid-up insurance policy, based on a table of mortality?

Mr. SMOOT. Based on the tables of mortality used by all the insurance companies, and, as I have said, these are the results.

Now I want to call attention to the fact that there seems to be a feeling throughout the country that we have not taken care of our disabled soldiers. I hardly think that is a fair charge against Congress, because I have before me the figures showing the appropriations we have made.

Mr. SIMMONS. Before the Senator gets to that, let me ask another question. Are those policies salable?

Mr. SMOOT. No; they are not. I am glad the Senator asked me that question, because I feel that wherever insurance is given to a soldier for the full amount it is given for two purposes: First, so that his beneficiaries, in case he dies, will receive an amount which will assist them at a time when they need assistance if they ever will need it in the world. Again, there may be many soldiers who, if they live 20 years, may need the money a great deal more than they need any kind of assistance to-day. I say that we are taking care of the disabled soldiers as well as it is possible for us to do, and, as far as I am personally concerned, I will not hesitate at any kind of an appropriation to take care of them.

Up to April 1 of this year we had expended $1,996,260,634 for the care of the wounded and disabled soldiers of the recent war.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, did those figures include the appropriations for the current year?

Mr. SMOOT. No; this is up to April 1 of this year.

Mr. POMERENE. I have a statement from the Veterans' Bureau dated May 19, 1922, giving the amount disbursed as $1,639,000,000, through the United States Veterans' Bureau and its agencies, in behalf of ex-service men and their dependents.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that was to the end of the last fiscal year. Since then we have spent enough to make up the amount I have just mentioned. This brings it up to April 1, 1922. I think that was the figure up to the end of the last fiscal year, June 30, 1921. I have the amounts for each item, and they are as follows:

Military and naval family allowance	$298,615,000
Military and naval compensation	557,150,000
Insurance	23,000,000
Administration	83,896,880
Hospitalization	224,729,420
Hospital construction	47,095,000
Vocational training	469,123,370
Disposition of remains	33,473,782
Bonus allowance	248,684,200
Payment to beneficiaries of Army men and officers	10,495,000

Or a total of $1,966,260,634 up to the 1st day of April, 1922.

Mr. POMERENE. The figures I have given were sent to me at my request from the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau under date of May 19, 1922. I have not sought to verify them.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose those were to the end of the fiscal year, as the appropriations were made at that time. These figures take in all of the expenditures and bring us up to April 1 of this year.

It may be interesting to note just what the Government has been doing for the wounded soldier. The number of former service men receiving vocational training is 108,200. The average received per month by each man of that 108,200 is $115, and in addition the Government supplies the men with books, tools, medical care, transportation, tuition in school, and so forth.

Approximately 30,000 are now in the hospitals. The total number wounded was 208,526. The total number discharged for disability was 251,916. The Government is paying compensation on 50,420 death claims and 156,539 disability cases. Monthly payments for compensation are approximately $10,400,000. The Government is paying insurance on 134,550 death claims and 6,299 disability claims.

The commuted value of war risk term insurance allowed by the Government is $1,326,985,835.70.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves that branch of the subject I want to ask him a further question about the negotiability or nonnegotiability of these policies. The Senator knows it is the practice of every insurance company to provide for loans on insurance policies. He also knows that those policies can be used as a basis for loans. Just why is that specifically prohibited in the Senator's amendment? That is not clear to me.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason is that I want this insurance to go to the soldier at a time when he will need it, and in an amount sufficient to assist him so that he can at least take care of himself when he is 20 years older than he is at the present time. Or I want it to go direct to his beneficiaries in case he dies before the end of 20 years. During the next 20 years the veteran will be in the prime of life. If he can make a living, it is in the next 20 years, and I say to the Senator that if there were a loan privilege granted under insurances policies, the Senator knows, just as well as I know and as we all know, that there would be loans made to them by the banks and loans made to them by the loan sharks from one end of the country to the other. No matter what rate of interest should be charged, if they wanted to get $75 or $100, if the value of the insurance from the date of issue to the time they wanted to make that loan was $100, many of them would get the $100.

I do not like the pending bill because of the very fact that they will receive the money in dribs, and I say now that, no matter what rate of interest is charged, there will be a rake-off on nearly all the soldiers before the time ever comes when they shall receive the last payment. I think Congress ought to take into consideration the history of the past, and I think the Congress ought to provide a law which will stipulate that if we give a soldier $2,000 paid-up insurance, that shall be paid to his beneficiary if he dies in a week or a month or a year or five years. If he lives 20 years, he will be more than gratified to receive the full amount to assist him when he needs assistance most.

I think this arrangement would be better for the Government of the United States. We are loaded to the guards with taxes to-day. Our estimated income for the coming year will be only $3,100,000,000, according to the highest estimate which can possibly be placed upon the revenues of our Government, based upon the existing revenue laws. The first estimate of expenditures submitted was for approximately $4,000,000,000. The President has ordered that the estimates of expenditures be cut within the estimates of the revenue, and that is what General Lord is undertaking to do, and I have so much confidence in him that I know that when the report comes to Congress it will be within the $3,100,000,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah spoke about what the Government is doing for the soldier who can not take care of himself. I have voted for every measure looking to such care of our disabled soldiers. But I want to ask the Senator from Utah, and every other Senator who opposes adjusted compensation, what he is going to do for the soldier who left a position paying him $50 or $100 a month or $150 a month or $200 a month and went overseas and was gone from that position for two years or more, and who got but $1 a day for the service that he was rendering amidst surroundings of danger and death, and when he came home without a dollar in his pocket the job that he had was gone, and in a little while 7,000,000 men were out of employment, there was no job awaiting him, and he could find nothing to do?

I want to know what Senators are going to do for the young man who found himself in the position that I have described, and there are many thousands of them.

I am asking the Senator from Utah and others, what are you going to do for the young man who went through the horrors and hell of battle in a foreign land and who, when he reached home, said, "The job I had is in the hands of another, and now the industries of the country are closed. Deflation has destroyed business. Wall Street is buying up the Liberty bonds that my father and others bought in order to help win the war and have something laid aside for a rainy day. The bonds have been driven down in value. Wall Street got them at $80 on the hundred. Hard times are everywhere. The war is over. I have been discharged. I no longer draw the $30 a month. I am turned loose to drift and there is nowhere to go."

What sort of fix is he in? I will tell you what sort of fix he is in. He is in a desperate fix. He is low spirited and sick at heart. That situation has broken the morale of thousands of those brave boys, and Senators here who pursue the course of denying to them simple justice are making Bolsheviks out of the very boys who displayed on the battle fields beyond the sea the noblest type of heroic manhood that the world ever saw.

We are looking after the disabled boys, and we ought to care well for them. But I can see and appreciate that there is something that should be done for the young man who offered to die for his country and who claims that the Government owes him something. He is sound in body and mind, but he has no regular place to eat and sleep and no good clothes to wear. I think it is high time that Senators were showing some sympathy when we know that in many instances collection of old clothes have been had for soldiers whose account against the Government has not been paid. Think of that! Here is the greatest and richest Nation in all the world, with $3,000,000,000 in gold lying idle, the currency contracted, a little more than $14 per capita taken out of circulation in a few months' time, and we have not money enough now in circulation to answer the business needs of the people. The able-bodied soldier can find nothing to do. He has been neglected and sorely mistreated, while the big income-tax payer has been relieved, the profiteers exempt from taxation, and war contracts paid. Sharper than a serpent's tooth is the fang of ingratitude.

Mr. President, I believe as certainly as there is a just God in the heavens—and I do believe it with all my heart; I believe it as I believe in the patriotism of the American citizen, and I believe in the sturdy integrity of the great masses of our people—that they will not tolerate this subserviency to dollar aristocracy longer than the coming election.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCUMBER (when his name was called). I again transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]——

Mr. SIMMONS. May I interrupt the Senator to say that if the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] were present he would vote against the pending amendment? I wish also to state that he is detained on account of illness.

Mr. WARREN. I transfer the pair which I have with the junior Senator from North Carolina to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. EDGE. I am unable to obtain a transfer of my pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. Not being informed how that Senator would vote on this question I am compelled to withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. CALDER. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], who is absent. Therefore I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. BROUSSARD. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following general pairs:

The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—18.

Ball	Keyes	Phipps	Warren
Borah	McLean	Smoot	Williams
Dillingham	Nelson	Swanson	Willis
France	New	Underwood
Frelinghuysen	Newberry	Wadsworth

NAYS—46.

Ashurst	Hale	McNary	Shortridge
Brandegee	Heflin	Nicholson	Simmons
Broussard	Hitchcock	Oddie	Smith
Bursum	Jones, Wash.	Pepper	Sterling
Capper	Kellogg	Pittman	Sutherland
Colt	Kendrick	Pomerene	Townsend
Cummins	La Follette	Ransdell	Trammell
Curtis	Lenroot	Rawson	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Lodge	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	McCormick	Reed, Pa.	Watson, Ind.
Gerry	McCumber	Robinson
Gooding	McKellar	Sheppard

NOT VOTING—32.

Calder	Fernald	Ladd	Page
Cameron	Glass	McKinley	Poindexter
Caraway	Harreld	Moses	Shields
Culberson	Harris	Myers	Spencer
du Pont	Harrison	Norbeck	Stanfield
Edge	Johnson	Norris	Stanley
Elkins	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Watson, Ga.
Ernst	King	Owen	Weller

So Mr. SMOOT's amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment to the pending bill which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland offers an amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to add a new title to the bill, to be known as Title X, as follows:

TITLE X.

The President of the United States is hereby authorized to create a board of 48 members, one from each of the States, all of the members of which board to be veterans of the World War, the said board to be known as the American World War education and hospital board, of which board the President of the United States shall be ex officio chairman. The members of this board to be appointed by the President, and this board shall be authorized to receive contributions, gifts, bequests, and assignments of interests in adjusted compensation payments from veterans of the World War for the establishment of educational and hospital institutions in the United States, and the said board shall be empowered to carry out all of the provisions of this act relative to the said board.

(a) Every veteran of the World War who shall be given or entitled to receive adjusted compensation, a cash bonus, or other form of bonus, under this or subsequent acts, shall be given the privilege and option of contributing such bonus or adjusted compensation to the American World War education and hospital board.

(b) Every soldier or veteran who shall exercise his privilege and option of contributing his adjusted compensation to this board shall be called a "donor," and shall be entitled to wear a special badge which shall be given to him with an expression of the gratitude of the country for his services in the World War and his generosity as a donor, these to be issued by the authority of the Congress of the United States, and his name shall be enrolled on a bronze tablet to be placed as a perpetual memorial in a conspicuous place in the administration building or buildings of the educational or hospital institutions established under the control of the said board in the State of the donor.

(c) The World War education and hospital board shall receive the principal of the funds donated or assigned to the said board and shall hold said principal and invest and reinvest the same, together with any unexpended increment therefrom, as a perpetual trust fund, and it shall pay over the net income thereof or therefrom for the establishment and maintenance in the several States of such educational and hospital institutions as shall in the judgment of the board be most desirable and useful for the free educational advantages for the citizens and residents of the States and for the more effective care in hospitals and sanatoria of the diseased and disabled veterans of the World War, in all of which institutions the veterans of the World War, their sons and daughters and direct descendants shall have the preference.

(d) The said board shall be authorized to determine as to the character of these institutions for the promotion of education and the public health, but wherever and whenever it shall seem advisable to do so the board shall in its discretion establish in each State institutions of learning where technical, industrial, as well as classical education shall be given free of charge to the students of the State wherein the institution or institutions are established.

(e) In the establishment of institutions by this board the State in which such institutions are to be located shall be invited to counsel with the board and to participate with the said board by the donation of ground upon which such institutions may be located, but the erection, equipment, and maintenance of these institutions shall be solely under the direction of the board. These institutions, however, may be established adjacent to or in connection with State universities already established. In the establishment of such institutions and in the distribution of funds, proper provisions shall be made for the education in suitable institutions of colored students on an equitable proportionate basis.

(f) In the allotment of the funds acquired by the board among the institutions to be established in the various States the institutions of any particular State shall receive a proportion of the total sum to be allotted by the board to all of the States which shall bear the same ratio to that total sum as the ratio of the number of enlisted men from that State to the total number of enlisted men in the Army of the United States during the World War.

(g) The American World War education and hospital board hereby created shall have the power to determine all matters of policy and to exercise all of the powers hereby and hereafter necessary to be conveyed in order that it may carry out fully the provisions of this trust hereby created and the purposes for which the said board has been formed.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I desire to say but a few words in explanation of this amendment. I believe that the veterans of the World War who are to receive adjusted compensation under this proposed act should be given the opportunity of donating the sums which shall be made available to them for the establishment of a great national memorial which will be of permanent value to the Republic and which will in its creation give them an opportunity again to express in a material way the love and devotion for their country which they exhibited when they offered to lay their lives upon the altar of their country's service.

I am persuaded that the men who made up the splendid Army of the Republic in the World War are not in any sense mercenary. I am persuaded that the vast majority of them, if given such an option as my amendment contemplates, and afforded the opportunity of contributing to such a perpetual memorial, would avail themselves of the opportunity. I understand that the total sum which will be made available under the pending bill approaches $3,000,000,000—three thousand millions of dollars—or about $60,000,000 for each State. It is very apparent that this is a sum perhaps in excess of the total now invested in our educational institutions. I have not checked up accurately to ascertain the sum so invested, but some years ago, in 1919, all of the public-school buildings in the United States were worth only approximately $950,000,000. It is very evident that, if the veterans of the World War should avail themselves of the option which this title if enacted into law would give them, they would be able to make a very great contribution to our educational system.

In my opinion, this is a cause which will greatly appeal to our ex-service men. As I go out among the veterans I find that they are not in any sense mercenary; that they are not particularly anxious to have the money for the money's sake, but they do feel that there should be some substantial recognition of their services. In view of what I know of the attitude of those men, I feel that if this option were provided for in the bill a very large sum of money would come to the board proposed to be created under this title which could be used for the permanent benefit of the Republic.

Mr. President, I do not care to speak at length upon this question. I have already on a previous occasion discussed the subject of the bonus and the attitude of our veterans toward it; but I am persuaded that the men who made up our armies constitute the noblest, the most patriotic, the most devoted band of men who ever went into the armies of any country, and I am further convinced that if given this opportunity they would offer a great demonstration by their gifts of their continued devotion to the country, of their desire once more to be of service to the Nation by each one contributing money to this great cause.

Men who will offer up their lives without a question in the cause of the preservation of the Republic are men who will, when placed in a position to do so, render any further service in their power to the Republic. They are men eager to place fragrant gracious gifts upon the altar of self-sacrifice; and I believe that if this title shall be added to the bill the people of the country will be surprised at the manner in which these soldiers who have been criticized because they have asked for a further recognition of their services will respond to the opportunity.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FRANCE. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator's proposal give the profiteers any opportunity to contribute to this benevolent fund?

Mr. FRANCE. Yes; they would have an opportunity, I believe, to contribute to the fund if they wished to do so; but personally I believe that legislative bodies, wherever they can—and I am not referring to the national legislative body—should see to it that all of those who are able to pay taxes should contribute more taxes to the general cause of education. I believe that in a general way, however, those who profiteered during the war at the expense of their fellow citizens are not the class upon whom we can call for generous donations of gifts. The man who profiteers during a period of war such as that through which we have been passing is not the man who will ordinarily make generous gifts to his country. That is entirely a different question; but I am saying that these men who did not profiteer, if given an opportunity to show once more by this gift their love and devotion to their country, will make the gift. I believe that. I believe it from what I know of the men, many of whom are my personal friends. I believe that it would be a wonderful demonstration, as I say, which they would give if offered this option under the bill.

These men, of course, were not profiteers during the war, nor are they profiteers now. I have explained to the Senate in a previous address my views as to how this agitation for the bonus began. It began first with the disabled and diseased men who were not being properly cared for.

The agitation was then taken up by those who were victims of the unhappy economic conditions which followed the close of the war—economic conditions which, I have said, were brought about through the failure of the Congress and of the other legislative bodies to deal with the great problems created by the war. I believe that now all of those who are not in real economic distress, and even some of those who would make this gift at great sacrifice to themselves, would be very glad to avail themselves of an opportunity to give a whole or a part of the compensation which they are to receive to their country and to the great cause of establishing these institutions at which they and their sons and daughters and direct descendants would receive special opportunities for education.

I do not wish to detain the Senate, but I should be very happy if I could have a yea-and-nay vote upon this question. I feel that all who do vote for this amendment will show their confidence in the men who made up our armies, and, moreover, their faith in the devotion of these men to any good cause which would be of permanent service to the Republic.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator's amendment, it does not affect any part of the bill, but simply adds this provision to it.

Mr. FRANCE. It simply adds this as an option. It simply provides that any veteran of the war can, if he pleases, contribute any compensation which he receives to this World War education and hospital board, so that it may be used for the establishment of institutions in the various States.

Even if one-half of all that is received is so donated, that would be approximately a billion and a half of dollars, which is a sum probably far in excess of the total value of the public-school facilities in the United States at present, and probably far in excess of the total endowments of all of the State universities, although, as I say, I have not compiled any figures upon that point.

I have always felt that there should be some recognition in the way of a permanent memorial for the great services which these men have rendered to the country. While I do not feel that the time is opportune for the Government to establish such a memorial, I do feel that if we pass this bill it should have this optional feature in it. All of the other options in this bill are options to get; but I believe, from what I know of our men, that an option to give would be the most popular option in the bill, and I should like to test it out before the country. I believe that some of the men of the country would find, to their astonishment, that a very large proportion of the men who were willing to go to war and offer up their lives, if need be, upon the altar of their country, are now willing, no matter what the profiteers do, to give, whatever their country may give them, to the great cause of making this a greater and a better country.

I hope the amendment will receive some serious consideration, and I hope the Senators will extend me the courtesy of a yea-and-nay vote upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], upon which the yeas and nays are asked for. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). Transferring my pair as to the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when Mr. OVERMAN's name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] if present would vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with regard to my pair, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CALDER. I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 3, nays 55, as follows:

YEAS—3.

France	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson

NAYS—55.

Ashurst	Hale	New	Smoot
Ball	Heflin	Newberry	Stanfield
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Oddie	Sterling
Cameron	Kellogg	Pepper	Sutherland
Capper	Kendrick	Pittman	Swanson
Colt	La Follette	Pomerene	Townsend
Cummins	Lenroot	Ransdell	Trammell
Curtis	Lodge	Rawson	Underwood
Dial	McCormick	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	McCumber	Robinson	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	McKellar	Sheppard	Watson, Ind.
Fletcher	McLean	Shortridge	Williams
Frelinghuysen	McNary	Simmons	Willis
Gerry	Myers	Smith

NOT VOTING—38.

Borah	Glass	McKinley	Reed, Mo.
Broussard	Gooding	Moses	Shields
Bursum	Harreld	Nelson	Spencer
Calder	Harris	Norbeck	Stanley
Caraway	Harrison	Norris	Wadsworth
Culberson	Johnson	Overman	Warren
du Pont	Jones, N. Mex.	Owen	Watson, Ga.
Elkins	Keyes	Page	Weller
Ernst	King	Phipps
Fernald	Ladd	Poindexter

So Mr. FRANCE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is ordered accordingly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. It was my intention, and still is my intention, to address the Senate on this bill; but I do not desire to enter upon that discussion at an hour which would be inconvenient to others. If there are others who desire to address themselves to the bill briefly, I will gladly waive my present right to do so. I say that in the hearing of those some of whom perhaps may desire to address the Senate briefly, not indicating that I shall unduly prolong my remarks.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has the bill been reported to the Senate yet?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California interrupted the Chair at the moment the bill was passing into the Senate. In view of that interruption, it will still be considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I hope this Nation may never incur and deserve the stigma and reproach which have all too often sullied the name of republics. I trust my country may never be justly charged with the unpardonable sin of ingratitude. Gratitude is the fairest flower that sheds its perfume in the heart of man or nation. The man who is not grateful for benefit received is lower than the beast of the field. The nation that is not grateful for sacrifices made in its behalf, for exposure to death in order that it may live, will not long retain, if it deserves, the love of its people or the respect of mankind. The nation that is not duly grateful to him who dies for it merits the scorn of earth and the contempt of heaven.

Not by my vote shall that hideous and hateful word "ingratitude" be stamped on the white and spotless brow of my country. Not by my vote shall my country fail in her duty to the dead or to the living soldiers and sailors of this Republic. And what, Mr. President, is the nature, the character, and the extent of that duty resting on this great and rich and independent Republic?

As in the days of Washington, as in the days of Jackson, as in the days of Lincoln, as in the days of McKinley, as in every day when the independence or life of this Nation was in peril, so in the late Great War the sons of America responded to their country's call in her hour of deadly danger and fought and died on land and sea for the flag of freedom.

Out of their loyal service, out of their heroic death, springs our duty, our stern duty, which is, and should be, considered sacred. Need I remind my countrymen of that duty?

Lord God of hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget.

What, then, is that sacred duty which should and must and shall be performed?

We owe a sacred duty to the dead. We owe them the tribute of our love and tears. Their names are enrolled in the historic archives of the Nation for which they gladly died and their example will be an inspiration to the sons of the Republic so long as patriotism abides in the American heart. Wheresoever it be, in unknown foreign grave or in ocean depths, they sleep in peace and honor, brave sons of America, faithful unto death.

We owe a sacred duty to many who mourn for the loved ones gone—helpless children, feeble mothers, it may be aged fathers, bereft of parents and sons. That duty must and shall be performed. It may cost us something, but what of that?

To the living soldiers and sailors we owe a duty no less sacred, a duty that must and shall be performed.

First, we owe the most sacred, the most solemn, the sad duty to those who returned wounded in body, sick in mind, wrecks of early strength and manhood. They must be lovingly watched over, tenderly cared for, nursed back to health and hope and happiness. No amount of money, wisely, sympathetically expended, must be spared in this work. Hospitals—modern, clean, and sufficient—vocational training adapted to the needs and inclination of the soldier; as to these matters and everything which is helpful to rehabilitate the son hurt in his country's cause we must expend whatever sums are required. There must be no inattention, no indifference, no slacking, no niggardliness. There must be vigilant and sleepless performance of this duty.

And the employee of the Government charged with the performance of this work who neglects his duty, whether he be high official or obscure workman, should be instantly dismissed and promptly shot.

These duties to the dead and their dependent survivors, to the living sick and wounded, we are performing and must continue to perform. Thus and thus only can we prove that we are worthy citizens of the Republic for which they spent their strength and shed their blood. We have expended $1,840,272,922.16 in this work and we must expend millions and billions more. Oh, the burden and the sorrow of war.

I can not believe there is an American citizen so miserly, so ungrateful, so base as to begrudge the money expended and to be expended in the carrying on of this needed and necessary service.

But, Mr. President, something more remains to be done for the soldiers and sailors of this Republic before we shall have performed our full duty to those who planted its flag on the heights of victory and eternal glory.

To those who fought the good fight and contributed to the righteous victory and providentially returned unhurt in body and mind but who suffered and suffer in loss of time and opportunity we owe a duty which we should promptly and gladly perform, and this duty we intend to perform by the enactment of this bill into law.

And, sir, in promptly and cheerfully performing that duty we honor ourselves no less than we recognize heroic and loyal service rendered.

THE WORLD WAR.

Pause for a moment, Mr. President, to recall the Great War. The earth trembled beneath the tread of mighty armies. The Old World, which should have been wiser, for wisdom accompanies age, was in arms. Statesmenship, so called, diplomacy, secret and sinister, had failed. Above fertile fields red with brothers' blood, above fragrant meadows wet with women's tears, above ruined cottages and palaces, profaned temple and cathedral, above but within hearing of the carnage and agony of war angels hovered and cried:

Peace on earth; good will toward men.

But the roar of cannon, the shriek of shell, drowned those heavenly voices, and death smote the young and fair, the old and feeble. The fields of Europe were furrowed by war's hot plowshare. The very structure of civilization, erected by the toil and genius of centuries, trembled and tottered to its fall. At first the danger to us was remote. We stood aloof and maintained a strict neutrality. But the danger came nearer, and finally we were engulfed. We called upon the manhood of the Nation. They—these young men to reward whom this bill is designed—responded to their country's call. They came from city and village, from factory and farm, from mine and forest, from all ranks and conditions of life, from every State in the Union. We sent them forth with our blessing and our prayers.

Many of them crossed the ocean; they fought; God, how they fought; through dangers and darkness, with undaunted courage and unsurpassed devotion to duty, under great leaders they carried on; they knew no such word as retreat or failure; they welcomed death if death could contribute to victory; they carried on and on until the radiant morning of victory again blessed the undefeated flag of our country. They returned home to the land they had defended. We welcomed them with outstretched arms; we strewed flowers in their way to tread upon; reverently we thanked God that he had led them through the "valley and shadow of death" and brought them in safety home.

Mr. President, we can not pay the debt we owe—the debt of gratitude, the debt of honor, the debt a mighty nation, saved by their valor, owes to its sons. But we can try to do so; we can in part discharge our obligation, and this we can do in manner contemplated by this bill without emptying our Treasury or impairing our credit.

Mr. President, I am conscious of the hour, and am aware that the measure has been elaborately discussed by many eloquent Senators who preceded me. I have heretofore trespassed little, if at all, upon the attention of the Senate in the consideration of the measure. I feel the least embarrassment in proceeding, but I overcome that and shall ask the indulgence of the Senate if I proceed to a brief analysis of the measure before us.

But before proceeding to such analysis of the bill, and the plan for meeting its cash and other requirements, let me pause to ask its opponents, be they here or elsewhere, whether there is such a thing as a moral obligation, and whether they recognize such a thing as a moral obligation resting on a nation. Whatever their reply may be—and some of them, not here but elsewhere, seem to sneer and scoff and ridicule at such a thing as a moral obligation—the Nation recognizes that it is morally, if not legally, obligated to do justice to its loyal citizens. We have advanced—given—to loyal citizens millions and millions of dollars when there was no legal obligation whatever. In some instances it was questionable, or at any rate questioned, whether there was any moral obligation at all. For example, finding itself in sore need of essential minerals, the Nation called upon its citizens to go forth and prospect for, discover, and produce chromè, tungsten, magnesite, and pyrites. Many citizens of the West responded to the call, animated by patriotism, and perhaps, in some instances, a desire for gain. There was no legal obligation on the Nation to reimburse them. The sudden termination of the war left many of them bankrupt, others with great material loss. I repeat there was no legal obligation on the Government to reimburse them for losses suffered, to compensate them for service rendered. But what did the Government do? We promptly appropriated $8,500,000 to relieve those citizens from financial embarrassment and loss. I take some pride in recalling that I had the honor to introduce, during the late extra session, the bill which ultimately became a law amending the former act, and making it possible for bona fide claimants to receive the amount of their net losses incurred in that enterprise of assisting the Government during the war.

We have given, Mr. President, and even now continue to give millions of dollars in the shape of bonuses to civilian employees, stenographers, clerks, and other employees of the Government. In 1918 we gave, in the shape of bonuses to those employees of the Government, over $11,000,000; in 1919, $16,000,000; in 1920, $87,000,000; in 1921, $70,000,000; and in 1922, $34,000,000. We have appropriated over $38,000,000 for the same purpose for the year 1923. In other words, in the shape of bonuses—call it what you will, gratuity, bonus, gift—we have appropriated and paid out, or will have paid out, $257,919,068 to the civil employees of the Government. The bonus or gift of $240 per year—$20 a month—has been given to each employee, though his or her salary mounts up to $2,500 per annum. I would have thoughtful Senators, and those elsewhere who complain, to remember the facts which I have thus called to their attention. This bonus of $240 a year given to civil employees, in many instances given to employees receiving as high as $2,500 a year, is far in excess in proportion of ratio of the bonus or gift or gratuity or adjusted compensation which we contemplate giving to the soldiers and the sailors of the Republic.

I shall not develop that argument further. Senators' own minds will carry it forward, but I here and now say that if it was justifiable, if it was proper, if it was just to give those bonuses to the civil employees who perhaps went no further in the performance of their duty than from the White House to the Capitol, is it not just to recognize those who went thousands of miles from their homeland exposing life in the defense of their country?

Now let me invite attention to something else we have done. We have recognized an equitable right of citizens to reimbursement where they have suffered losses by reason of the sudden termination of contracts. We have not paused curiously to consider technical, legal rights. We have recognized broad, generous, equitable principles and rights.

I heard no sound of protest coming up from the feeble-minded editors of some of our cities, I heard no protest or whining from certain quarters who now seem to be appalled at the proposition involved in the pending bill, when we, great, generous, rich Nation, thus recognized that there is such a thing as an equitable right, an equitable principle, to be recognized by a nation as well as by civilized man.

Again, Mr. President, we have held ourselves obligated to restore to their owners the railroads taken control of by the Government as a war measure and to reimburse the owners for losses suffered and to guarantee a fixed net income for long periods. In this behalf we have given over three-quarters of a billion dollars. Just right, men say; no complaint, it being regarded not only in this instance as the recognition of the Constitution and principles there engrafted, but also a carrying out of the express or the implied promise of this Nation.

Again, Mr. President, we have felt ourselves bound to relieve the sick and feed the hungry of foreign lands and to assist the feeble governments. In so doing we have advanced or given vast sums which will never be repaid. Why did we do it? What impulse moved us? Is there anyone who criticizes it? Is there anyone who is sorry or regretful that we have done this thing? We did honor to ourselves and added new and greater glory to our own great reputation for righteousness and for a merciful disposition toward the suffering of humanity.

Mr. President, as a Nation, as the parens patriæ, we have on numberless occasions gone to the relief of our own people who have been overwhelmed by fire or flood.

And here and now, Mr. President, I wish to thank this Nation for its generous aid so promptly given to stricken San Francisco in the hour of her appalling disaster. Risen from her ashes, she stands again in majestic beauty, there by the Golden Gate, a living witness, a grateful witness, to the fact that this Nation never fails to respond to those finer sentiments and unselfish emotions that dignify an ennoble the human race.

In many of these cases, I repeat, there was no technical legal obligation resting on the Government, but we felt and recognized a moral obligation and we discharged that moral obligation. Now I ask Senators—and my question may go out to the country—what was the obligation in any of those cases compared with the obligation we are under to the loyal soldiers and sailors of the Republic? I am not criticizing, I am not censuring anything that has been done, but I am reminding and calling upon this Nation to remember.

Mr. President, I take great pride as a humble citizen of this Republic in believing that we are a just and righteous Nation and that our benefactions have sprung out of a sense of duty toward those who served and suffered. If ever a moral obligation rested on a nation to reimburse its sons for losses suffered or to partially compensate them for invaluable services rendered, that obligation rests on this Republic. Now, let us honor ourselves by recognizing and discharging that obligation. Let us not be shamed in the face of the world by failing to do in like manner what other and less great, less rich, less powerful nations have long since done and are now doing. Contemplate what other nations have done and consider their resources and their burdens as compared with our own.

Great Britain, Canada, New Zealand, Australia, France, Belgium, each has given more to her soldiers, in proportion to resources and liabilities, than we propose to devote to our soldiers by this bill. The victor nations have deemed it wise and just to reward their victorious soldiers; but what of the vanquished? Germany, defeated, revolutionized, borne down by enormous debt, her overseas colonies and possessions gone, her once great merchant marine lost, stripped of productive territory—even Germany, staggering under the colossal burden she bears, has, in some measure, done the same thing toward her soldiers and sailors. Here, Mr. President, I ask that a tabulated statement showing what other nations have done in this regard may appear in the RECORD as part and parcel of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

PAYMENTS SINCE THE WAR BY FOREIGN COUNTRIES TO THEIR VETERANS.

The following tables show the payments made by foreign countries to their veterans since the war:

Foreign bonus payments to enlisted men of World War.

Country.	Base of bonus, maximum rate.	Maximum possible.	Probable average.	Total cost.
Great Britain.	£5 plus 10s. per month's service in excess of one year; maximum 48 months.	£29 ($101.50)..	.....	£78,831,556 ($275,910,446) to men and officers.
Canada.....	Pay and allowances they would have received if not demobilized, for from 1 to 6 months, depending on service.	$600 ($540)....	.....	$164,000,000 ($147,600,000).
Australia.....	1s. 6d. per day of service.	£117 ($409.50).	£83½.....	£30,000,000 ($105,000,000); mostly paid in 5½ per cent bonds, maturing May 31, 1924.
New Zealand.	Same as Australia.	£117 ($409.50).	£58½.....	£5,225,900($18,290,650) to May 20, 1920.
France.....	250 francs plus 20 francs per month for services at front, between Aug. 2, 1914, and Nov. 11, 1918.	1,270 francs ($95.25).	.....	4,964,948,670 francs ($372,371,150); payable in monthly installments of 100 francs.
Belgium.....	75 francs per month for services at front, Aug. 1, 1914, to Nov. 11, 1918, less family allowance.	3,825 francs (less family allowance) ($287).	.....	141,230,000 francs ($10,592,250); in budget for 1921.
Germany.....	.....	65 marks($0.97)	65 marks..

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, am I now to be told that this mightiest Republic, this richest Nation on earth, can not, without going into bankruptcy, meet and discharge the requirements of this bill? With due respect for others—some of whom, not all, are in subordinate executive places, and whose duties are executive rather than legislative—I submit that the showing which has been made here demonstrates that without embarrassment, without appreciable extra burden, this Republic can finance this bill; but I hasten to add that if it did cause a little embarrassment, or if it did cause a little extra burden by way of taxation, we should favor the measure.

Let me direct your attention, Mr. President, to a contrast which I think should be borne in mind when we are considering this proposed legislation. Compare the pay of the soldier with the pay of the man who remained at home. Let us be frank; let us be truthful. The soldier's pay was little; the many who remained at home—willing to go, it may be, but who were assigned to the essential industries—received large wages, increased from time to time. Just pause to contrast the wages—if we are to lower this argument and put it upon a mercenary monetary basis—of those remaining at home and the wage, if you choose to so call it, paid to the soldier or the sailor. Of course, those who were thus engaged in home essential industries rendered service to their country, and I am not now saying that they did not render good service; but I do not wish it to be forgotten that whereas the boy from California, from my own beautiful Menlo Park, who went yonder to fight and expose his life on the battle fields of France, received a pittance, there were others engaged in certain industries who received almost as much per day as the soldier in France received per month.

Then there was another class which we should bear in mind, and who should never be forgotten, and that is the pale-faced, pigeon-livered cowards, the slackers of this country, who evaded service when their country called. By subterfuge, by lies, by trickery, by all sorts of evasions they avoided service; and doubtless having by such means evaded service, they engaged in industry and earned much money compared to the soldier.

There was another class who remained in this country—the conscientious objector. Perhaps I tread upon dangerous ground or may offend some who think radically otherwise than I do, but I never have come to understand the condition of that man's heart or patriotism who had a conscientious objection to fighting for his country when its life was in peril; and I am very sure that there is not a God in heaven who will frown upon or punish any man who fights and dies for this blessed Republic of Washington and Lincoln; and yet there were many of these conscientious objectors who avoided the service rendered by the soldiers and sailors whom we contemplate assisting through this proposed legislation.

Then there was another type of recreant Americans, cowards all, in heart traitors all, who evaded the just and necessary selective draft act; and let us be frank and let us be truthful. Right in the Capital of the Nation there were many who were running hither and yonder and using all their little political influence to be assigned to essential-industry work, and in many instances succeeded, thereby avoiding going to war; and here they sat on their chairs looking at the clock for the hour to stop work, and I dare say they received more in one month than five or six or seven, perhaps eight, brave soldiers received, crossing the treacherous ocean, death above and death below, fighting and exposing their lives in the forefront of battle. Having by subterfuge and cunning and small, little political influence succeeded in avoiding the draft, we have given them a bonus amounting, as I have stated, to many, many millions of dollars, and they are still getting the bonus; and do I hear any complaining?

Then there were the criminals who robbed their country in its hour of mortal combat—the contractors, the high-toned thieves who took advantage of the occasion and of the opportunity to graft upon their country—their country, whose laws, from the Constitution down to the municipal ordinance, protect them in their property. There were the rich contractors or the poor and designing criminal contractors made rich by grafting upon their Government.

I name no names, but the current history of this country and the court records of this country reveal their names; and I venture to say that every one of them, without exception, is objecting to the passage of this law, or the giving of any reward in the shape of compensation, to be by this law adjusted, to the soldiers and the sailors of the Republic. Doubtless there were others here of different type of unworthiness, earning money, profiteering, taking advantage of the situation, whilst our brave sons were "over yonder" or in camp preparing to go wherever duty called them.

It must be borne in mind that those who volunteered, as well as those who entered the service through the law, in most instances left remunerative employment. From my own State of California there went into the service 135,205 young men. I think I am warranted in saying that practically every one of those young men was engaged in profitable, remunerative employment, steady employment; for the record shows that they were capable young men, sober young men, and in every way fit young men to render their country service, as they had been rendering their several employers service. Many of them, it is true, were themselves employers, well to do, employing others; but, speaking generally, they were all employed, and they left their positions to enter the service. What I say of California was, of course, true of Oregon, of Washington, of Idaho, of Colorado, of Ohio, of Massachusetts, of all the States in the Union; and I would have opponents of this measure bear that in mind when discussing this bill and proposing to adjust the compensation of the soldier and the sailor.

There is another view of this bill which I desire to present to the Senate. Stated briefly, it is this:

We drafted men and we drafted property. How have we dealt with the property we drafted? We have returned or proposed to return it unimpaired, so that the owners shall not suffer the loss of money. We drafted men, and they have returned. If it is right, if it is just and equitable, to return property drafted unimpaired in value and reimburse the owner thereof for any loss suffered, why is it not just and right and proper to reimburse the man so that he shall not have suffered materially? If just in the one case, it is just in the other; and yet I ever and again refuse to place my support of this bill upon the purely monetary or mercenary ground; but if I am driven to that argument or asked to stand upon that ground, then once more and again I propound the question to gentlemen: If it is just and right to restore, without loss to the owner, property which was taken, drafted as a war necessity, why is it not likewise just and proper to restore the man without loss? He lost employment permanently, and he lost current income. The soldier lost his position. He lost wages. He lost opportunity. He lost his position, and in hundreds and thousands of cases the positions were lost for all time. He returned, indeed, to find his occupation gone.

Oh, how well do I remember that it was said and published that the positions would be kept open for the returning soldiers! I heard many eloquent speeches on that subject during those days. How many were kept open? Therefore there are hundreds and thousands of young men who either volunteered or who entered through the law into the service of the country who lost their positions and lost opportunity for advancement in life. I have them in mind, if others forget them. I remember them, if others close the door upon them.

Mr. President, how shall we meet the requirements of this bill? I had intended to discuss the bill somewhat in detail. I content myself now by merely propounding the question and calling upon others to answer it: What are the demands which we can not meet? What are we called upon to do? No Senator who has thus far spoken has successfully answered or refuted the masterly address of the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. No one has set before him the task of undertaking to answer it. There it is in the record. There is a logical, a clear analysis of this measure, and there is a clear and unrefuted statement as to how the demands upon us can be met. Let those who oppose this bill answer the Senator from North Dakota—grand, upstanding American patriot—who has stood here for nearly a quarter of a century representing his own great State, but also representing and loving this greater Republic.

Let the newspapers elsewhere, which are trying to blot or mar his national fame, answer this great American patriot. Let them undertake, even, to answer the statement which he made here, without passion, without invective, without any attempt at display, without vituperation or declamation; let these editors, whether they be walking the Champs Elysee or luxuriating in New York, answer this great American Senator before they bawl their inane sentiments out before the American people, attempting not only to discredit this measure but to discredit this patriotic citizen.

I would be but traveling over ground thoroughly covered if I undertook to analyze this measure as I had intended to do. I content myself by asking Senators to bear in mind that great and logical speech; that analysis of this bill, made, not in hostility to anyone who differed from him, but answering the objections which have here been advanced, and which perhaps have come from other quarters.

Read the report of the committee accompanying this bill. Has any one set about to answer the statements therein contained? I respectfully challenge any honored Senator who is opposed to this measure to make answer to the argument of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] or to the facts set out in the report accompanying this bill.

Mr. President, it is said that the eye of childhood fears a painted devil; but are we so timid, are we so weak and afraid of the future, as to look upon the demands of this bill with terror? We can easily pay, we can easily meet every requirement of this bill when it is intelligently administered, and we may well assume that it will be intelligently and properly administered.

Ah, but I am told, and some gentlemen remind me, that the Treasury is empty, and that our credit may be impaired to the injury of the stock market. I recognize that we owe some twenty-odd billion dollars. Uncle Sam has never yet repudiated, he never will repudiate, a legal or a moral obligation; but when we talk of liabilities and outstanding obligations, we should consider our resources, our ability to meet the demands upon us.

Among our assets are the legal obligations due us, the debts due us from foreign nations. I have heretofore expressed my views in regard to those debts and those obligations. In order that what I may say will be justified, I ask that there appear as a part of my remarks the latest statement issued by the Treasury Department showing the amounts due us severally by or from these foreign nations.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Statement showing obligations of foreign Governments held by the United States (including those held by the United States Grain Corporation), interest accrued and unpaid thereon up to and including the last interest period, and interest heretofore paid.

Country.	Principal amount of obligations.	Interest accrued and unpaid up to and including the last interest period.	Total indebtedness.	Interest heretofore paid.
Armenia	$11,959,917.49	$1,677,255.88	$13,637,174.37	.....
Austria	24,055,708.92	2,165,013.81	26,220,722.73	.....
Belgium	377,123,745.94	51,391,987.94	428,515,733.88	$14,609,052.01
Cuba	7,740,500.00	.....	7,740,500.00	1,859,733.14
Czechoslovakia	91,887,668.65	12,797,876.74	104,685,545.39	304,178.09
Esthonia	13,999,145.60	2,089,625.66	16,088,771.26	.....
Finland	8,281,926.17	1,012,436.10	9,294,362.27	.....
France	3,340,857,593.20	430,049,062.65	3,770,906,655.85	170,304,490.63
Great Britain	[1] 4,135,818,358.44	611,044,201.85	4,746,862,560.29	230,132,185.50
Greece	15,000,000.00	375,000.00	15,375,000.00	1,159,153.34
Hungary	1,685,835.61	202,300.28	1,888,135.89	.....
Italy	1,648,034,050.90	243,480,583.37	1,891,514,634.27	57,598,852.62
Latvia	5,132,287.14	643,576.87	5,775,864.01	126,266.19
Liberia	26,000.00	2,868.85	28,868.85	861.10
Lithuania	4,981,628.03	747,244.20	5,728,872.23	.....
Nicaragua	170,585.35	.....	170,585.35	.....
Poland	135,662,867.80	17,380,785.13	153,043,652.93	1,290,620.78
Rumania	36,128,494.94	5,283,958.85	41,412,453.79	283,313.74
Russia	192,601,297.37	35,019,427.03	227,620,724.40	7,717,333.43
Serbia	51,104,595.58	7,336,455.81	58,441,051.39	636,059.14
Total	10,102,252,207.13	1,422,699,662.02	11,524,951,869.15	506,002,109.71

[1] Includes $61,000,000 of British obligations which were given for Pittman silver advances and for which an agreement for payment has been made.

Cuba pays interest as it becomes due.

No interest due on Nicaraguan notes until maturity, as is also the case with certain Belgian obligations aggregating $2,284,151.40.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, this was furnished me yesterday from the Treasury Department. I hope Senators will indulge me a moment while I invite their attention to some of these countries and the amount they severally owe the United States of America.

Let it be understood that there is no question as to the amount due us. There is no question as to the validity of our claims. There has been no question raised as to how or under what circumstances the money was loaned or advanced to these several nations. Thus Armenia owes us, speaking in round numbers, $12,000,000. Of course, Armenia is crushed and bleeding, and may scarcely be regarded as an independent or self-acting nation. The Turks are still crushing her; but Armenia owes us $12,000,000.

Austria owes us $24,000,000. Belgium owes us $377,000,000. Have we not done something for Belgium? Cuba owes us practically $8,000,000. Czechoslovakia owes us, in round figures, $92,000,000. Esthonia owes us $14,000,000. Finland owes us $8,000,000. Hungary owes us $1,700,000. Latvia owes us $5,000,000. Liberia owes us $26,000. Right here and now permit me to say that I favor canceling that debt of Liberia to us. Let us forgive Liberia. Nicaragua owes us $170,000. Poland owes us $135,000,000. Rumania owes us $36,000,000. Russia owes us $192,000,000. Serbia owes us $51,000,000.

France—we did not forget Lafayette; I sometimes fear, however, that France forgets Uncle Sam—France owes us $3,341,000,000 in principal.

England, mighty England—Great Britain—with her mighty capital, her mighty colonies, her far-extended dominions, owes us $4,136,000,000.

The total of these principal sums is $10,102,252,207.13. There is due us as interest $1,422,699,662.02. There is a total indebtedness, admitted, unquestioned, of these foreign nations due us of $11,524,951,869.15. Eleven and a half billion dollars are due us from these several nations.

We advanced that colossal sum of money to help the struggling nations of Europe. In order to do so we had to borrow that money. We had to go out to our own people and borrow. We gave our own promissory notes, our own bonds, to our own people for this money, to lend to the foreign countries. We did not seek to make money by the proceeding, nor do we ask them to pay us any more than we are required to pay our own creditors. We are obligated to pay certain sums in principal and certain sums in interest, and we propose to discharge those obligations. What I have said for many, many months, Mr. President, and what I here take the liberty of repeating, is that these foreign nations should be called upon to set about, and be called upon speedily to set about, paying us the interest due and thereafter and in manner agreed upon the principal sums due this Nation.

We have passed a law providing that each of these nations may pay us the principal in their bonds. We are not hard-hearted or cruel or mercenary. We give them time, we offer them opportunity, and the bill which we passed authorizes the commission which we set up to accept the bonds of those nations running up to 1943; we give them until that time within which to pay the principal due us now.

I feel kindly disposed toward the nations named. In my heart, sir, in my mind, I still feel grateful for what Russia did for this Republic in other days, and what she did in the early stages of the world's Great War. So I feel not unkindly toward the Russian people, and the nation of Russia. She owes us $192,000,000. I hasten to say that I have no firm faith, perhaps no faith at all, that those now in control of the Russian Government will recognize this debt or pay this money, and perhaps I should qualify an earlier statement by excluding Russia when I said that all these nations recognized the amounts due.

The Russian nation which contracted the debt recognizes the amount due. But all the other nations can not complain of the Senate of the United States or of our commissioners or of this Nation when we insist upon the payment of this money. I say this without passion, certainly without animosity, without any hostile feeling, for I want to have this country be at peace with all the nations of the earth. Nor am I at this moment called upon to give my advice to those nations; but when they ask for time or if they shall hedge or seek to postpone indefinitely the payment, I shall have the right to give them my advice or tell them what I think they should do concerning their own internal domestic affairs.

I have thus dwelt upon these foreign loans, Mr. President, in order that the executive department of this Government may likewise think of this great asset which is ample in and of itself to meet every requirement of the adjusted compensation bill.

I read in this morning's paper that the premier of Great Britain said that Great Britain does not contemplate delay in the payment of the interest due, that she does not contemplate for one moment a nonpayment of the principal due. There spoke a great English statesman, who thinks of England, who dreams of England, sleepless, vigilant, ever on guard for England and for England alone. It is because England has had such statesmen from the Earl of Chatham and his gifted genius son, the younger Pitt, on down through Gladstone, Disraeli, to the great Lloyd-George—it is because England has bred great statesmen who were willing to sink the world if England might float—it is because she has bred statesmen who have thought of England first and last and all the time, that England as a Government is great and powerful on this earth.

When I hear, not in this Chamber but elsewhere, men prate of internationalism and shed their insipid tears over the sorrows of other lands, forgetting the problems of their own, I could wish that they would preach another doctrine, for, Mr. President, what this Nation needs is men, upstanding men, in legislative and executive place, who will be as faithful and as vigilant and as unsleeping in the consideration of the affairs of this Republic as the soldiers and sailors were in fighting for its flag.

I am a nationalist. I believe in this Nation. I do not forget what St. Paul said in his immortal sermon on Mars Hill. If there ever was an ambassador of God on earth, it was the eloquent Saul of Tarsus. It is very true that he said God had made of one blood all races of men, but he added, "He hath set bounds to their habitations." I have always thought that he contemplated by that sentence the division of the earth into different races of different peoples. Whether that great man so desired to be understood or not, the fact is that there are nations on this earth, and we are citizens of one of those nations, and while we do not conspire or meditate against any nation on earth, while we wish every nation happiness and peace, while we will go far toward relieving every nation on earth from hunger or sickness, while we love mankind, as a Nation and as representatives of a Nation we should think first of our own problems and seek by fair, legitimate, honorable means to advance the interests of our own country.

I have no hostility of feeling toward the classic land of France. I speak in a poor way the language which Shakespeare spoke. I remember what contributions they have made to liberty and to constitutional governments. But I want France and I want Great Britain to pay us what they justly owe. If it be necessary for them to cut down their mighty armies or to reduce their mighty navies, if it be necessary for them to practice a greater economy, let them do it. I am thinking primarily of my country, though not at all in hostility to others.

Once more, and finally to take leave of these facts, I know of no reason in the world why, with the assets of $11,000,000,000 due us from these nations, some of which are able to pay, we can not easily, without any embarrassment, without any impairment of our credit, without any panic on Wall Street or Main Street, pay all that is called for under the pending soldiers' adjusted compensation bill. I do not claim to be a great financier. I own no bank, unless it be a bank of roses. I am not much at figuring, nor was Macaulay. But the time has come to speak a little plainly. The Secretary of the Treasury is not the law-making power of this Republic. It might be well to have that fact apprehended. Certain of his assistants are not the greatest statesmen that America has bred. That is one of the executive branches of the Government. I question the propriety of attempting to argue away facts which can not be argued away.

Respectfully, but quite unafraid, I suggest that the report of the committee accompanying the pending bill and the address of the great Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], made in its behalf, be given consideration by any or all Secretaries. With the same degree of respect for them as for all here or elsewhere, I once more say that they can not refute the statements made or the conclusion reached by the Senator named.

It was on November 7 of last year, Mr. President, that this matter came before the Senate by way of a proposed amendment to another bill then pending. I would gladly recall what I took the liberty of then saying, but it is to be found in the record of that day. I then said that I agreed with the statement made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that as of that time there was $1,000,000,000 due us from European nations, and if I had been running this Government I would as of then, if not long before, have politely, but very, if necessary, emphatically, called upon England and other of those nations to remit the amount due, or a substantial amount on account. But as of then there was a billion dollars due us in interest and as of now, Mr. President, there is, in round figures, $1,423,000,000 due us in interest. From Great Britain there is due us $611,000,000; from Italy there is due us $243,000,000; from France there is due us $430,000,000 in interest, making a total of approximately $1,500,000,000 from those nations. Let them pay.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAMERON in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. HEFLIN. That amount of money, if we could collect it now, would pay to 4,000,000 men adjusted compensation in cash of a little more than $350 each.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes.

Mr. President, there are one or two other thoughts to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate. I listened with respect and close attention to the remarks, brief though clearly stated, by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], and I recall that he put the question, What, if any, good the cash payment or the other optional provisions in this bill would do the soldiers? It would do them a great deal of good in ways heretofore and by nearly every Senator clearly pointed out. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], in the course of a thoughtful and I am sure a very sincere address, spoke of the cost of the Civil War in the way of pensions. My recollection is that he said the first appropriation for pensions amounted to some $15,000,000, and that now it was some $315,000,000. Be it so. Does anyone begrudge that money? Does anyone think that what was achieved was not worth the sacrifice?

There is another thought, Mr. President, which I have noted and expressed again and yet again, that this was a "cheapening of patriotism"; that patriotism was not for sale and could not be purchased.

No, Mr. President. To dismiss that suggestion, there is no dishonor in our giving, if it be a gift, and there is no dishonor in accepting, even though it be a gift. If I love my son, I give to him; nor am I dishonored, nor is he; and if this Nation as the parent loves its sons and chooses to give to them, so much more the honor, so much more the glory of giver and of gift. Let us exalt patriotism by a very great national act. Let us, by showing our great love, teach our children to love, and serve, and suffer, and die for the flag, hallowed and sanctified by the blood of unnumbered dead and living soldiers, heroes who lifted and kept it where it is triumphant in the sky.

Let us not longer hesitate; let us not longer delay; let us not longer miserly consider; but let us, as becomes a great and prosperous and righteous and grateful Nation, recognize the incalculable service rendered to this Nation by its soldiers and its sailors. Let us pass this bill, Mr. President, before to-morrow's sun shall set, and be well assured that the people of this Nation will approve our act.

Mr. President, this is not a political bill; it is not a partisan measure. I am not speaking as a Republican; but, above all party distinctions and party faith, I am standing here as an American and an American Senator. The boys of California, did they go as Republicans or as Democrats? The boys of Alabama, did they go as Democrats or Republicans? No, Mr. President, even as the mothers and the fathers, regardless of party, gave, so the boys, the young men, Americans all, patriots all, served their country as Americans; they returned as Americans; they stand as Americans, and this measure is designed to recognize and in part reward the glorious service rendered by them as Americans. Let us pass this bill as a great American measure, recognizing American valor, recognizing American heroism, and we shall have done our duty, and our country and history will applaud.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further amendment to be proposed the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The READING CLERK. A bill to provide adjusted compensation——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to make a privileged motion.

MINING OF COAL AND OTHER MINERALS ON PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. KENDRICK. From the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3794) to amend section 35 of an act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain, and I submit a report (No. 897) thereon.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 35 of the act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," approved February 25, 1920, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 35. That 10 per cent of all money received from sales, bonuses, royalties, and rentals under the provisions of this act, excepting those from Alaska, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and credited to miscellaneous receipts; for past production 70 per cent, and for future production 52½ per cent, of the amounts derived from such bonuses, royalties, and rentals shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress known as the reclamation act, approved June 17, 1902, and for past production 20 per cent, and for future production 37½ per cent, of the amounts derived from such bonuses, royalties, and rentals shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of each quarter of the fiscal year to the State within the boundaries of which the leased lands or deposits are or were located, said moneys to be used by such State or subdivisions thereof for the construction and maintenance of public roads or for the support of public schools or other public educational institutions as the legislature of the State may direct: Provided, That all moneys which may accrue to the United States under the provisions of this act from lands within the naval petroleum reserves shall be deposited in the Treasury as "Miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I may say briefly, in explanation of the bill, that the so-called natural resources law provides for the payment to the States in which the resources are located of 37½ per cent of the royalties, such royalties to be paid at the end of each fiscal year. The bill reported by me proposes to amend the original act so as to provide in effect that the royalties shall be paid quarterly instead of annually.

Mr. SMOOT. Was the bill reported from the Public Lands Committee this morning?

Mr. KENDRICK. I have just reported it from that committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I see no objection to the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALT RIVER RECLAMATION PROJECT—CONFERNCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 245).

Mr. MCNARY submitted the following report, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10248) authorizing the sale of surplus power developed under the Salt River reclamation project, Arizona, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and from its amendment to the title of the bill.

CHAS. L. MCNARY,
W. L. JONES,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
CARL HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, August 31, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate August 30 (legislative day of August 25), 1922.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

TO BE SURGEONS.

Clarence H. Waring.
George A. Wheeler.

TO BE ASSISTANT SURGEONS.

Guy H. Faget.
William Y. Hollingsworth.
Henry A. Rasmussen.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

George Francis Cooper to be captain, Medical Corps.

George Foreman Rixey to be chaplain, with the rank of captain.

Russell Lowell Williamson to be first lieutenant, Air Service.

John Lamont Davidson to be first lieutenant, Air Service.

Paschal Neilson Strong, jr., to be second lieutenant, Corps of Engineers.

Gilbert Hayden to be second lieutenant, Signal Corps.

Richard Wilson Johnson to be second lieutenant, Coast Artillery Corps.

Frederick William Hein to be second lieutenant, Coast Artillery Corps.

William Beck Goddard, 3d, to be second lieutenant, Air Service.

Karl Hartman Gorman to be major, Air Service.

James Edmund Parker to be first lieutenant, Air Service.

POSTMASTERS.

CALIFORNIA.

Alfred A. True, Barstow.
Charles A. French, Brentwood.
Martha Holway, Byron.
Don C. Saunders, Lompoc.
James B. Rickard, Santa Barbara.
Wooster B. Cartmill, Tulare.

GEORGIA.

Herbert J. Knowles, Cuthbert.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Albert Holway, Bournedale.

MINNESOTA.

Nettie Layng, Bruno.
Bertha Finch, Butterfield.
Jennie L. Phillipps, Clear Water.
Nels E. Nelson, Fergus Falls.
Carl J. Johnson, Hendricks.
William H. Wright, Montrose.
Edwin W. Bergman, McGrath.
Chapin A. Farnham, Rockford.
Claire M. Peterson, Stanchfield.
Charles Olson, Sturgeon Lake.
Maggie N. Halgren, Wahkon.
Emory B. Linsley, Willow River.

MISSOURI.

William F. Clardy, Ethel.
William H. Yarnall, Exeter.

FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY
NEW CASTLE, PA.

NEBRASKA.

Minnie C. Burch, Bellwood.

NEW YORK.

LeRoy Krom, High Falls.
Mildred H. Smith, Lawrence.
John K. Lathrop, Minnewaska.
Scott E. Gage, Morris.
Henry W. Koster, Narrowsburg.
Edmund E. Westerman, Pittsford.
Thomas L. Wright, Schoharie.
Fred Tears, Starlake.
Adolph Frees, Thornwood.

PENNSYLVANIA.

James S. Crawford, Freeland.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Floyd V. Stephens, Canova.
Philip S. Feldmeyer, Garden City.

VIRGINIA.

Denton T. Watthall, Alberta.
Abram K. Sampson, Burkeville.
Rankin L. Hervey, Chase City.
Susie F. Jarratt, Jarratt.
Robert M. Bradshaw, Rice.

WASHINGTON.

Adam G. Cook, McKenna.

WYOMING.

Hedwig C. Hurtt, Sundance.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, August 30, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou hast not forgotten us, our heavenly Father, and may we be prompted to gratitude, penitence, and faith. Thou dost supply us with the countless blessings that lead us to forget the pain and disappointments of life. Always encourage us in a quiet perseverance in being good, in getting good, and in doing good. Everywhere direct the citizens of our Republic, and may they know that true national prosperity and happiness spring out of nation-wide justice, cooperation, and industry. O may these virtues be given heroic pressure by the patriotic sons and daughters of our land. Give wisdom, understanding, and discretion to this assembly. Reveal and make plain unto us that nothing avails so much in our national existence as the simple verities that overflowed the teachings of the Man of Galilee. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE RESIGNATIONS AND ELECTIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communications:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 29, 1922.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I respectfully resign my chairmanship of the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Very truly yours,

ADDISON T. SMITH.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 29, 1922.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee of the House, the same to take effect immediately.

Sincerely,

RICHARD E. BIRD.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 419.

Resolved, That ADDISON T. SMITH, Member of Congress from Idaho, be, and he is hereby, elected chairman of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, and that RICHARD E. BIRD, a Member of Congress from Kansas, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

FEDERAL FUEL DISTRIBUTOR.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a federal fuel distributer, providing for the declaration of car service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12472, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I trust that no one who does me the honor to listen will gain the impression from anything that I may say that I do not realize the very serious situation with which we are now confronted. In my opinion, I am bold to assert here that I believe that at this time we stand in the most tragic hour of our country's history when it has not been engaged in war. We stand to-day in the backwash of the greatest war in our history, when hopes, aspirations, and ambitions were thwarted, and when the currents of lives were turned. We are nearly four years from the armistice, and yet we are living in the day of hysteria. We are to-day legislating with a recklessness that would only be justified by the supremest emergency that could come to any country, and that is when it is at war.

I shall not support this bill. I have, therefore, intruded myself upon your patience in order that I might state some of the reasons why. This legislation is based, its proponents say, solely upon a great emergency. They admit that if this emergency were not great they would not perhaps support the legislation. Many men appeared before the committee in the five short hours we had for hearing and testified as to this bill. Their testimony was remarkable in many ways. Some of the proponents of the bill tried in the committee to get some of the capable witnesses to agree that some part of this emergency rests upon the proposition that the Government of the United States would not have coal if the legislation were not passed, and these extreme and extraordinary powers were not granted. The expert witness whom the proponents of the bill brought before the committee was Mr. Aitchison, of the Interstate Commerce Commission. In answer to a direct question Mr. Aitchison said that every department of this Government was now supplied with coal and would be supplied with coal even though no legislation of this sort was passed. Therefore we can not base this legislation upon an emergency that the Government itself will not function if it is not passed.

I do not know what is coming next, my friends. A few days ago in committee the leaders of legislation looking in this direction asserted with some show of confidence that the resolution that we had the other day to appoint a fact-finding commission would be the only legislation that we would be called upon to enact. We had hardly enacted that bill until this legislation, conferring the most unheard-of powers upon any executive in the Government, came along. Then it was stated that an interview which was given from the steps of the White House by a distinguished member of another body was unjustified, and that nothing would come from the White House in the way of recommendation to take over and operate the coal mines and the railroads. Yet only yesterday there comes a statement purporting to be from the fountainhead, from the White House, that says that before we adjourn, with no war clouds upon the horizon, with nothing threatening the country, the President of the United States is going to ask the Congress of the United States to give him the power, if in his discretion he desires to use it, of taking over and operating coal mines and any or all of the railroads. I speak only for myself to-day. I speak as an individual Member of this House, and I want to say it matters not with me what interviews may be published in the Washington Post, which is the organ of this administration, from men who have in the past been high in the councils of the Democratic Party, who have been nominated to be its standard bearer in the past—I want to say as one member of the party, even in this moment of hysteria, in this moment when men have forgotten the doctrines of the past and the fundamentals upon which this Government was founded, I do not expect to be swept off my feet even at their suggestion and pushed into a mass of socialistic legislation which I believe will destroy this representative Government in the future. [Applause.]

This measure gives the widest powers, I assert without fear of successful contradiction, to any commission or executive ever proposed by any enactment of Congress during peace times in the history of this Republic. I know that people need coal. I know that the trouble with us now is that the mines have not been in operation, that there is not a sufficient amount of coal. Will this bill produce one pound of coal? No man who advocates it has said that he even dreams that it will, but I make the assertion here that instead of being a measure captioned to supply coal to the people of the United States it would better caption a measure to restrict the production and supply of coal in the United States. [Applause.]

Under the provisions of the bill there is not a line that will encourage the production of coal, but every line in the measure from beginning to end is one to discourage the production of coal. You put it within the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission it is said, but it is not within the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission at all. You are putting this power into the hands of this one man whom you are going to call a Federal fuel distributor, because he is the man who is going to find the facts. This is the man that is going to recommend to the Interstate Commerce Commission what to do. The Interstate Commerce Commission is a body that has on its shoulders more work than it can efficiently look after today. Therefore the proposition to turn over the distribution of coal to the Interstate Commerce Commission is a misnomer. You are turning it over to one man called the Federal distributor.

What power do you give this man in this bill? You give the power to this man, not to open a mine, but you give the absolute power to this man to close a mine and stop production. Why do I say that? The extraordinary power is granted in this bill of saying to a coal producer, "If you do not do everything that this coal distributor says you ought to do he can deny you the instrumentalities of interstate commerce and transportation. You can not get a train nor a car to ship your coal."

Who is going to pay for digging the coal out of his mine and then leave it, being unable to dispose of it? This bill which its authors say is to prevent extortion and prevent profiteering, as has been well said by those who have gone before me, can mean one thing and one thing only, and that is the fixing of prices. This bill goes further and it absolutely abrogates the right of contract between individuals. There can be no question about that. Why should we in this country in peace time go upon a campaign of general price fixing? I want to say this: I never have in peace time, I never expect in peace time, to give to any department of this Government the power of fixing the price of anything that is produced in this country. [Applause.]

I want to say to some of you gentlemen from the West who are swept off your feet by some political condition in your State, where the Non-Partisan League and other leagues are rife and run rampant, advocating measures never dreamed of in the disordered mind of the wildest socialist, that when you start upon this campaign in peace time of fixing the price, when the eaters from New England, New York, Pennsylvania, and the great consuming sections of the country come here and say that there is a short wheat crop in the West, or a short corn crop in the West, and that the price is mounting beyond the reach of the consumer, these gentlemen who live in these great consuming centers and who have the votes to put it through will start to reduce the price of your wheat, and by this vote you close your mouths on that occasion. You should not be heard to grumble. Why, in war time you had the hardest time of your life to save your skin politically because the Government fixed the price of wheat at $2 a bushel, which was at that time an unheard-of price, and you believed, and your constituents believed, that if the price had not been fixed they would have got $3.50 a bushel. When the cotton farmers in my section, as they have tried to do in the past, limit the acreage in order that the supply may not exceed the demand, if with that limited acreage they have a short crop people who manufacture and people who wear cotton goods may come and say that the people are going to freeze if they are not clothed, and cotton has been the cheapest material with which they can clothe themselves in the past—if they come and say to me we are going to fix the price of cotton, I am not going to have my mouth closed to protest against that theory of the Government and such an enactment as that by voting for such legislation in peace time.

If this legislation is not bottomed on the commerce clause of the Constitution, it can not be enacted legally at all. We have a school of politics in this country growing up—and it is alarming the growth it has had—of people who believe and assert that the welfare clause of the Constitution is a grant of power. No lawyer in this country who values his reputation as such has ever asserted in peace that the welfare clause of the Constitution is a general grant of power. But to show you how far the people have gone who want no constitutional restriction placed on them, but who want to enact a law in peace and war time, I want to say that the main sponsor of this bill was before the committee. That is Mr. Aitchison, of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The question was directly put to him, if this legislation could not be bottomed on the commerce clause of the Constitution or any other clause of the Constitution, would it be possible to base it on the welfare clause only, and his answer was yes. I want to say this to you, and it is not original with me—my colleague [Mr. JONES of Texas] made this assertion in my presence—that if you grant that under the welfare clause of the Constitution you can do anything; under the welfare clause of the Constitution you can do everything. Therefore every other provision of the Constitution might well be wiped from the books.

Why, there is a school in this country, and its leader, I think, is a man high in the councils of the party now in power and one of the sponsors of this bill, one of the men who helped to write this bill, who believes, in my opinion—and I would not do him an injustice—who, in my opinion, believes that there should be a controller for the United States in all the business of the United States; that we should have some man in Washington vested with the power, regardless of the courts or of the legislature, to tell business from one end of this country to the other what it should and what it should not do.

Price fixing! Who favors price fixing when it touches him? Does the boot and shoe manufacturer favor price fixing when the price he is getting is satisfactory? Does my friend from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] favor price fixing for wool and sheep and cattle when the price he is getting is satisfactory to him? Does the grower of grain believe in price fixing when it touches him? They brought a representative of the American Federation of Labor—Edgar Wallace—up before the committee to justify and to stand for this bill.

And yet the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW], and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON], and those who stand with him, say and admit that this is a price-fixing bill; that if it does not do that it does nothing. And yet Mr. Edgar Wallace said that he believed in distributing coal where it was needed. He would like to see every proposition of price fixing at the mines, or anywhere else, stricken from the bill. You are not pleasing the men who represent the American Federation of Labor by passing this bill. What did he say about governmental price fixing? He said the two industries in this country that we have had trouble with since the war are the railroads and the coal mines, and he said that the reason for the trouble in the coal mines and in the railroads was because the Government tampered with the prices and wages during the war. He said that for 30 years there had never been a strike upon the railroads of the country prior to the war that endangered the transportation system of the country; that there had not been a strike in the coal mines previous to the war that endangered the supply of coal to the people of the United States. The head of this administration and his spokesmen——

Mr. ROSSDALE. Does that apply to the time when President Roosevelt threatened to seize the coal supply of the country?

Mr. RAYBURN. I am speaking of the testimony of these witnesses who came as representatives of all the workers of the country and who made the statement. I know nothing about Mr. Roosevelt's controversy with the miners.

I started to say that the head of this administration has been held up to the country as a broad-visioned and conservative man, a man who, if he came into power, with his party in both branches of the legislature, would put a stop to what his advocates said was socialistic legislation growing out of the war; that they would take government out of business, and put business in government.

There are a great many advocates of Government ownership of mines and railroads in this country, and practically every man who works for a railroad or who works in a mine believes the Government of the United States should own both. Now, this administration through its head comes along and says that if we do not have peace in the coal mines and upon the railroads of the country we will take them over. What does that mean? That is Government operation. We had a hard enough time getting rid of the railroads when we took them over as a war-time measure. I fear that if we take them again we will never get them out of the hands of the Government.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. In a moment.

The President of the United States and those who speak for him ought to know that if they hold before the people who believe in Government ownership and control of railroads and coal mines the proposition that they will take them over and have Government control and operation and ownership unless there is peace in those industries, that they will not have peace in those industries as long as they hold that dangling before them. [Applause.] I want to say that if the President of the United States were as much of an advocate of Government ownership of all industry—railroads and coal mines, and other industries—as the wildest socialist in this land, he could not better advance his theory of getting these institutions into the hands of the Government than by saying that if they do not have peace we will take them into the hands of the Government.

Mr. McKENZIE. I simply desire to ask the gentleman from Texas if it is his contention that we now have on the statute books sufficient law to enable the President of the United States and the departments of justice in the United States and in the various States to operate the railroads and the mines without taking them over and undertake to operate them by Government operation? Have we not the law now?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know; but I tell you what I would do. I am going to be very candid in what I say. If I was responsible for this Government, I would try to get these people together; I would try to bring about an adjustment of their differences. I want to say this: Instead of the soft words used by the President of the United States with reference to this situation from that stand a few days ago I would say that I wanted peace in industry, and I would do everything in my power to get it; but, believing as I do that there are enough men idle in this country to-day to bring the equipment of the railroads up to something like normal, if they were not afraid to work, I would assert as the representative of the American people through the high office of President that I would not allow the right of any man to work to be interfered with, and that if men wanted to go into these shops to repair these trains I would protect them in the right to work if it took every man in the standing Army of the United States. [Applause.] This is an hour when we ought to be candid, when we ought to be honest; I believe that the fundamentals of our Government are imperiled. I believe, and I state it here, as I have stated it elsewhere, that the 90 per cent of the people of this country who are unorganized, who have the best interests of the Government at heart, should control this Government instead of the organized special interests composing the other 10 per cent controlling it. I want to say this: Unless that part of business that has some regard for public opinion comes forward and takes charge of that end of the business and pushes from the stage the public-be-damned group, and unless those men who are conservative and patriotic in labor come forward and push away the radicals that have taken charge of the labor organizations of the country, we are never going to have peace in industry. You talk about strike legislation. You can not even get it out of the committee of this House, much less through this House. So it is idle to talk about antistrike legislation. You will not vote for it, and you know it.

The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] did a rather remarkable thing yesterday. He supported this bill, conferring these extraordinary and continuing powers upon the President of the United States. You know he is not the only President of the United States we are going to have. This is permanent legislation. You gentlemen have every faith and every confidence in Mr. Harding, while you know that he is not going to be President after the 4th of March, 1925. There is going to be somebody else in the White House after then. But you are granting these extraordinary powers to the Executive, it matters not who he may be. But the gentleman from Wyoming printed in the RECORD the statement of Mr. Edgar Wallace. He said he did not agree with him in all things, but in the most he did agree with him. And Mr. Wallace said he wanted the main part of this bill taken out of it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman has, I think, a better opinion of what Mr. Wallace said than what I have.

Mr. RAYBURN. Well, in order that we may not have any disagreement about this, I will read what he says. I have plenty of time, and I am going to take all my time. Here is what Mr. Wallace says, right here on page 9 of the record:

> I want to say this, that I am not in favor of any fixation of prices at the mines or anywhere else.

Is that plain? I asked Mr. Wallace a question over here:

> Mr. RAYBURN. I understood you to say that you were against the general policy of Government price fixing?
> Mr. WALLACE. Yes, sir.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. But, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RAYBURN. Wait a moment. I read:

> Mr. RAYBURN. Do you think this bill ought to be amended and that the provision giving the coal distributer the power to fix prices should be eliminated?
> Mr. WALLACE. Yes, sir.

If I can not interpret what Mr. Wallace says, I have not sense enough to read the English language. I read further:

> The CHAIRMAN. Will you have the committee to understand that you favor the general purposes of the bill?
> Mr. WALLACE. I favor the general principles of the bill, but am opposed to any price fixing.
> Mr. RAYBURN. The general principle is that of price fixing, is it not?
> Mr. WALLACE. I can not say that it is. I think it is a matter of coal distribution, to see to it that the coal is distributed at the places of the buyers.

That is, to prevent extortion. What do you say that means? The fixing of prices. That is what it means.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. If a very extortionate price is fixed at the mines, that mine shall not have cars to ship out.

Mr. RAYBURN. Every man who appeared before the committee as a representative of the presidential committee said, "We want this extraordinary power conferred so that we can say to a man, 'If you do not sell your coal at a price that we think is fair, we will put you out of business by not giving you any cars to ship coal in.'" That is what every man, including Mr. Hoover and Mr. Aitchison both, said was the purpose of this bill. Of course, Mr. Wallace did not understand this bill when he came up there. He thought it was to regulate somebody else, not to regulate him or the people for whom he spoke.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. In just a moment. Mr. Wallace knows that if we go on a general campaign of price fixing in this country we are going to fix wages, too, and every other element of cost that enters into it, and he does not want that. I do not blame him. I do not want the Government of the United States to fix the price of anything I produce.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Has the gentleman any explanation of the extortionate price of $22.50 a ton for anthracite coal in the western part of my district, 100 miles from Chicago, a year and a half ago?

Mr. RAYBURN. It does not make any difference about that. There is nothing in this bill to prevent that this year, if it becomes a law within 36 hours.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman think the fault is with the retail dealer or with the operator at the mines or with somebody between the operator and the retail dealer?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know that I think about it, because I do not know the price at either place except the price that the gentleman states the retailer charges. I do not know what the retail price at the mine was, what they paid to the miner, what the transportation charge was, how many hands it passed through. But there is nothing in this bill to prevent the retailer in the gentleman's town from charging $42 a ton for coal this fall.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But can not the Government of the United States by law regulate or destroy a combination which so controls interstate traffic in coal between the operator at the mines and the retail dealer as to result in extortionate price to consumers?

Mr. RAYBURN. If you have a representative of the Department of Justice in your State, and will present the facts to him, he can attend to it. For 32 years a law against conspiracy to restrain commerce has been upon the statute books.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It would not affect the present situation at all.

Mr. RAYBURN. This bill will not. That is certain.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Do you want the people to freeze before they get the coal?

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I am not arguing this question through tears. I am trying to state the fundamentals. This is no place for tears. This is a place for the Representatives of the American people, unafraid, to use what cold judgment they have. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But, Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman think——

Mr. RAYBURN. No; I do not think anybody ought to profiteer, if that is what you would ask me.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Has the Government of the United States no authority to prevent profiteering between the mines and the retail dealers?

Mr. RAYBURN. This bill does not do it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Would the gentleman vote for an amendment to this bill so as to stop that sort of profiteering?

Mr. RAYBURN. What you want to do——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have not said what I want to do——

Mr. RAYBURN (continuing). Is to go to the legislature of the great, progressive State of Wisconsin and secure legislation upon the retail price of coal. Let us destroy this idea every time something gets wrong in industry of coming to the Government of the United States for redress. [Applause.]

I do not know when this Congress, acting under the coercion of the President of the United States, will vote to give the President the power to take over the railroads of the country.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It might be proper for me to suggest to the gentleman, in view of what the gentleman has just said, that while tears will not decide this, neither will vociferation. I asked the gentleman a question. I asked him whether the Government of the United States is remediless at this time and can do nothing to stop extortion now going on between the operators at the mine and the retail dealers in the respective communities, and the gentleman talked about tears. He deliberately evaded the question, and got applause because he did evade it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Even though the gentleman from Wisconsin may look angry, I never think he is. When he asks me a question I am going to answer it in my own way, because the time is mine, and I think I answered his question sufficiently. We are not talking about what ought to be done by the State of Wisconsin. We are talking about the proposition in this bill; and granting that all the powers that you seek to confer in this bill can be conferred, it will not have anything to do with the proposition of controlling the retail price of coal in Wisconsin.

Mr. ROBSION. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION. Is it not true that the operator deals with only a very small percentage of the American public, and that the general public in getting coal must deal with the retailers?

Mr. RAYBURN. Why, of course. Everybody knows that. It is no longer a question of the production of coal, although it was a question a few days ago. There is going to be plenty of coal. The thing that is wrong is with transportation. Transportation has broken down, and the remedy proposed by the administration is to give the President the power to take over the railroads and operate them; but the President, in order to get his scheme through, says, "I have no idea that I will feel called upon to put this into effect." Gentlemen, this question goes much deeper than many of you seem to think. In my opinion this legislation strikes deeper, at the very foundations of the Government that we all love, at the Constitution that we all swore to uphold, deeper than any legislation that has ever been proposed in this Government in time of peace. I was very much surprised at the argument made by my able friend from Texas [Mr. HARDY] yesterday. My conception has always been that under all wise construction if a legislator doubted the legality of a bill he should vote against it. My colleague said that doubting the constitutionality of the measure he was going to vote to write it on the statute books. During the war I voted for a great many things that I thought were of doubtful propriety, even during the war; but I did not vote for a single thing that I had a reasonable doubt was against the Constitution of the United States; and certainly in time of peace it is time to call a halt on such legislation as that.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I agree with the gentleman that except in so far as the anthracite conditions are concerned the main trouble now relates to the crippling of transportation. Does the gentleman know that while bituminous production is now advancing quite rapidly there is almost an absolute cessation of anthracite production?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I say I agree with the gentleman that, leaving out of view the anthracite conditions, the main difficulty is because transportation facilities are crippled and transportation is impeded. Can the gentleman explain why the President of the United States has failed to exercise the very full power which, as I understand, is vested in him to protect interstate transportation? It seems there is a statute now in force which authorizes the President even to go to the point of employing the armed forces of the United States to guard the movement of trains, the movement of any cars, to take care of all the instrumentalities of commerce, and to insure as far as possible the safety of the people who are employed or who desire to be employed in conducting interstate commerce. Now, why has the President failed to exercise that power?

Mr. RAYBURN. I can not answer. I stated a while ago that if it was my responsibility I would make the statement, and I would make it good, that I would see that every man in this country who wanted work was protected, if it took every man in the standing Army of the United States to do it. That is my view.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield to me here?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. The gentleman has stated that it is admitted that there is going to be plenty of coal. Does the gentleman mean to modify that statement by making an exception with regard to anthracite coal, and is the admission justified under the facts and circumstances at the present moment with reference to anthracite coal?

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman is correct, but this bill will not get any anthracite coal. It will simply fix upon this Government a policy that will come up to plague you and me in the future.

Mr. KINDRED. Respecting the gentleman's opinion as I do, I will ask him to state what he would do with reference to legislation that would produce coal and prevent suffering and disease among the people in the event that there is no peace between the United Mine Workers and the operators with respect to the production of anthracite coal?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know how you are going to cure a situation where men do not want to work for the wages they are offered and the men who offer them work will not pay the wages that they ask.

Mr. KINDRED. The whole solution of this serious question depends upon the production of coal, does it not?

Mr. WINGO. And this legislation will not produce coal.

Mr. RAYBURN. This legislation will not produce another pound of coal.

Mr. KINDRED. I ask the gentleman what legislation he would suggest that would produce coal?

Mr. RAYBURN. This kind of socialistic legislation that is being advocated around here, which proposes that the Government take over everything, has got me to the point during the past few days where I have spent about all my time trying to tell somebody why this kind of thing ought not to be done. What ought to be done is not my responsibility, when an overwhelming majority of Congress is on the other side of the House and that majority have the privilege of enacting legislation.

Mr. KINDRED. Does the gentleman say that in no emergency of this kind would the Government be justified in taking over the mines?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not say that. I say that there may come a sufficient emergency—I can not conceive of it, but there may come a sufficient emergency—so that the Government of the United States should and would take over the mines; but this thing does not do that. That would be for the purpose of producing coal. This does not produce any coal.

Mr. KINDRED. Is not this in line with that?

Mr. RAYBURN. This is a price-fixing measure.

Mr. KINDRED. Is not this measure in line with that, looking in that direction?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think that is where we will get if this administration keeps going on.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman state what kind of an emergency would have to exist before he would think the mines should be taken over?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I would like to state my position, which I do not think the gentleman has correctly stated.

Mr. RAYBURN. I want to be entirely fair to my colleague. I read his remarks this morning and I thought I correctly stated them.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I would like to state exactly what I think about it.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have only three minutes remaining.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The views I expressed yesterday were the views I have expressed more than once heretofore. The gentleman from Virginia [Judge TUCKER] delivered a few days ago an able speech, seemingly urging that a Member of Congress should be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that a measure was constitutional before he could vote for it, but I differ from that. In my judgment there are hundreds of questions that come before Congress that the average Member of Congress can not study the constitutionality of down to absolute certainty. I do not believe that every time a man gets up and makes an argument as to the constitutionality of a provision that it is my duty, unless I am thoroughly convinced that he is wrong, to turn the measure away if it is vital. I think where it is gravely doubtful we ought not to vote for a measure, but unless we are gravely doubtful I think we ought to vote for it if it is of vital or even of great importance.

When, before the constitutional amendment expressly authorizing an income tax was adopted, Congress passed an income tax law there were able arguments made in the House and Senate against its constitutionality. The Supreme Court, I believe, first held it constitutional, but upon a rehearing Justice Shiras changed his first opinion and concluded it was unconstitutional. The change of opinion on Judge Shiras's part changed the majority of the court from a majority sustaining to a majority denying the constitutionality of that law. It is inconceivable to me that many of the Members of Congress who voted for that law did not have some doubt as to its constitutionality, and yet I think they voted as they ought to have voted if they reached the honest opinion, with the lights before them, that the law was constitutional and believed it a just and beneficent law. Frankly, I think any other rule for their guidance would have prevented the passage of nearly every law where the question of its constitutionality has been seriously raised. So I have adopted the rule for my guidance, that where in my judgment a measure was constitutional, even though I might have some doubt, I was at liberty to vote for it. I believe that to be the only practical rule a Congressman can act on.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is not my position. I do not think that any legislator in this land should ever vote for a measure about which he has reasonable doubt of the constitutionality. That is what I stated.

Now, in the moment I have to close I want to say that I look upon the situation confronting us now as the most serious in our country's history, except when embroiled in war. I hope the membership of this House will not be swept off its feet and destroy the fundamentals of this Government by passing a maze of legislation in an hour like this which will come back to pingue us, legislation that is against everything that the framers of the immortal instrument intended and those who have followed in their footsteps who believe in the future of this Republic. I believe this Republic will endure. I pray that it may, and I know that it is the most perfect Government ever instituted by man or wrought in the blood of heroes. But if after a while I should look to the east and I should see a cloud of dissension rising, if I should see across the bosom of that cloud the forked tongue of lightning of revolution play, and the giant trunk of this mighty State should be shattered by the earthquake shocks of war, as I stand amidst these magnificent ruins with bowed head and a heavy heart I hope I may be able to say with a clear conscience I never by any vote or any act or any word of mine contributed to bringing about that eclipsing tragedy of the ages. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I recognize the strong temptation to indulge in partisan discussion here to-day, and I also recognize the strong temptation to cast partisan votes on a proposition like this which is advanced by those who are supposed to speak for an administration not in harmony with the views of many of us. I recognize the temptation to indulge in criticism of the administration now in power on account of what it may have done or may not have done in connection with this unfortunate situation which has overtaken the country, resulting in the necessity for the consideration of this legislation.

But I take it for granted that the vast majority of the Members of this House and the overwhelming majority of the people of the United States do not desire their Representatives here to consider this question from the standpoint of partisanship, or to waste their time indulging in criticism of any act or omission of which the administration may be guilty; but recognizing the emergency in which we now find ourselves desire that we shall exert whatever influence we may have, whatever judgment we may possess, in the solution of that problem for the welfare of the people of these United States. [Applause.] It is in that spirit I hope to discuss the bill now under consideration.

Now, let us see what the situation really is. I see no occasion for hysteria either among those who are in favor of the legislation or those who are against it. I fear the majority of the hysteria which has been displayed here has been on the part of those who oppose the legislation. They seem to be in a hysterical mood for fear we may enact legislation by which the great fundamental principles upon which our Government was founded are going to crumble over night and that we will find ourselves in a maze of confusion and anarchy. I do not share those fears.

On the 1st day of April there was a coal strike called in the United States. We need not stop to consider the merits of that strike. We are not called upon to solve the question of who was responsible for the strike and I do not propose to take up any of my time discussing that subject. As a result of that strike the anthracite mines of the United States have been closed and a large part of the bituminous mines have been closed. By reason of that strike in the anthracite fields more than 35,000,000 tons of anthracite coal remain in the ground which would have been mined if the strike had not occurred. The testimony before our committee is that undoubtedly that 35,000,000 tons of anthracite coal can not be recovered, it is lost. If the mines were to be opened to-morrow the increase in the output could never recover the 35,000,000 which has remained unmined during the continuation of the strike. In other words, the anthracite production can not catch up.

A few days ago the bituminous coal strike was settled to the extent that practically all of the bituminous mines have resumed operations, but on account of the strike of the bituminous fields there has been a slackening in the production of coal which added to the 35,000,000 tons lost on account of the anthracite strike makes it imperative that there should be mined and distributed in the next four or five months in the United States something like thirteen or fourteen million tons a week in order that the country may catch up in its coal supply and resume a condition of normalcy.

Let us assume that the anthracite mines are not reopened. We all hope that the anthracite strike will be settled in a very few days and that they will resume operations, but let us assume that they will not reopen. That means that there is practically no anthracite coal now in existence outside of the mines. Then those 35,000,000 tons must be made up by some form of substitute and the only practical substitute for the use of anthracite coal is bituminous coal, except such small quantities of coke and wood or other material as may be substituted here and there. It is perfectly obvious that if the United States must produce within the next five months an average of 13,000,000 tons of bituminous coal a week, and there is transportation at the very highest for only about 10,000,000 tons of bituminous coal per week, that means that the mines can produce 3,000,000 tons per week more than the railroads can transport. Then without some form of regulation, without some agency being set up to bring about equitable distribution of all the coal that the railroads can transport, somebody in the United States is going to be cold for lack of sufficient coal while others will have more coal than they need or more than their share or proportion of it which can be transported by the railroads.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to discuss the question of human nature involved in this whole situation. We all know that when there is a scarcity of coal the price of coal mounts, just as the price of other commodities does when there is a scarcity of anything else. When there is a scarcity of transportation the same will apply to a certain extent, and to the extent to which there is no regulatory powers to distribute the available facilities of transportation for the necessities of life. The Interstate Commerce Commission has certain powers under the transportation act with reference to car service. Under the act to regulate commerce, as amended by the transportation act, the Interstate Commerce Commission has the power to provide for distribution of cars in so far as it affects the question of car service itself, and the commission is of the opinion that it has no power to go beyond that.

I think it is perfectly true to state, as has been asserted here, that all of the devilment which has been done in the country is not chargeable to the coal operators. There are certain sections of this country where, during the strike, and I suppose even at this time, coal speculators, men who desire to buy coal at any price they feel able or compelled to pay, have camped at the doors of the mines, and the result has been that the coal has been almost auctioned off to the highest bidder. The result of that has been that public utility corporations, municipal corporations, and other forms of industry have been compelled to pay as high as $10 and $12 and $15 a ton for coal at the mine in order to obtain the necessary amount to carry on their operations.

The coal operators, of course, are affected by the same human nature which affects all of us. In the very nature of things, if there is a shortage of coal, and men are clamoring for coal and are willing to pay a higher price for it, it would be contrary to all of the dictates of human nature for the coal operators to refuse to sell the coal to the highest bidder; but such a course may result in very great hardship to those who are unable to pay those fictitious prices. The Interstate Commerce Commission takes the position, notwithstanding two or three members of it take a contrary view, that under the present law they have no power to issue embargoes in such a way as to provide that certain industries, certain communities, certain interests, shall be restricted in their power to obtain coal from the operators, in order that other sections of the country, or other industries or other communities may have a fair portion of the coal that the railroads are able to carry. We are confronted now with this situation.

The coal mines of the United States if they were put to the highest point of production might be able by straining every nerve and fiber to mine about 13,000,000 tons of coal per week, although the peak of their production in 1920 was when they were able to produce 13,000,000 tons per week and when the railroads were able to haul about 11,000,000 tons per week. In order that the Interstate Commerce Commission may have the power to distribute coal all over the United States, so that these 10,000,000 tons of coal which they are able to haul every week may be equitably distributed among the householders, among the municipal heating and lighting plants, among the industries of the United States, the power conferred in this bill is thought necessary by the commission, and, in my opinion, it ought to be granted.

We have heard a lot of talk about the constitutionality of this bill and about the power of Congress to fix the prices. I agree in the main with those gentlemen who regret any embarkation by the Government of the United States upon the matter of price fixing. Of course this bill does not fix prices. It is not a price-fixing bill, but we may assume that if the law is enacted and becomes effective the Interstate Commerce Commission will have the power to say to any coal operator who may be taking advantage of the situation to receive an enormous price, an exorbitant price, for coal that he shall not have the same advantages in transportation facilities as the coal operator receiving only a fair and reasonable price for the coal which he produces. [Applause.] That may indirectly be price fixing, although I think it is not absolutely true that it is price fixing. The Interstate Commerce Commission under this law has no power to fix the price of coal or to say what a coal operator may contract to sell his coal for to an individual, a dealer, or an industry of any sort. The fuel distributer who is created by this bill has no power to say to the coal operators that they shall charge a certain price for coal.

All the bill does is to give him the power to find out the facts, to find out what is being charged, and then to set up a standard of what he believes would be reasonable prices, submit those prices to the Interstate Commerce Commission, make his recommendation, which may be adopted or set aside entirely by the commission, and then the commission, basing its action on those facts which have been gathered by the coal distributer or upon any other facts they have in their possession, may say to those who are profiteering in coal, who are charging an exhorbitant price for coal, "You are taking advantage of the public, you are taking advantage of the shortage of transportation, you are taking advantage of a great emergency to charge a higher price than the people of the United States ought to pay, and by reason of that conduct on your part we shall issue an order that you are not to have the same facilities of transportation for taking advantage of the people in an emergency, and we will give to those who are dealing fairly with the public a larger proportion of the transportation facilities in order that they may have them to serve the people of the United States."

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. It has been charged that this is a bill which will curtail the distribution of coal. Is it not a fact, as the gentleman has stated, that if there are 13,000,000 tons of coal mined weekly and only 10,000,000 tons can be distributed by the railroads, therefore, there will be a surplus of coal?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. There is not a syllable, not a sentence of power conferred in this bill that would tend in the remotest degree to curtail the production of coal. On the other hand, it will stimulate production at some points where otherwise there might be curtailment by reason of an inequitable or unfair distribution of transportation facilities.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Most of the discussion of this bill has concerned itself with what it will do or not do to the coal operator. If I read the bill correctly, does it not reach also the distributers of coal in addition to the operators? Take, for instance, the people who may buy and store coal at the docks of Duluth and Superior, and sell the coal in interstate commerce to North Dakota or Montana. Is it not also intended to reach the distribution of coal of that sort?

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes. Of course the bill is not limited to operation on the coal operators. And, as I said a while ago, the greatest amount of the devilment that has been done in the coal business has not been chargeable to the coal operators. There have been a lot of speculators who have hung around the doors of coal mines willing to pay any price they asked for it, and, of course, the coal operators sold it to them, and in the nature of things did like anybody else who had something to sell, and a shortage caused the price to go up. This bill will deal with the speculator so far as he is engaged in interstate commerce just as much as it will with the coal operator, and in all probability will do more to curb the speculator than the operator.

It has been seriously argued here, and before the committee, that the fixing of the prices of coal at the mine is an intrastate transaction, over which Congress has no control. I do not agree with that interpretation, but if the United States Supreme Court should hold that the mere fixing of the price of coal at the mine is an intrastate matter over which Congress has no control, of course that would not mean that the man who buys the coal at the mine, to be shipped in interstate commerce, could not be reached by the provisions of this bill, and that against him an embargo might not be issued. The Interstate Commerce Commission would compel him to bring his price within a reasonable figure in order to enjoy the privileges of interstate commerce.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I wish to ask a question with reference to these coal brokers. The gentleman says that this bill in some instances will reach them. When a coal broker from Chicago comes to the western Kentucky coal fields and buys coal at a certain price to be delivered in his yards in Chicago, of course that goes into interstate commerce until it gets to his yard, and not a pound sold by him until it gets there. Would he not have a right, except that the laws of the State of Illinois would reach him, to sell at any price he chooses to the consumers there, and you could not reach him under that state of facts?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is probably true. It is hard to determine how far Congress can control an article in interstate commerce and control the distribution of it after it reaches the State. I think this is a fair inference: If Congress has the power to fix the price of coal at the mine, which is to go into interstate commerce, and it does not become a part of the interstate commerce until it begins to move, then it is fair to infer after it is moved Congress has the same power to follow it after it has gone into interstate commerce that it might have to regulate it before it begins to move in interstate commerce. But that is a proposition I lay down with great diffidence and some fear, because it is a mere logical sequence of the power which some believe Congress has to subject it to regulation before it enters into interstate commerce. It is a mere analogy that we might follow still further. But, even if that is true, if it is true that Congress has no power to follow this coal after it has gone into interstate commerce and gone into the hands of the local dealers and is being sold to the consumers, of course the only remedy there is for the State to take action and control it.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Is not that situation squarely met by the recommendation of the Governor of the State of New York?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not read his recommendation, but I think in a general way it could be controlled by State action.

Let us see whether this bill is constitutional. I assume there is an emergency. Congress has the power to determine whether there is an emergency, and the United States Supreme Court has so held in a number of cases. It is not a judicial question to be determined as to whether there is an emergency or not; it is a legislative question. Congress having declared in many laws that have been passed by the Congress that an emergency existed, the Supreme Court has said that the question of whether that is true is a legislative and not a judicial one and that Congress has the power to go just as far as it sees fit in legislating to deal with the emergency, so long as it does not trangress the obvious and evident limitations of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Is the gentleman of the opinion that under that power the Congress of the United States can pass a law which would forbid the shipment of any commodity which is necessary if the commission thinks the price charged is too high?

Mr. BARKLEY. I would not go so far as to say that I believe that under the commerce clause Congress could prevent the shipment of anything in interstate commerce that some commission might think was too high in price.

I take it for granted that the Supreme Court will say with reference to the coal industry at least what it says with reference to the packers. In that decision, rendered only a few weeks or months ago, the Supreme Court made use of this language. The opinion is not in print, except in the advance sheets. I desire to call attention to this language in the syllabus in the case of Stafford et al. against Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, et al.:

Knowledge of the conditions under which Congress acted aided the court in determining the effect and scope of the act in order to determine its validity. The business of the various live-stock yards of the country is affected with a public interest so as to subject it to legislative regulation.

In a further syllabus the court says:

The various stockyards of the country, in receiving by rail live stock from the ranges and farms of the West, and in shipping by rail to consumers in the East, are an interstate commerce agency. The business done in the various stockyards of the country by commission men and live-stock dealers and shipment therefrom to consumers in the East is a part of interstate commerce or so associated with it as to bring it within the power of Federal regulation.

It seems to me if the Supreme Court will hold that a commission merchant in the stockyards in any city in the United States is an agency of interstate commerce to the extent that he can be regulated by Federal legislation, it is not to be conceived that the great coal industry of the United States, which is one of the prime necessaries of life, whose ramifications are much more numerous than those of the packing industry—it is inconceivable that the Supreme Court would not hold that the coal industry is affected with a public interest and, being affected with public interest, is subject to regulation in a way we are attempting to provide in this bill, namely, that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be given the power to regulate the distribution of coal cars so as to allow the people to receive a fair proportion of the coal that is produced out of the ground, so that some may not freeze, while others are able, by reason of more money or comfortable circumstances, to enjoy a larger proportion than would be their share according to the amount of coal produced and transported.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The gentleman will realize that in the meat packers' case the only reason why recognition would be permitted would be on account of the injurious and poisonous character of the meat and not the price of it, whereas here the gentleman seeks to regulate the price of coal, whether it is good or bad, and not because the coal itself would be injurious to the public.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; because in the case of the packers' act the court did not pass upon the question of the injurious quality of the food that the packers might produce. The packers' bill was based upon the proposition that the packers, by reason of the control which they had been able to obtain over the distribution of food, not only affected its quality but materially affected its price, and while the question of price was an indirect question, it nevertheless was involved in the reasons why Congress enacted the law.

Now, another thing: The United States Supreme Court has held that the Congress has the power not only to regulate interstate commerce but to regulate the instrumentalities of interstate commerce, to regulate the agencies of interstate commerce, and that Congress is the judge of the extent to which it may go so long as it keeps within the provisions and powers of the Constitution; and the Supreme Court will not deny that power to Congress so long as it does not transgress the obvious intention of the Constitution in conferring the power.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. As I understand the position of the gentleman from Kentucky, it is this: This is an article which is necessary for the public and which, under the law of supply and demand, reaches a price that is unfair to the consumer, and that under those circumstances Congress has the authority to step in and to prevent unjust imposition.

Mr. BARKLEY. No. That is not the position I occupy, although I am going to make this statement: Nobody can tell how far the Supreme Court will go in laying down the law. It is impossible to say that the Supreme Court, having gone thus far, will not go further. If Congress undertakes to exercise the power under the present conditions, that would be under the grant of power contained in section 8 of the Constitution. But I want to say that it is my belief that Congress, having the power under the Adamson law, as decided by the Supreme Court, to fix the wages of men engaged in interstate commerce transportation, has the power not only to regulate the carriers who carry interstate commerce, but to regulate any industry that is large enough to become an integral part of the agencies of interstate commerce in the country. I am not prepared to say that the Supreme Court might not uphold a statute which undertook to fix a limitation upon the power of men engaged in interstate commerce to charge the people for an article which they carry in interstate commerce. I am not saying that I believe absolutely that that power exists, but no man can foresee the extent to which the Supreme Court may go in upholding the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce.

Mr. DENISON. I would also like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks, if the price of coal in interstate commerce, under the law of supply and demand, should reach such a point that it would be unfair to the consumer, Congress ought to use the power of interstate commerce to regulate it in the interest of the consumer?

Mr. BARKLEY. Whether Congress ought to do it or not is not for me to say. But if we have the power—and the President seems to assume that we have the power, and the Attorney General seems to have concurred in that opinion—if Congress has the power to go the whole length and take over the mines and mine the coal by the Federal Government and fix the price for it by the Federal Government, we have the right to go any distance that is short of the whole distance by fixing and regulating the price charged for articles that enter into interstate commerce. In other words, if we can do the whole thing, we can do any part of it separately.

Mr. DENISON. Suppose the price of coal should reach the point, under the law of supply and demand, where the price would be unfair to the producer, where the profit would be so small as to curtail production and be unfair to the producer. Does the gentleman think we ought to legislate to fix a price that would be fair to the producer?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not passing upon the question whether we ought to do it. I think that if Congress has the power to fix the wages of employees of carriers engaged in interstate commerce, as was done under the Adamson law, which was passed as an emergency—if Congress has the power to declare what the wages paid by carriers engaged in interstate commerce shall be, and that power has been upheld, it is difficult for me to differentiate that from a power to declare the conditions under which any commodity may enter interstate commerce.

In the Coronado Coal Co. case, decided very recently, the court said:

It is clear from these cases that if Congress deems certain recurring practices, though not really a part of interstate commerce, are likely to obstruct, restrain, or burden it, it has power to subject them to national supervision and restraint.

In the case of Nelson v. New (243 U. S. 332), which arose under the Adamson law, the court said that the legislative will can be exerted "to the end that no individual dispute or difference might bring ruin to the vast interests concerned in a movement of interstate commerce for the express purpose of protecting and preserving which the plenary authority in Congress is reposed."

But I believe that this law is capable of being sustained not only under the commerce clause of the Constitution but I believe that it may be sustained also under the welfare clause of the Constitution. The Supreme Court has never gone very far in defining what the welfare clause of the Constitution means. It seems to have circumlocuted around that, just as Congress has done. But I am of the opinion—and I express it merely for what it is worth, and it may not be agreed to by any Member of this House—I am of the opinion that whenever the Supreme Court gets a fair lick at the interpretation and definition of the welfare clause of the Constitution it will give Congress almost supreme power to deal with any great emergencies that may arise, either in time of war or in time of peace. [Applause.]

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TUCKER. The Supreme Court had that opportunity in the last five months.

Mr. BARKLEY. But it did not exercise it or avail itself of it. We are bound to assume that the Constitution, in section 8, where it confers all the powers that Congress has, meant what it said; and the Constitution does not distinguish between the validity or the extent of any of the powers that are conferred under section 8 of the Constitution. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, and that is not limited to war. And it has power to collect duties. It has power to pay the debts of the United States. The power is conferred upon the Congress to provide for the common defense and "general welfare" of the United States. And then, after enumerating the powers conferred on Congress, the section provides that Congress shall have power to enact all laws necessary to carry out the exercise of the powers previously enumerated. And I take it for granted that the framers of the Constitution gave those two expressions "common defense" and "general welfare" equal dignity and power, because they are contained in the very same clause, in the very same phrase of the Constitution,

Congress shall have power to provide for the common defense—which means that it has the power to defend the country in war, and the power to maintain an army and a navy not only in time of war but in time of peace; and also it has the power to provide for the general welfare of the people of the United States; and that is not limited to war, but it is coextensive with the entire existence of the Nation; and I believe that not only have we the power to enact this law under the commerce clause but also under the general welfare clause of the Constitution, because it certainly provides for the general welfare of the people of the Nation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the Chair kindly inform me how much time is remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has 41 minutes and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] has 3 minutes.

Mr. WINSLOW. I have been authorized to say that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] yields back to me the three minutes remaining to him.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman has 44 minutes.

Mr. WINSLOW. I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I dare say nobody will deny that a serious emergency exists in the coal distribution and supply of the country. This emergency, which is national in its scope, is threatening not only the welfare of the people but the public health as well. The emergency has been caused by two circumstances which have combined, one of which is the stoppage of the production of coal in the mines of the country for a period of four months and the other is the railroad strike which still continues and which impairs and interferes with the distribution of what coal there is in the country. Previous speakers have told you something of the situation of the country and I do not care to reiterate what these gentlemen have said. It is sufficient to summarize that we are 35,000,000 tons of anthracite coal short; that in the northwest country, with winter approaching, where ordinarily 25,000,000 tons of coal are piled upon the docks for the supply of that country, there is to-day between 5,000,000 and 10,000,000 tons. Where ordinarily there are pouring out from the mines of the country into the market at this time of the year from 10,000,000 to 13,000,000 tons a week, there are to-day between 6,000,000 and 7,000,000 or, possibly, 8,000,000 tons, with a maximum in sight under the present railroad situation of 10,000,000 tons. The coal storage of the country for industry, usually about 25,000,000 tons, is completely exhausted. So that the country, having its bins stripped bare, industries closing, the Northwest about to be locked up by the winter which is coming, the anthracite mines closed, the railroad strike continuing, we are threatened with what must occur to every unprejudiced mind in this House as a serious dilemma and emergency which requires action on our part. Everyone who has any sense of the conditions at all has agreed that this emergency is here, and those who have opposed this measure have not in any wise denied that that fact exists. With the winter approaching profiteering is becoming rampant in the country.

The very fact that the railroad strike still continues is making it possible for this nefarious business to be carried on, and to-day, instead of an equitable distribution of coal throughout the country, we find that, with coal coming out at a rate far below that required for even normal consumption, certain parts of the country are bidding for this coal; manufacturers and brokers, intent only on filling their own bins, are bidding exorbitant prices for this coal at the mouths of the mines, while other parts of the country are receiving or will receive no coal at all. The testimony shows that it will take from 15 to 20 weeks at the very greatest production we can obtain to bring us up to the ordinary level, and by that time we will be in the dead of winter.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. Can the gentleman inform the House where operators are receiving $12 per ton to-day?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The testimony of Secretary Hoover and others before our committee showed that there are places where they are bidding as much as $12 a ton at the mouth of the mine.

Mr. KENDALL. I represent the largest bituminous district in the United States, and the price yesterday was $3.75 per ton at the mine.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It does not make any difference what the gentleman's personal experience is. The testimony before our committee and the fact is that in parts of the country they are bidding these immense sums, and what coal there is is flowing in the direction of those who are willing to pay these perfectly extortionate prices.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman from Illinois kindly ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if his coal price has not been fixed by the State administration?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is that true?

Mr. KENDALL. It was fixed at $4.50 a ton, and yesterday coal was selling freely at $3.75 a ton.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Irrespective of what the price is there, we know that the pinch of winter will cause suffering over this country, the best we can do. In this emergency, gentlemen of the Congress, shall we sit supine and say we can do nothing? Is it possible that the Congress of the United States, with this emergency coming on, is absolutely powerless and that there is no power in the Government to regulate these things and to see to it that such national resources as we have are distributed to the people of the country who need them? I say there is in this Government, as in all governments, the power to take care of its own people in emergencies.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Granting that there is plenty of bituminous coal, what does the gentleman say as to the anthracite situation, when there is no anthracite at all available at the present time for domestic consumption?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Five counties in the State of Pennsylvania produce practically all the anthracite coal there is to be had in the country. These mines are locked up, and they will remain locked up until an agreement is reached. Not a pound of coal will be mined there unless there is an agreement between the anthracite miners and the operators, and no such agreement is in sight; and while we ordinarily have 35,000,000 tons of their product in our bins, we have not a pound, nor is there a pound for distribution.

So you see what condition we are in. Now, gentlemen, surely there is some power in the Government to put an end to this and to do something to help the people. Do you not agree with me, on both sides of the House, that if we can do anything we ought to do it? Ought we not to try to do something, and what do those who oppose the bill and other similar measures have to offer?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman please explain how this bill will stimulate the production of coal?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will try to get to that later. Now, three remedies for the present situation are proposed; three remedies are possible at this time, and three only that I can think of that anybody has suggested. The first is that there should be devised by Congress the legal machinery to settle the strikes. What form would that take? It would take the form of legislation for compulsory arbitration. If the two opposing powers in the coal industry and in the railroad situation will not agree and if Congress is to do anything, there is only one thing it can do, and that is to contrive machinery to create some forum to adjudicate their differences and to make its mandate conclusive. Is the Congress at this time ready to enter into legislation for compulsory arbitration and would such a bill pass the Congress? The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] who preceded me says that there is not the slightest chance of getting such legislation through, and I take him at his word and agree with him without in any way expressing my own personal opinion as to the necessity of such legislation. But that question is not now presented to us. I tell you what we want is action, and that quickly. It would take time to enact legislation of this kind, if it can be enacted at all. In the meantime the crisis has come, the frost has come, the snows of winter have come, and those who shiver in the tenements of New York will be cold, and the people living on the prairies of the Dakotas will suffer. It is up to us to do something as speedily as we can.

What is the next plan? The next plan is to open the mines. Will the Congress now enact legislation authorizing the seizure of the mines and the railroads of the country? It is extremely doubtful. Irrespective of whether it will be done or not, let me say the testimony is that it will take 60 or 90 days to get the machinery in operation by which it can be done. In the meantime the winter is on us, the crisis is here, and profiteering is continued.

What is the third plan? The plan suggested by this bill to contrive some machinery that can be made effective the day after the bill receives the signature of the President. This machinery can be set in operation and priority orders may be issued by which the coal in the country can be routed to the places that need it the most. Under the law as it exists today—and I defy anybody to successfully contradict it—there can be no routing to a particular place under priority orders that will be successful and operate promptly and efficiently. But under this plan which is set out in this bill priority orders can be issued at once which will send to the proper parts of the country the coal which is so urgently needed.

In the meantime the man who is bidding $10 or $12 or other fabulous sums for coal at the mine, usually for the purpose of speculation, will be deprived of his opportunity to stock his bins at the expense of those who have no coal at all.

Thus it must appear that the only feasible thing we can do now is to adopt the scheme of priority orders so that we may direct the coal we have to places where it is needed, and do it quickly. If some of these mine operators, when these priority orders are put into effect, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] says they may, refuse to produce coal, then I say to you gentlemen of the committee that for one I am ready and I believe the country is ready to show these gentlemen who live in the district of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS], operating coal mines, that there is a power to make those mines operate.

The people of the country are entitled to the use of this coal. No man and no number of men, because they have title to this coal, may say to this great people, "You can not have coal; you must freeze." There are ample means to right such a condition. I am ready to go along on that route, but until that time comes, to get a speedy remedy, one that will be effective, let us follow the logical, simple plan presented to us, and one that has the approval of everyone who has given the matter any careful thought. It has the approval of the President, as will be shown by the chairman of the committee when he comes to address you; it has the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hoover; it has the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as stated by Mr. Aitchison; it has the approval of everybody else who has given it any constructive and helpful consideration.

Now, what are the alternatives placed before us by gentlemen who oppose it? Some, like the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], criticize the bill, but when answering the question what they would do, they have no remedy. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] says that if he were President of the United States he would do certain things as regards the protection of the men who want to work in the mines and on the railroad. He would call soldiers and secure the right to work. Very good and well, but Mr. RAYBURN is not President of the United States, and this Congress is confronted with the proposition to do what it can do to end this crisis and alleviate the condition of the people. Some of them, like the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION]——

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Referring to what the gentleman from Texas said, did not the President when addressing us use these words?—

> Wherefore I am resolved to use all the power of the Government to maintain transportation, and sustain the right of men to work.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; and he proposes to do it, and more strength to his arm in so doing. Instead of criticizing and trying to find some little technicality, I favor doing something that will help the people out in this great calamity that is facing us.

The trouble with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] is that he lives in a country, perhaps, where they do not need very much coal and the pangs of this winter will not affect them very seriously. However, I remember that in the past the gentleman from Texas, when similar emergencies have arisen in other cases under a former administration, has not been slow to follow the leadership of his President, who was of his own political party at that time. If I am not mistaken, when President Wilson said an emergency existed and asked for the passage of the Adamson bill the gentleman from Texas voted for it. Some gentlemen, like the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS], have substitutes. I would like to have you read the substitute that the gentleman from Indiana, who represents this large block coal country, has presented as it is printed in the RECORD. It is absolutely nothing. It has no teeth in it; it has been thoroughly emasculated. It appoints a Federal fuel distributor and gives him no powers except to find facts and adds no power to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the gentleman from Indiana will have you satisfied with that substitute which he presents and will present on the floor as a substitute for the original bill. You may just as well pass nothing, because it has no efficiency, no force, no teeth; it gets nowhere, it starts nowhere, and it does not arrive. So that the sum total of the suggestions that we have heard from those who oppose this bill is nothing in a constructive way and nothing except criticism of and opposition to the bill that we have before us.

Let us see what other objections are made to it. I want to briefly run over them. I may not have time to go through them all. Some are opposed to this bill because it does not go far enough. Well, because we have only a half loaf, should we throw it away because we want a whole one? If it goes but a step in the right direction, is it not advisable to take that step? However much I may think we ought to go further, I am willing to go as far as this bill goes and let the future take care of itself.

If this does good, let us measure it by its own yardstick. Some argue that the present law is ample for this emergency. If that is true, then the present law gives the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to issue the kind of priorities mentioned in this bill. Those who make these arguments know that there is no such power in the present interstate commerce act as is contained in this bill, because this bill contains two elements, namely, the right to route coal to particular buyers and the right to so do it as to prevent extortion. Do you know why extortion may properly be curbed in this law? Let me state it briefly to you. It is proper to regulate extortion in coal for two reasons. First, can anyone tell me any way in which the transportation of the country can be maintained without coal or other fuel? The Constitution of the United States gives the Congress the right to regulate commerce between the States and with foreign countries, and, having this right, it follows as a natural and legitimate consequence that we have the right also, if coal is necessary for the maintenance of transportation, to do what is necessary in order to secure a production of this necessary commodity. Shall we admit the power to regulate in its minutest details interstate commerce and deny the right to maintain it? I shall later cite some cases bearing on this point. They say that we ought not to try to regulate extortion, that we ought to cleave to the sacredness of contracts. There is no contract made in the country anywhere, there is no contract made between men, that is so sacred that it does not yield to the higher rights of all the people of the country, to the public interest and the general welfare. There is no right of private property except the right which is subject to the greater right of the common good. There is no right given by the laws that does not yield to the greater right of the people where an extremity or emergency arises. There is no absolute right of private property. And especially is this true as to those things absolutely essential to the needs of human society.

There are those who talk about the fact that if we do this we will shatter the Constitution, we will depart from the paths of our fathers, and no longer follow the safe paths which they marked out for us; that the Constitution is in danger. When I think of them and think of the possible consequences that may follow this emergency, I am inclined to say, as I have said before in this House, that so far as I am concerned, I would rather have a people without a Constitution than a Constitution without a people. [Applause.] What is the Constitution? What is it made for? Do we not have the general powers that every people have? If an emergency confronts us, do we not have the right and power to meet it? Reason affirms it, common sense declares it, and our Supreme Court has so held on numerous occasions.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] spoke of wagon mines, as did his colleague [Mr. BLAND], stating that these wagon mines would be affected. But where is there anything in this bill that so says? The bill gives to the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to issue priority orders. Does it say that they must be issued as to all persons? Does it say that they must be issued exactly alike and on similar terms? The issue is with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Interstate Commerce Commission has to deal with the matter according to the particular facts surrounding that priority order which is issued.

They say the bill does not get to the middleman, that it does not affect the one who is the real grafter, the man who is causing most of the trouble. Why does it not? It does. The bill provides by most stringent remedies, even going to the extent of imprisonment in the penitentiary for these things. It provides that anyone giving or receiving any concession in car-service priorities in violation of a rule of the commission, or anyone who shall get a priority order through fraudulent means, or anyone who shall have obtained coal on a priority order, and who disposes of it for some other purpose than that mentioned in the priority order, shall make himself liable to punishment. What is the procedure in this matter?

If the bill goes into effect and somebody wants to ship two cars of coal to a particular community, he gets a priority order making the application to ship them to a certain consignee for a certain purpose. Suppose he gets the coal and then he sells it to a broker for another purpose, or, being a broker, hawks it about and raises the price. He immediately lays himself liable to this provision which was put in by way of amendment, and, therefore, makes himself liable to the heaviest kind of a penalty. So that the bill does reach the middleman. It follows the coal from the mine to the consignee, and therefore has teeth in it, teeth which are sufficient for all purposes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If a gentleman here in Washington gets a priority order on the ground that he is furnishing householders in Washington with coal, and he gets 1,000 tons of coal and then charges 2,000 per cent profit upon it, where has he violated anything in the bill? He distributes it as he said he would do.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. He has not violated anything in this bill so long as he uses it for the purpose for which he bought it, but it is assumed that, so far as the distribution for the original purpose is concerned, the local jurisdiction will make the necessary laws to perfect that distributing process.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. It does not prevent the local profiteering?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Not if it occurs at the hands of those to whom it was consigned. But we can follow it in interstate commerce from the consignor to the consignee. We can do this: We can see that it goes to the right parts of the country, and in order to see that and that it is not all absorbed in the bins of those who are willing to pay fabulous prices for it, we can regulate the charges which are to be made to this extent.

Now, it has been said this is purely a price-fixing measure. It is not a price-fixing measure. It only carries the price fixing right to this extent, that if at any time it is found that extortion becomes a burden on interstate commerce, then the Interstate Commerce Commission has a right to so direct the flow of coal as to penalize those guilty of this extortion and thus probably secure the flow of coal in interstate traffic at reasonable prices.

Mr. YOUNG. If the consignee charges an unreasonable profit, can they not refuse to give him any more coal?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. They can.

Mr. YOUNG. And if they can do that, can not they tell him what profit he must ask for?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. They can exercise that power, of course. The question of the priority is fixed in the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but the price fixing is merely incidental to the general power which is conferred in this bill, namely, that of a means to circulate coal throughout the country and get it to those parts where it is needed most.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Is it not a fact, if the consignee has a priority order covering household delivery for the winter, that that delivery would be made from month to month, and if the first coal delivered were sold at an extortionate price he probably would not have a subsequent delivery of coal?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I think the gentleman is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Reference is made to the case of United States v. Cohen (255 U. S. 81), and it is claimed that under the reasoning in that case no penalties can be legally inflicted for a violation of this proposed act. That case held that the penalty clause of the Lever Act was too general; that inasmuch as it penalized anyone who should charge a price for food commodities that was "unjust or unreasonable," and whereas what was a just or reasonable price always depended upon circumstances, the section was indefinite and uncertain and incapable of enforcement. But this bill does nothing of the kind. It penalizes those who violate an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission or obtain such an order by fraud. Hence the penalty is inflicted for the violation of a definite duty plainly expressed by law and by the order of the commission.

Let me cite a few cases in support of my contention that this bill is fully within the powers of Congress and is violative of no constitutional provision.

Congress is the exclusive judge of when a national emergency has arisen. This has been repeatedly announced by our Supreme Court. One of the leading early cases was Legal Tender case (110 U. S. 421 (450)). In that case the court held that Congress having held that an emergency existed, paper money might be issued and made legal tender for all debts, public and private. The power to declare such an emergency was not questioned but freely admitted by the court.

In United States v. Gettysburg (160 U. S. 668 (682)) an act of Congress passed in 1894 was under consideration. This act provided for taking part of the field of the Battle of Gettysburg for a national park. There was express authority of law for such taking; but the court held that Congress having held the use of this land to be a public one, that judgment would be respected by the courts.

Again, in the very recent case of Block v. Hirsh (256 U. S. 155), the Ball Rent Act case, the power of the Congress to declare an emergency was upheld. In that case the Congress had passed a rent commission act, declaring that an emergency existed, growing out of the late war. In commenting upon this the court said:

> But a declaration by a legislature concerning public conditions that by necessity and duty it must know, is entitled to great respect. In this instance, Congress stated a publicly notorious and almost world-wide fact. That the emergency declared by the statute did exist must be assumed, and the question is whether Congress was incompetent to meet it in the way in which it has been met by most of the civilized countries of the world.

Invariably, in such emergencies, the courts have sustained the exercise of all necessary powers by Congress to meet such emergencies. In Block against Hirsh, supra, the right of Congress to pass such a remedial statute was upheld. The court there, after citing numerous authorities, said:

> These cases are enough to establish that a public exigency will justify the legislature in restricting property rights in land to a certain extent without compensation.

In Jones v. Perkins (245 U. S. 390), the Selective Draft Act case, the court sutained the right to send the militia out of the country on the grounds of the public necessity, although seemingly contrary to the letter of the Constitution. Again, in Missouri v. Holland (252 U. S. 435), this being a case in which the right of Congress to pass a law protecting migratory birds in pursuance of a treaty with Canada was in question, the court said:

> Here a national interest of very nearly the first magnitude is involved. It can only be protected by national action in concert with that of another power. * * * We see nothing in the Constitution that compels the Government to sit by while a food supply is cut off and the protectors of our forests and our crops are destroyed.

But it has been contended that prices may not be controlled in any way by the Congress. If they constitute a burden upon interstate commerce they may. I call attention to the recent case of Stafford et al. against Wallace, decided by the Supreme Court May 1 last, and not yet in book form. In that case, which was one passing upon the recent stockyards regulation act passed by Congress, Chief Justice Taft said, among other things:

> Another evil, which it was sought to provide against by this act, was exorbitant charges * * * in the passage of the live stock through the stockyards. * * * If they be exorbitant or unreasonable, they are an undue burden on the commerce which the stockyards are intended to facilitate.

The question of exorbitant charges was directly involved in that case.

Finally, I want to call your attention to the case of the United Mine Workers of America against The Coronado Coal Co., found in the advance sheets of July 15, 1922, on page 643. I read from page 657:

> Obstruction to coal mining is not a direct obstruction to interstate commerce in coal, although it, of course, may affect it by reducing the amount of coal to be carried in that commerce.

Then, on page 658, after the citation of numerous cases, this is said:

It is clear from these cases that if Congress deems certain recurring practices, though not really part of interstate commerce, likely to obstruct, restrain, or burden it, it has the power to subject them to national supervision and restraint.

That opinion was rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. On June 5, 1922.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not want to go further. In conclusion let me say this, gentlemen of the committee, that if we do not pass this act we have failed to do the thing that we can do which may be effective, which is the only thing presented to us, which comes to us with the recommendation of those in authority who have studied the subject, who have sweat blood over it for weeks, and who now ask at our hands this slight measure of relief for the American people. The people are expecting us to do something, and he who would obstruct the passage of this bill is refusing to do anything to bring to the people the relief to which they are certainly entitled. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. KRAUS].

Mr. KRAUS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KRAUS. Mr. Chairman, we have presented to us for our consideration a measure which is undoubtedly of greater importance than any proposed law presented to the Congress in peace times during many decades. I would call your attention to the fact that it was filed in the House last Saturday, brief hearings held on Monday, that the hearings only became available for use of the membership on Tuesday, and at the same moment we are asked to pass upon the momentous questions involved.

Undoubtedly every Member of this body is in sympathy with the purpose of the proposed legislation and desirous of taking every action that there is any reasonable hope would furnish fuel to consumers at a reasonable price.

The proponents of this legislation would have us believe that by denying transportation facilities to coal producers who do not sell their products at a reasonable price, determined by Government agency, we would be able to prevent profiteering in the country's fuels. I submit that efforts to fix prices have been found to be unworkable in practice, and that where it has been put in operation it has in fact resulted in lessened production and enhanced prices.

But before discussing this phase of the matter I have no hesitancy in asserting that there is no power vested in the Federal Government to fix prices of products of the people in peace times. We must keep in mind that the powers of the Federal Government are not so broad and so all inclusive as they are in war times, as the Constitution vests in the Federal Government the broad powers necessary for its use when the life of the Nation is at stake. Neither has the Federal Government the broad powers that are reserved to several States in this phase of the matter.

I shall not try your patience nor encumber the record by a dissertation on the legal question involved. It is obvious that the committee in reporting this bill was conscious and aware of the absence of power to directly fix price, because it has taken the indirect course of making a finding that a price was not in conformity with the reasonable price established as the ground for imposing an embargo or denying transportation facilities to an alleged offender. Clearly there is no expressed provision of the Constitution which would either authorize or permit price fixing, but it is sought to accomplish the purpose by an expansion of the provisions of the commerce clause of the Constitution.

My friends, I urge that you seriously consider the effect of the Federal Government adopting a price-fixing policy as a condition precedent to the right of entering commodities in interstate commerce. If the National Government has a right to fix the price of coal that may be transported from one State to another, it is easily conceivable that the Congress could and might pursue the same policy and undoubtedly would be called upon to do so in relation to wheat, live stock, cotton, and every other product of the farm and plantation, and in a very short time we will have a large element of organized society insisting upon just such action in relation to these products. Further, when we have once embarked in peace times upon this policy other large elements of every community would be rightfully clamoring that similar action be taken in relation to clothing, boots and shoes, and all other commodities that are essential and useful to human happiness and well-being, and we must not shrink from but must frankly recognize the inevitable logic of this policy. It means in finality that the Federal Government must undertake to fix compensation and wage of labor, as work is the major element of cost of commodities.

It is easy to believe that the chiefs of the Moscow government gleefully observe that it is seriously proposed by the American Government to embark upon a system of Government price control of commodities and labor, as that is basic in the Bolshevik system.

I should also remind you that the bill would add to the already numerous Federal agencies, carrying with it a horde of subordinate officers and employees to be paid out of Government resources, and give to this agency and its officers and employees unlimited bureaucratic power. As to the extent of the power conferred, this can be best and most briefly illustrated by the construction Mr. Aitchison, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, placed upon one of the clauses of the bill when he was interrogated at the hearing, when he said "It was a general catch phrase which was intended to take any effective procedure or method to accomplish the purpose of the act." In other words, my friends, the official who will be charged with enforcing this act will not look to the law for specific authorization and definition of his powers, but he and his associates are practically now contending that if this bill should become law they will be permitted to pursue any course that they now have in mind or they may hereafter desire to adopt. In effect its provisions are such that instead of being governed by the mandates of the law the Nation would be governed in this all-important matter by the whim, and I might almost say caprice, of an individual or an organization intrusted with the enforcement of the law.

I can conceive of no greater backward step in representative government than this policy of intrusting administrative officials with the right to determine broad basic policies rather than having them determined by the representatives of the people.

Naturally one should be cautious in the realm of prophecy, but our experience in price control of fuel is a matter of such recent history that I would remind you that we had the greatest orgy of abnormally high fuel prices during the period of Federal control during the war. We not only had unheard-of prices but inequitable distribution together with disorganization in industry, and at one time even complete cessation of industry in certain parts of the country because of orders of the Federal controller of fuels, together with all the deprivations incident to this situation. I might call your attention to the very clear statement on the subject of price fixing made by Mr. Edgar Wallace, of the American Federation of Labor, at the hearing, in which it is said:

As I understand it, the bill takes cognizance of the fact that nearly all the coal bins in the country are empty; that the bituminous coal miners have started to work, but that there is a danger, judging by past experience, that everyone will try to fill his coal bin completely immediately; that that will cause competition in buying or, in fact, a buyers' panic, and that there will be a runaway market in which the prices will go soaring; and that in order to avert such a situation, as I understand it, there are provisions in this bill that there shall be a coal distributor controlling it. As I understand it, it is provided that the industries shall get what coal they need immediately to keep them going, but that no one shall be allowed to get all the coal he desires or so much coal as to make it impossible for other people to get coal, and so, in that way, it is sought to avert a buyers' panic. We are in favor of that bill, or I would say, we are in favor of that much of the bill. We think it would have a tendency to eliminate the parasite from the industry that generally appears in such circumstances as the present—that is to say, the wash buyers, if you understand what I mean by that term. I mean the man who never does anything toward producing a ton of coal; the man who does not consume any coal; the man who fills no purpose but who in times of panic will buy a number of cars of coal, take a profit from it, and possibly pass it on to others who are just such buyers as himself.

I believe the bill could be made more explicit if it would outlaw just such purchasers as that. As I have said, inasmuch as the buying public or the coal consumers would be assured that the Government would see that they got coal as they needed it, and, recognizing that the bituminous coal industry can not only produce the peak demand but can produce 25 per cent more than the peak demand, I believe that that part of the bill will be sufficient also to protect the public. I want to say this, that I am not in favor of any fixation of prices at the mines or anywhere else. The reason I am opposed to that is based upon past experience. The experience is that the Government fixes a maximum price, and that maximum price immediately becomes the minimum price. Furthermore, the Government can not by its act confiscate the property of the citizen, and hence the mine that is not economical, or the mine that is inefficiently managed, or the high-cost mine, becomes the standard, and the cost of coal is raised instead of being reduced at any attempt at price fixation that the Government can make and keep within its powers granted by the Constitution. Now, I believe that by protecting the consumers from this condition or by averting fear, which is panic, and by making them recognize that the Government will see to it that they will get coal as they need it and when they need it, and the recognition of the fact that the industry is capable of producing plenty of coal, you will be able to prevent a runaway market. It will result in distributing the coal on hand as it is produced evenly over the country, and it will be beneficial. I want to say in connection with this that my fear of price fixation is based upon past experience. * * *

If that power is used to distribute the coal so as to insure sufficient coal for the needs of the people and to permit no one to grab it all, and thus cause a panic through competition in buying, the coal industry would be benefited. That is true, because otherwise a few people would fill their bins, or they would try to do it, and others would have to go without it. Then the business of those that would go without would be lost to us forever. No one would be injured by that use of the power of the Government, and I do not believe any question would be raised as to whether or not the Government has that right. The experience of the past indicates that some order in the distribution of coal is necessary.

You will note that Mr. Wallace does not undertake to discuss the legal questions involved but has most forcefully stated results of his observations and experience.

My colleague, Mr. SANDERS, has called the attention of the House to the text and character of a measure he proposes to offer as a substitute for the pending bill. Briefly you will observe that he proposes to somewhat enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission by describing conditions and circumstances under which embargoes may be authorized and priority in car distribution authorized, and eliminate the price-fixing phase of the bill. In other words, he proposes legislation clearly within the powers of the Federal Constitution, and I am confident that if it is enacted into law and cars are equitably distributed in accordance with its provisions so that each section of the country shall be accorded transportation in proportion to its population, character, and number of its industries that we will have a just distribution of the various fuel products to all sections of the country and the normal law of supply and demand will result in the expenditure of a much smaller gross sum for the fuel supply of the people during the coming winter than if we again embark on a fuel price-fixing policy under the control of a bureaucracy that knows no rule except its whim and pleasure.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, just previous to the 18th of August current the President of the United States decided that an emergency was either at hand or imminent. On the 18th of August he submitted a message to the Congress in reference to the situation. In that message, among other things, he referred to the need of doing something in the way of legislation to help the administration and the Government handle the difficult conditions which had arisen in respect of the railroads and of coal and fuel. He at that time suggested some sort of workable legislative machinery, and so forth.

But as soon as those who have been most prominent in the operation of the coal business in behalf of the Government came to suggest legislation or to draft a bill they were confronted with difficulties which they had hard work to overcome. That all resulted in the transmittal of two drafts of suggestions by the President of the United States to the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House. On the 23d of August, five days after the suggestions made to the Congress by the President, the letter which I wish to have the Clerk read was forwarded.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 23, 1922.

Col. SAMUEL E. WINSLOW,
Chairman Interstate Commerce Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLONEL WINSLOW: I am inclosing to you herewith copies of the draft of two measures which are designed to prevent or cure profiteering in the coal industry in the present emergency. These bills are the recommended suggestions of the voluntary presidential fuel committee which is headed by the Secretary of Commerce. I am inclosing to you herewith a copy of Chairman Hoover's letter in order to convey to you the viewpoint of those who have been called upon to deal directly with this problem. It is a confessedly difficult one. The limitation of constitutional authority on the one hand and the very great demand for Government activity on the other combine to make it a problem well worthy of the earnest and early attention of the Congress. It has been a long and tedious route to the resumption of coal production, and the shortage of stocks and the general anxiety has opened a field for profiteering activities which ought to be discouraged in every way possible within the limits of constitutional law.

Very truly yours,

WARREN G. HARDING.

Mr. WINSLOW. Transmitted with that letter was one from the Secretary of Commerce to the President, of the same date. I ask that the Clerk read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, August 23, 1922.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I inclose herewith two draft measures offering alternative bases for mitigation of profiteering and for better distribution of coal in interstate commerce during the present emergency.

We are advised that any direct legislation for the repression of extortionate prices has no constitutional basis. Therefore, three alternatives are presented in mitigation of the situation:

1. Voluntary agreement with operators and distributors of coal.
2. Extension of the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission in such fashion as to give positive priority to the movement of nonprofiteering coal.
3. For the Federal Government to enter the business of purchase and distribution of coal and by such competition to put the balance wheel in the price situation.

The necessary legislation for the latter two alternatives has been drafted under the direction of your presidential fuel committee, comprising representatives of the Departments of Commerce, Interior, Justice, and the Interstate Commerce Commission. This committee prefers the draft in which Federal authority is exerted through extension of the priority powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, this being less cumbersome, requiring less extension in the Federal organization and being more expeditious of application than the alternative plan through actual Government possession of coal. The committee is in agreement that the exertion of such powers in times of peace is highly distasteful, and can only be justified as a measure necessary to provide for the effect of a famine in so necessary a commodity.

We are deeply impressed with the fact that, due to the almost total exhaustion of coal stocks and the inevitable and growing shortage in transportation, that the difficulties of the country will be very great even with the resumption of coal production, and unless there is legislation enacted that will curb profiteering and will give control to distribution, there will be great suffering and difficulties during the period of readjustment.

The Federal fuel distribution, set up by this committee under Mr. Spencer upon a basis of voluntary cooperation between Government departments, State agencies, and the majority of operators of coal mines, is without funds for even incidental expenses, and without this agency it would be impossible at the present moment to maintain the essential public utilities and other services in the country. Even this service must shortly be abandoned unless provision is made by appropriation, and they can not expect to be successful in the rapidly tightening situation and in the face of reduced transportation facilities unless their authority is increased.

Yours faithfully,

HERBERT HOOVER,
Chairman Presidential Fuel Committee.

Mr. WINSLOW. After the receipt of those documents the chairman of the committee asked several of his associates on the committee privately to help him build up a bill. We labored for two days and a half, night and day, nearly, with the cooperation and assistance of everybody, either in person or by representation, who had had anything to do with the administration of the present coal crisis. We worked on that bill and brought out virtually what you have before you to-day, subject only to a few amendments in the committee.

On the night of the 25th of August, which was two days after the letter of transmittal was sent, the newspapers contained an interview purporting to reflect the utterances of a distinguished gentleman who holds high political position here or in the neighborhood, in which he gave out the statement that the President wanted to take over the railroads and take over the mines, as he first stated, and that that was to be the legislation sought from Congress. That stirred up a lot of confusion and annoyance in everybody's mind. In order that we might get the facts as to what we were really up against in the committee and ascertain if by chance the President had changed his mind, I communicated with him so that I might have documentary evidence to show where the committee was. The following letter, which I will ask the Clerk to read, will explain the situation as it was last Saturday.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 26, 1922.

Col. SAMUEL E. WINSLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLONEL WINSLOW: Thank you very much for yours of August 25. Quite without any regard to the apparent conflict between House activities and those in the Senate, which I am sure can be harmonized, let me express my gratitude to you and your associates for the promptness with which the House has taken up a rather indefinite recommendation and turned it into what I believe to be efficient legislation.

Gratefully yours,

WARREN G. HARDING.

Mr. WINSLOW. Yesterday afternoon a distinguished member of our committee—something of a wag, in his way, and rather a peculiar way at that—undertook to call the attention of the chairman of the committee and of the House to an apparently conflicting statement contained in an evening paper, which would indicate that the President on yesterday had "changed his mind again." Now, I have not a letter to bring forth at the thirteenth hour, as sometimes happens here [laughter], but I will pass my word to you, and you may take it for what it is worth, that this morning, in the presence of one of our committee, I telephoned to the President in order to get that report checked up. I wanted to get this presidential desire straightened out, because there are some people who claim to think that the President is feebleminded enough to change his mind between night and morning and morning and night. That is not so. He authorized me to say that he is as much in favor of this bill as he has ever been, and always has been heartily in favor of it, and, whether other legislation is imminent and necessary hereafter or not, he hopes this bill will go through, because he feels more and more confident every day that he can handle, and the administration can handle, the most flagrant cases and the greatest features of necessity through the operation of this bill, in accordance with its provisions.

I have said all that, Mr. Chairman, in order that we may know where the President stands in respect of this bill.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. No. I would like to; it would be great amusement; but I can not indulge. [Laughter.]

There are various elements of interest in connection with this bill.

We have heard a good deal about getting the coal out of the mines and soaking the poor operators, and the difficulties of controlling the middlemen, but those seem to have been dissipated into thin air by the reporting of real facts affecting the situation; but we have heard very little about distribution. There is a little bit of history in connection with the distribution business which is one of the real features of this bill. It is not enough to get coal out of the mines. It is not enough to get coal on the cars. It is not enough to ship it to the consumer. We must have it shipped to the right places. I have here some very interesting figures. I hope I will have time to state them. Coal is being shipped to-day far beyond the appreciation of the public. Query, Where does it go? Are the big fellows getting it? Is it being hoarded by somebody? If so, what are we going to do about it? Nothing, unless we pass legislation like this, that will allow somebody to control the destination of these cars. I have not the figures up to the last hour or two, but the great coal-carrying Pennsylvania Railroad has averaged per day in August, 1922, 4,450 cars of coal, as contrasted with 3,707 cars' average a year ago, an increase of more than 700 cars per day. The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad had a daily average in 1921 of 1,959 cars, and so far this month it has averaged 2,500 cars. The roads in the Pocahontas field had a daily average in 1921 of 3,852 cars. Already this month they have an average of over 5,000 cars a day. So I could go on. The Chesapeake & Ohio, the Norfolk & Western, the Louisville & Nashville, and other roads all show the same remarkable increase. Now, where is this coal going? Do we want an authority that can stick its nose into this thing and find out where the cars are going and arrange to send them where they ought to go, or are we going to have the great public clamoring for a bit of coal for a cook stove, or for its fireplace, or for its furnace, or for power to run the mills, and so forth, while all the while every day more coal is being shipped out and only the insiders know where it is going? This is a very important proposition, and the bill covers it and provides a method for controlling it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That by reason of the prolonged interruption in the operation of a substantial part of the coal-mining industry in the United States and of the impairment in the service of certain carriers engaged in commerce between the States a national emergency exists which endangers the public health and general welfare of the people of the United States, injures industry and business generally throughout the United States, causes extortion, limits the supply of heat, light, and power, threatens to obstruct and hamper the operation of the Government of the United States and of its several departments, the transportation of the mails, the operation and efficiency of the Army and the Navy, and the operation of carriers engaged in commerce among the several States and with foreign countries.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "States," insert "and by reason of the disturbance in economic and industrial conditions caused by the World War."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, this bill is severely criticized for two diametrically opposite reasons: First, because it goes too far to suit some; second, because it does not go far enough to suit others. Some oppose it because, as they say, it authorizes a Government agency to fix the price of coal shipped in interstate commerce. Others criticize it because it does not authorize the fixation of the price of coal within a State or in intrastate commerce. As is often the case, it is probably the part of wisdom with this legislation to take the middle course. Applying as it does only to coal shipped in interstate commerce, it is undoubtedly within the jurisdiction of Congress and constitutional. If it attempted to go further and was made to apply to coal after it loses its interstate character, it would be not only of doubtful constitutionality but it would subject Congress to the criticism of interfering with local matters and attempting to regulate what should more properly be left to the States.

It will be well for everyone to bear in mind that the legislation is not going to be a cure-all for all the ills due to a scarcity of coal. The Government can not produce coal by magic or by legislative fiat. The legislation will not make coal where there is none. It will not put coal into the bins of the consumers or supply the shortage due to the lack of production during the five months' strike in both the bituminous and anthracite fields. Neither will it provide railroad transportation. It can only help to keep down the price of the coal that comes within the reach of the consumer and to prevent the public and the consumers from bidding against one another during the scarcity.

After its enactment into law it will still be necessary for the consumers of coal, for a time at least, to economize in the use of it and to use substitutes for it in every way possible.

The proponents of the legislation hope that it will help to keep down the price of coal during the coming fall and winter not only to the big consumers in industry but to the individual domestic consumer as well, but in order to do that it will require the cooperation of the local authorities of the States with the Federal fuel distributer. Section 7 of the bill authorizes the Federal fuel distributer to cooperate with any agency of any State or political subdivision thereof. The importance of that feature of the bill should not be overlooked. Secretary Hoover emphasized it in his testimony before the committee. On page 17 of the hearings he is quoted as follows:

There are, of course, the inherent difficulties in the constitutional questions that make effective control of prices extremely difficult, because even assuming that this legislation can be made effective, there still remains a large field of action that will be required of the State authorities. I am advised that it would be impossible to restrain the price of coal produced for domestic consumption within the boundaries of the State by such action as here provided or any other action that I have yet seen proposed. Likewise it is doubtful whether or not it is possible to restrain speculation and the resale of coal moving in interstate commerce except through the authority of the State governments, and therefore any action taken requires a large measure of cooperation from the State authorities.

The authorities in several of the States are already cooperating with the voluntary Federal fuel distributer. Governor Miller, of New York, has called the legislature of that State together to pass additional legislation which he deems necessary and advisable. Yesterday I read in one of the daily papers this dispatch from Raleigh, N. C.:

RALEIGH, N. C., August 27.—North Carolina's corporation commission, authorized by Governor Morrison to direct the distribution of the State's allotment of coal, will fix a fair retail price for coal to the consumer in this State, and dealers who do not respect such prices will get none of the State's allotment, according to a statement issued by the governor to-day.

The authorities in other States are showing the same willingness to cooperate with the Federal authorities, and it will be necessary for all of them to do so if they are to protect their people from speculators and profiteering jobbers operating wholly within State boundaries.

As was stated by a recent press notice of the Federal fuel distributer:

The legislation before Congress can only control the price of coal moving over State lines—that is, in interstate commerce. The price of coal produced and consumed in a State, together with the charges which wholesalers and retailers within the State may make, the latter including even interstate coal, should be controlled by the State authorities. Therefore there can be no real control of profiteering unless the State authorities act.

I rose chiefly to emphasize the point that this legislation ought to be supplemented by the cooperation of the State authorities in order to protect domestic and other consumers who do not buy their coal directly from the operators, and whose coal is not shipped directly to them in interstate commerce. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON as a new paragraph:
SECTION 1——

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is this an additional paragraph or a substitute?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is an additional paragraph.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Then it should be numbered section 2.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think it is properly numbered.

The CHAIRMAN. The numbering can be taken care of subsequently, in any event. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON: Page 2, after line 11, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. If the President of the United States shall be of the opinion that he can thereby better meet the emergency, and whenever in his judgment it shall be necessary, he is hereby authorized and empowered to require any or all producers or owners of coal or coke, either in any special area, or in any special coal field, or in the United States, to sell their products, or any part thereof, only to the United States through such an agency as may be designated or created by him, and to make payment of the purchase price thereof to the producers thereof or to the person or persons legally entitled to said payment.

"The price to be paid for such products purchased shall be based upon a fair and just profit over and above the cost of production, including proper maintenance and depletion charges, the reasonableness of such profit, or cost of production, to be determined by such agency as the President may designate. If the price fixed by such agency for any such products purchased by the United States, as hereinbefore described, be unsatisfactory to the person or persons entitled to receive the same, such person or persons shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to said 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation, in the manner provided by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code. That upon notice from the agency so designated or created by the President to the producer or owner of coal or coke that his or its output or supply or any part thereof is required by the United States, as hereinbefore described, such producer or owner shall thereafter deliver his coal or coke, or such portion thereof as may be required by the United States, only on authority of the agency designated by the President. The President may require any such producer or owner of coal or coke to sell his entire supply or output to the United States, in which case such producer or owner shall upon notice cease shipments of said product upon his own account and transmit to such agency all orders received and unfilled, or partially unfilled, showing the exact extent to which shipments have been made thereon, and thereafter all shipments shall be made only on the authority of the agency designated by the President, and thereafter no such producer or owner shall sell any such product except to the United States through said agency, and said agency alone is hereby authorized and empowered to purchase during the continuance of the requirement the output or supply of such producer or owner.

"The agency designated or created by the President may resell any such coal or coke so purchased under such rules and regulations touching the price, shipment, distribution, apportionment, and storage thereof among or to dealers and consumers as may be necessary to secure an equitable distribution thereof.

"Whenever the President shall find it necessary in order to secure an adequate supply of coal, he is authorized to requisition and take over for use and operation by the Government any mine or other plant in which coal or coke may be produced, manufactured, prepared, mined, or sold, and to operate the same. The United States shall make just compensation, to be determined by the President, for the taking over, use, occupation, and operation by the Government of any such mine or plant, or part thereof. If the compensation so determined be unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined by the President, and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to said 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation, in the manner provided by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code. The President is authorized to prescribe such regulations as he may deem essential for carrying out the purposes of this section, including the operation of any such mine or plant, or part thereof, the purchase, sale, or other disposition of articles used, manufactured, produced, prepared, or mined therein, and the employment, control, and compensation of employees. Whenever the President shall determine that the further use or operation by the Government of any such mine, or plant, or part thereof, is not essential for the national security or defense the same shall be restored to the person entitled to the possession thereof.

"There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $500,000,000, available until expended, for the purposes of this title, including payment of personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere. Any moneys received by the United States for the sale of any coal or coke may, in the discretion of the President, be used as a revolving fund for further carrying out the provisions of this title. Any moneys not used as part of such revolving fund shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"Any person who shall violate or refuse to conform to any order, rule, or regulation issued under the authority of this title shall upon conviction be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment of not more than two years, or both."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if he desires to offer this as a substitute to the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. No; I am offering it as a separate title after the first section.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment consists of separate sections separately numbered. The Chair would have to consider the whole as one section following the first section, if that is what the gentleman desires. If that is the case I think the gentleman should modify his amendment in that regard; that is, it should not be subdivided and numbered.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the numbering of the paragraphs or sections be corrected by the Clerk so as to make it one section.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, that the numbers be stricken out.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, before that is acted upon I want to reserve all points of order on it so as not to waive any rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be numbered as section 2 and the subsequent numbers will be stricken out.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against the amendment as not germane either to the section preceding it in the bill or the section following it, and as not being germane to the bill in its entirety.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the House is a bill to provide for the more equitable distribution of coal through a Federal distributer and the Interstate Commerce Commission, with the purpose of controlling it through the distribution of cars. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] sets up a Government purchasing agency, with capital to enable it to go out into the market and buy and sell coal. This agency is also authorized to commandeer and to requisition coal, and in connection with that power to seize not only coal in transit but at the mines, and to seize the mines themselves. With this agency the Government would resell the coal to the consumer. The subject is entirely different, as the Chair will see, from what the bill is we are now considering. It approaches it from an entirely different angle and sets up an entirely different plan, which is in no wise related to the general purpose of the bill as set forth in the title to the act and as contained in the various sections of the bill.

For that reason it seems clear to me that it violates rule 16, which provides that no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of an amendment. The authorities cited, both in the manual and also in Hinds' Precedents, seem to very clearly sustain the point that here is a different subject matter and that it can not be provided for by way of an amendment. For example, in an instance cited in volume 5 in Hinds' Precedents, section 5891, the bill authorized an investigating committee to investigate as to certain facts. An amendment was offered requesting an accounting on the subject matter by the Executive. The two were held not to be related. Furthermore, in volume 5 in Hinds' Precedents, section 5887, the bill authorized the establishment of a right of way, and an amendment was offered providing for purchase of the land for that right of way, and that was held to be not germane. In other words, it is a different method of going about a certain thing, following a different line, which is held not to be germane.

In section 955 of the Cannon manual—and this decision was made recently—on a ruling made by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, the proposition before the House was providing insurance for soldiers during the war upon the payment of premiums as they might become due. An amendment was offered that for two years insurance would be furnished without the necessity of any payment whatever, and that was held by the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. TILSON, not to be germane.

Another citation in the Cannon manual referred to a ruling in a proposition involving a general increase of pay for Government employees for the year 1918. An amendment was offered making it effective also for a part of the period of 1917. That was held not to be germane Referring again to the citation in volume 5, section 5887, Hinds' Precedents—I was speaking from mere recollection. The bill then pending authorized a railroad company to construct and operate a railway through certain territory. An amendment authorizing the Government to purchase the franchise rights, and so forth, was offered. The point of order was made that it was not germane, and the Chair—Mr. Speaker Reed, of Maine—said:

The Chair understands the Government does not grant the franchise but simply gives the right of way; it does not give a charter, and the Chair will have to sustain the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. JONES of Texas. In connection with the point of order that the gentleman made that it was not germane to the bill, I want to call his attention to section 5, which, after granting certain powers and certain authorizations, says:

and to take any other necessary and appropriate steps for priority in car service and for the equitable distribution of coal or other fuel so as best to meet the emergency, prevent extortion in prices charged for coal and other fuel, and promote the general welfare.

After authorizing the embargo and a number of other specific things it has a general provision that you can take any other proper steps. Suppose they found that it would be necessary to establish a selling agency; there would be an intimation there which would make this special legislation which the gentleman from Minnesota offers germane, that is, taking the necessary steps for the general welfare. I know that there are some specific designations in it, but there is a general provision.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The Interstate Commerce Commission is directed to receive and consider recommendations from the distributor and in its discretion to issue such order or orders for priority in car service, embargoes, and other suitable measures.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Go ahead and read the rest of it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota (reading)— in favor of or against any carrier or region, municipality, community, person, copartnership or corporation—

Priority or embargoes in favor of or against.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Those are the specific matters; following that you have a general authority—and to take any other necessary and appropriate steps for priority in car service and for the equitable distribution of coal and other fuel so as best to meet the emergency, prevent extortion, etc.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The entire section applies to priorities and embargoes to be issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. JONES of Texas. You have a specific recommendation for the specific thing you mention, and you follow it with a general authority.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That expression—to take any other necessary and appropriate steps—

being used with a number of other specific things relating to the same thing, the natural legislative construction would mean, I suppose, of a similar nature.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Exactly. The gentleman has stated it most accurately.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If it said "any other steps" and ended there, well and good, but it says "any other steps necessary for the equitable distribution of coal and the prevention of extortion." It might be necessary and appropriate to take steps along the line suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota in order to secure equitable distribution and promote the general welfare and prevent extortion. If it should be found that would be proper, at least it would justify the offering of an amendment further specifying particular acts in addition to the one mentioned.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I am quite willing to accept the statement of my colleague that this is a bill for the more equitable distribution of coal. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact, in the first place, that this is a piece of general legislation and that the rule of germaneness is usually applied with greater liberality to bills proposing general legislation than to appropriation bills or bills raising revenue. I call the attention of the Chair to the very general character of this legislation. It starts out by setting up what the committee evidently conceives to be a very great emergency. It sets forth that this emergency endangers the public health and the general welfare of the people of the United States, injures industry and business generally throughout the United States, causes extortion, limits the supply of heat, light, and power, threatens to obstruct and hamper the operations of the Government of the United States and of its several departments, the transportation of the mails, the operation and efficiency of the Army and the Navy, and the operation of carriers engaged in commerce among the several States and with foreign countries. Can it be possible, in the face of an emergency such as this, which the committee itself sets forth so eloquently, that the House is limited in dealing with the emergency to the particular method which the committee proposes? It seems to me that the question asked of my colleague by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] with respect to the language of section 5 is particularly pertinent, and I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the committee itself has adopted language by an amendment to this section which negatives the very view which the gentleman from Minnesota takes. As the section was introduced it provided—and to take any other necessary or appropriate steps for priority in car service and in equitable distribution of coal.

The committee has amended that so as to make it read:

For priority in car service and for the equitable distribution of coal or other fuel so as best to meet the emergency, prevent extortion in prices charged for coal and other fuel, and promote the general welfare.

The language which the committee itself adopts clearly negatives the idea that this bill was intended to deal with this situation by one method—that is, by the method of issuing priority orders—because the language of this section clearly contemplates that the Interstate Commerce Commission may deal with the situation by other methods. It might be contended that if this bill did provide that but one method, namely, the issuance of priority orders, should be used to meet the emergency that it would not be germane to provide an additional method, but the language of the bill itself does not contemplate that the commission shall be limited to the single method of issuing priority orders. It clearly contemplates that additional action shall be taken in some form, such form apparently as the commission itself may determine, to carry forward through the various stages of distribution the action which the commission may take.

My contention is this, that this is a general bill, not limited to dealing with this situation by one method, but proposing general authority by which the emergency shall be met, and that it is germane to a bill providing general authority for the meeting of this emergency to provide some additional authority for meeting it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I shall not burden the Chair with any extended discussion. In the consideration of this matter I think the Chair should have in mind, and no doubt he has in mind, this question: Is the subject matter of the proposed amendment germane to the subject matter and the object sought to be attained by the original bill? I do not at all think that a fair consideration of the substitute and the original bill will bring to the thoughtful mind the idea that they aim at the same purpose. What is the purpose to be attained by the original bill? Is it to get coal, to acquire coal, to sell coal? The only object to be attained by this is to distribute coal, and to get it to the various parts of the country, and in order to distribute it certain machinery is erected which has no other function and no other power except the function of distributing. What does the amendment seek to do? In the first clause it provides that the President is authorized, if in his judgment it is necessary, to require the producers of coal to sell their products only to the United States and through an agency set up by the United States. If, as set out in the succeeding sections of the amendment, they do not do so, he can then by certain proceedings take over those mines, pay for them, or, if he can not settle with them, give them the right to recover against the United States some portion of the value of their property itself which is taken over, and he can then sell direct to the people of the United States the product of the mines. What is that scheme? It is a scheme of purchase and sale of an entirely different nature than that proposed in the bill. It is, in other words, Government operation, Government ownership, Government acquisition. How far removed is that from the plan contemplated in the original bill, which contemplates private ownership and private operation, only controlled by the Government itself. So that the two subject matters are as far distinguished as is the North and the South Pole. One is regulation, the other is operation, and assuredly they can not be held to be germane.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Will the gentleman yield? Is it not a fact that section 5 gives the Interstate Commerce Commission the very rights that are asked for by the amendment?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Now, look at section 5 sensibly and reasonably. Having in mind the title of the bill, having in mind its general purposes, what does the section authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to do?

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. I would like to give you my view of it. It gives every right of purchasing the mines and operating them, and fixing the wage of the miners, and everything connected with the mine.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Now, if the gentleman has finished, I will attempt to finish what I have to say.

Section 5 of the bill provides this: That the Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized and directed to receive the report of the distributer, and, in its discretion, to do what? Mind you, the reports are about the distribution of coal and the recommendations are about the distribution of coal. Now, what is the Interstate Commerce Commission to do? It issues such orders for such priority in car service, embargo, and other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier or region, municipality, community, copartnership, or corporation, and to take any other necessary and appropriate steps for priority in car service and for the equitable distribution of coal. In other words, it may take any necessary steps to distribute coal; not to buy and sell it, or to own the coal mines, but to distribute coal. It seems so evident that I can not see how any strong contention can be urged that it is germane. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] says, "Can not Congress do this?" Surely Congress can do it if an emergency justifies, but not as an amendment to this bill on a different subject.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me when the gentleman discusses the question of the distribution of coal a natural incident would be a provision to buy and sell. There are distributing agencies all over the country. There are coal agencies in my town, for instance, that distribute coal. But there is not one of them that does not find it necessary in order to carry out the business of distribution to purchase and sell coal. In fact, it is about the only way they can distribute coal. It is true that one of the powers conferred by this bill is priority in the distribution of cars. But the measure does not stop there. It goes further and grants full power to take any steps necessary in the distribution of coal. Now, if they found that the only practical way to secure the adequate, necessary, and appropriate distribution of coal was to purchase and sell the coal, it seems to me that would be a logical corollary of the proposition of distributing coal. But aside from that proposition, it does not end there.

There are provisions in section 5 which confer not only the privilege of granting priority in the shipment of cars but which go ahead and designate some four or five different specific things that the Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized to do, and then follows that with the blanket provision which says that the commission is authorized to take any other necessary and appropriate steps for priority in car service and the equitable distribution of coal or other fuel, so as to best meet the emergency. Now, suppose they should come to the conclusion that they could best meet the emergency in the distribution of coal by buying and selling that coal. Most assuredly, there is general power granted there.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] undertakes to provide the machinery for the exercise of that general power. He simply authorizes the establishment of the necessary machinery for the full carrying out of the general powers that are granted there, not only so as to best meet the emergency but also prevent extortion in prices charged for coal and other fuel and to promote the general welfare. It does not seem to me that language could be secured that would be broader or more general in its terms than that provision following the specific grant. There are four or five specific grants in the first part of this paragraph, followed by a general provision that any other necessary or appropriate steps for the equitable distribution of coal so as to meet the emergency, prevent extortion in price, and promote the general welfare. That is a general grant of power. It seems to me that it would be logical and germane to specify the machinery to carry out that general power. I am not undertaking to discuss the merits of the proposed amendment, but am confining my remarks to the question of the gentleman's parliamentary right to offer the amendment.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for the production, transportation, and distribution of coal. There is not a word in the bill about the purchase of coal; not a word in the bill about governmental control or operation of mines. It is perfectly apparent from a mere casual reading of the bill that the purchase of coal by the Government, that the operation and control of mines by the Government, are not contemplated by this measure. If you hold this amendment in order as germane under the language of section 5, if you hold that you can provide additional methods of distribution through the purchase of coal or the governmental operation and control of mines, then you are going to read into this legislation something that was never contemplated by its language. If you do it, you are going to stretch parliamentary precedents to an extent to which they have never been stretched before in this House during my experience.

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course, if it was in the bill I would not be offering the amendment.

Mr. HUSTED. Of course, that is perfectly true. But it is not contemplated by the bill. It is something entirely different. It is a new subject of legislation, entirely distinct from the matters under consideration. Now, section 5 provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission may take any other necessary and appropriate steps—for what? For priority in car service and for the equitable distribution of coal.

That section says nothing about the purchase of coal by the Government, it says nothing whatever about governmental operation and control of mines. The language of that section simply means that the Interstate Commerce Commission may take any other necessary or incidental steps within the authority of law to accomplish the general purpose set forth in the bill. Those purposes are the production, transportation, and distribution of coal. They are not the purchase of coal. They are not the operation of coal mines by the Government. They are something entirely distinct and something entirely separate; and if you uphold this amendment you will override the whole purpose and you will subvert the entire scheme of this legislation.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. In the ordinary business transactions of this country is not the purchase and sale of coal the most usual method of distribution?

Mr. HUSTED. That is not provided for in the bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am talking about the usual procedure or practice.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak for only just a moment on this point of order. I think this case is on all fours with the case on which a decision was rendered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], as chairman of the Committee of the Whole, on September 13, 1919. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota proposes an entirely new way. It is exactly the same proposition as if we were providing insurance for soldiers, where the original bill provided for the payment by the soldiers of the premium and an amendment was offered to give those premiums to the soldiers and that amendment was ruled out of order. This amendment is exactly the same proposition that was before us at that time. It is an attempt to accomplish a result by an entirely new method, and the point of order should be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The provision of our rules which is to be interpreted in this case is as follows:

No motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

"No motion or proposition on a subject different shall be considered germane." There have been many Speakers that have held that merely because an amendment offered referred to a particular subject that was under consideration in the bill did not necessarily make it germane. For instance, in the consideration of the food control law several provisions regarding the purposes for which food might be used were offered. One prohibited the use of any food substance for the purpose of manufacturing liquor. That was ruled out of order by the Chair as not being germane. So that merely because the matter here relates to coal would not bring it within the rule as germane, as that requirement has been interpreted by prior occupants of the chair.

The provision of the bill under consideration is for regulation regarding the transportation of coal. The object and purpose of it is to prevent if possible extortionate charges and to see that there is an equitable distribution of coal. I do not know how far it would be proper to go as considering an extortionate charge a part of transportation, but that has nothing whatever to do with the question under consideration. The subject and object and purpose of the bill is that which relates to the transportation of coal.

Now we have an amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota stating that if the emergency which is referred to in the bill under consideration exists or is shown to exist, then for purposes specified the President shall have power virtually to take over the mines and run them, because the requirement that the output of the mines be sold only to the Government is equivalent to taking over the mines and the operation of them by the Government. It would have no other foundation under the Constitution except that which would exist under the right of eminent domain, so that we really have under consideration a proposition here of whether or not it is germane within the rules to offer an amendment involving the proposition that the Government shall take over and operate the mines; whether such an amendment shall be considered as germane to a bill regulating the transportation of coal in interstate commerce. I do not think there can be any question under the authorities that such an amendment is not germane.

I want to call attention in this connection to a decision which was rendered a good many years ago, in 1898. This is the statement, and that is sufficient, I think, to indicate the full extent of it:

To a bill granting a right of way to a railroad an amendment providing for the purchase of the railroad by the Government was held not to be germane.

It seems to me that that is very nearly analogous to the case that we have before us to-day. "To a provision granting a right of way to a railroad an amendment was offered providing for the purchase of the railroad." Here we have a bill for the transportation of coal, to which is offered an amendment for the purchase, sale, and distribution of coal. Taking over and operating the mines would practically be the effect. It seems to me that decision would be pertinent to the question now under consideration. Let me also call attention to a case that is numbered 5891 in the fifth volume of Hinds' Precedents:

To a proposition for the appointment of a select committee to investigate a certain subject, an amendment proposing an inquiry of the Executive on that subject was held not to be germane.

Here we have a proposition for the control of interstate commerce by the Interstate Commerce Commission. To that is offered an amendment proposing that the President shall take charge of the entire matter, not only controlling the transportation but the production and sale of the coal. I think, also, that the case cited by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], citing the decision of Colonel Tilson, is directly in point, so that the Chair rules that the point of order is well taken and the amendment is held not to be germane.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SANDERS of Indiana: Strike out all after the enacting clause, all the first section, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SECTION 1. That by reason of the shortage in coal and railroad equipment and in order that the Interstate Commerce Commission may have adequate information concerning the fuel situation, the President is authorized for a period of one year from the date this act takes effect to appoint a Federal fuel distributor and fix his compensation. He shall perform his duties under the authority and direction of the President. It shall be the duty of the Federal fuel distributor to ascertain (a) the available supply of coal and whether there exists within the United States or any part thereof a shortage or impending shortage of coal or other fuel and the extent of such shortage; (b) the fields of production of coal and other fuel and the principal markets to which such production is or may be transported and distributed and the means and methods of distribution thereat; (c) the kind and location of the consumers; and (d) whether persons, firms, corporations, regions, municipalities, or communities should receive priority in transportation and distribution, and the degree thereof, and any other facts relating to the transportation and distribution of coal and other fuel; and when so ascertained the Federal fuel distributor shall make appropriate recommendations pertaining thereto to the Interstate Commerce Commission from time to time either on his own motion or upon request of the commission, to the end that an equitable distribution of coal and other fuel may be secured so as best to meet the emergency and promote the general welfare.

"SEC. 2. The Federal fuel distributor may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he may deem necessary to carry out the duties imposed upon him by this act and may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, district, or possession, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or any person or persons, and may avail himself of the advice and assistance of any department, commission, or board of the Government, and may appoint or create any agent or agency to facilitate the power and authority herein conferred upon him; and he shall have the power to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such assistants and employees, not in conflict with existing laws, and make such expenditures for rent, printing, telegrams, telephones, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other operating expenses as shall be necessary for the due and effective administration of this act. All facts, data, and records relating to the production, supply, distribution, and transportation of coal and other fuel in the possession of any commission, board, agency, or department of the Government shall at all times be available to the Federal fuel distributor and the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the person having custody of such facts, data, and records shall furnish the same promptly to the Federal fuel distributor or his duly authorized agent or to the commission on request therefor.

"SEC. 3. Until the President shall determine that the shortage of coal and lack of sufficient car service no longer exists and makes proclamation thereof the provisions of paragraph 12 of section 1 of the interstate commerce act shall not be effective.

"SEC. 4. Every person or corporation, whether carrier or shipper, who shall knowingly offer, grant, or give, or solicit, accept, or receive any concession or discrimination in respect of car service, as the same is defined in paragraph 10 of section 1 of the interstate commerce act, in violation of any order, direction, or rule of the Interstate Commerce Commission in respect thereto, or who shall by any willful misrepresentation or by any fraudulent device or means whatsoever, procure or cause to be issued any order or direction for priority under said act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $20,000, or imprisonment for a term of not exceeding two years, or both such fine and imprisonment.

"SEC. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $250,000, available until expended, for the purposes of this act, including payment of personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and all expenses incident to organizing the Federal fuel distribution, and not exceeding $50,000 thereof shall be available for reimbursement and payment upon specific approval of the President of expenses incurred since May 15, 1922, in connection with the matters embraced in the title of this act under authority of the President."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment as a substitute for the first section, with notice that I will move to strike out the succeeding sections as they are read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, during general debate I discussed the proposed amendment, and I shall not ask the indulgence of the House to speak over five or six minutes on the amendment to-day.

I should like to have, if I may, the attention of the members of the committee who favor the bill as it is, in order that in discussing this amendment I may call their attention to what I regard as a vital defect in the bill as it is drawn, so far as distribution is concerned.

We have a special section of the old interstate commerce act, which is now in force and effect, which reads as follows:

It shall also be the duty of every carrier by railroad to make just and reasonable distribution of cars for transportation of coal among the coal mines served by it, whether located upon its line or lines or customarily dependent upon it for car supply. During any period when the supply of cars available for such service does not equal the requirements of such mines it shall be the duty of the carrier to maintain and apply just and reasonable ratings of such mines and to count each and every car furnished to or used by any such mine for transportation of coal against the mine.

In other words, we have a specific provision in the act as it now exists which requires the Interstate Commerce Commission to give to all the coal mines an equal priority distribution of cars. This measure as it is drawn at present says that it shall not repeal any section of the law, but shall be supplemental thereto. It deals with coal and other fuel. Therefore by any sort of construction that provision would still be in force and effect, and would make the plan of distribution unenforceable so far as coal is concerned.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If the gentleman will get me more time.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I shall be very glad to assist the gentleman to get more time. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to subdivision 15, which is on page 13 of the act, wherein it is provided that the commission can set aside its rules and regulations, including the provisions made under subdivision 12.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman read the language where it says that it may set aside subdivision 12?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It says:

Whenever the commission is of opinion that shortage of equipment, congestion of traffic, or other emergency requiring immediate action exists in any section of the country, the commission shall have and is hereby given authority, either upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, at once, if it so orders, without answer or other formal pleading by the interested carrier or carriers, and with or without notice, hearing, or the making or filing of a report, according as the commission may determine: (a) To suspend the operation of any or all rules, regulations, or practices then established with respect to car service for such time as may be determined by the commission.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I am very familiar with that section.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Now, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in the case of Baltimore & Ohio Railway Co. v. Lambert Run Coal Co., 267 Federal Reporter, page 776, held that that gave it the power to suspend the provisions of subdivision 12.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Assuming that the court correctly decided the law, if it has been held that that gives them the power to suspend it, that criticism would not be directed to this bill; but in the amendment that I have offered I specifically provide that that section shall not be in effect during the emergency.

The amendment which I propose here gives the right to create this Federal Fuel Administration, and gives it all of the powers that the original act gives to the administration, and gives the administration the right to make the recommendations to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission under the existing law has all the power and authority, so far as distribution is concerned, so far as sending coal into any section is concerned, so far as priority is concerned, so far as embargoes are concerned, except that we do not in the existing law give the power to issue embargoes against individuals and corporations for the purpose of preventing them from shipping coal because they charge prices which the commission deems excessive. So that this amendment presents squarely to the House the proposition as to whether or not you want to favor the price-fixing provisions of this bill. In voting for the amendment which I have proposed you have the opportunity to give everything that this measure gives except the arbitrary power to prevent shipments in commerce of any coal which the commission thinks is of excessive price.

In the amendment I offer I am excluding from its provisions the power of the Federal Government to say to any individual who ships coal or any other of the numerous articles of fuel, "You can not ship because this department of the Government thinks you are charging too much for your commodity."

Mr. HOCH. The gentleman's substitute gives to the Interstate Commerce Commission no power in the matter of distribution which it does not now have?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. It does not.

Mr. HOCH. That, I understand, is the purpose of the gentleman's substitute?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The purpose of the amendment is simply to afford an agency which is not in the Interstate Commerce Commission to obtain a comprehensive grasp upon the fuel situation, to know all of the facts, to make all investigations, to know where to use the priorities, the right to distribute, the right to lay embargoes, the right to send coal into Minnesota if it is needed, and the right to send it to the Lake regions if it is needed, or the right to send it to New York if it is needed there. All of the powers authorized for distribution provided for in this bill proposed here are provisions which have for their purpose the issuing of an embargo against individuals who propose to ship coal at what the commission regards as an excessive price.

I strike out of the bill what I regard as the worst feature in any bill ever proposed in this House—to prevent people shipping in interstate commerce and fixing the price of a commodity. Because if you can fix the price of oil and coal and other fuel, you can fix the price of farm products, you can fix the price of boots and shoes in Massachusetts, you can fix the price of cotton in the South, and every other product. If you enter into that field you open the door for the whole question of price fixing. As conditions change people, those who regard themselves as consumers, will gradually organize against the producing region, because they are always in the majority, and fix the price of one commodity and then another and then another, and we will always be confronted with the proposition of fixing prices of commodities by legislation, and we will undertake to do away with the law of supply and demand. I do not think it is a good legislative policy. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if you have made up your minds that you want to pass an emasculated edition of this bill, which does nothing and gets nowhere, I advise you to vote for the Sanders amendment, which is as innocuous as anything can be. It does absolutely nothing but what the law now does. In many essential particulars he has eradicated thoroughly the thing that the American people would like to find out about the coal industry at the present time—why they are paying such extortionate prices and why there is such an inequitable distribution. He is undertaking to take away from the people the power that they have or might have under this act.

Look at it. I have the amendment in my hand. It authorizes a Federal fuel distributor. What shall he do? He finds certain facts and reports them to the Interstate Commerce Commission. What shall they do? Section 5 in the bill gives the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to act on these recommendations. The Sanders amendment has eradicated that provision.

So in the gentleman's amendment there is no power given to the Interstate Commerce Commission at all. He has simply appointed a new officer, who is to gather facts and report them to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Interstate Commerce Commission has exactly the same power that it has to-day. If I am wrong, let me challenge him now to deny it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Does the gentleman think that we have put in a new law a provision giving the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to use priority embargoes which they already have under existing law?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If they have the power to-day to do these things, why is the gentleman objecting to these provisions, which more clearly state it?

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will later if I have the time. I want to call attention to the penalty clause. Look at section 10 of the amended bill. Now, the gentleman goes along with the penalty clause until he comes to the italicized portion of the line, page 7, and then he stops. That is the provision that gets the middleman, the fellow who kites the price of coal, and then he strikes that out. He not only strikes that out but the proviso that you find in section 10. What is it? The first part of the penalty clause is aimed at the corporation or the person in the way of a fine. You can not send a corporation to the penitentiary. The second part contains the provision for the punishment of the individual member of the corporation, but he cuts that out.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield? The imprisonment is taken out of that section and put into the first section.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. There is not a word in the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana that authorizes any court to send a man to the penitentiary or jail if he violates any orders. Now, there is a way to get at the corporation by fine. This is done for a purpose. Let me tell you gentlemen of the committee that the whole trouble about this proposition from the first has been because the Government and the people of the United States can not find out the facts about the coal industry. The National Coal Association, composed of over 50 per cent of the coal producers of the United States, have willfully and persistently prevented the United States from acquiring that information. Recently when the Federal Trade Commission wanted to get information this National Coal Association brought injunction proceedings against them in the District of Columbia courts and enjoined them from getting it as to the cost of production and distribution. This same National Coal Association, or those who control it, after having enjoined the Federal Trade Commission from getting the information went into the State of Indiana and on an entirely different pretense enjoined the State authorities of the State of Indiana from getting similar information.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. Why did we pass a fact-finding commission bill the other day? Do we need another one now?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. We passed a fact-finding commission bill which it will take some time to get into operation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. We passed a bill authorizing the commission to find facts. It will take them some time to find those facts. Why were they to find the facts? They were to find them for the advice of Congress, so that we might legislate, if we thought proper.

Mr. VAILE. Are they going to find them any faster under this bill?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. In this we set up a Federal fuel distributor, and he can take action from such facts as are within his possession, make necessary recommendations to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it can act promptly in this emergency, whereas if you have to wait for the Congress to legislate as the result of information which comes to it from the fact-finding commission, you will not do anything to help out in this crisis. The thing we are trying to get at this time is action.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. In the last portion of section 4 of the amendment which I propose, the gentleman will find this language:

shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon the conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 or more than $20,000, or imprisonment for a term of not exceeding two years, or both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; but let us read the whole section:

Every person or corporation, whether carrier or shipper, who shall knowingly offer, grant, or give, or submit, accept, or receive any concession or discrimination in respect to car service as the same is defined in paragraph 10 of section 1 of the interstate commerce act, in violation of any order, direction, or rule of the Interstate Commerce Commission in respect thereto, or who shall by any willful misrepresentation or by any fraudulent device or means whatsoever procure or cause to be procured any order or direction for priority under said act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, etc.

So far as that is concerned, you leave out the real language of the section, which is in the italicized portion in the bill now before the House, viz, to get at the fellow that gets the coal and raises the price on the people, and that man you do not touch by your amendment. It is along the same line that has been followed consistently by the majority at least of those who operate these great mines of the country in which they do not pretend or propose to let the people of the United States know the facts about this industry.

Mr. Chairman, we ought to put some teeth in this proposition. Let us not pass some foolishly innocuous thing that gets us nowhere. Let us try to do something, at least. As I have heretofore stated, if we pass the original bill, it has some sort of teeth in it, it gets somewhere, and I contend, and I think I contend rightfully, that there ought to be power in the people of the United States in this emergency or in any other emergency to control extortion in the United States in such a necessary thing as coal, and if that is the issue we might as well meet it now. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—ayes 36, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Because of such emergency and to assure an adequate supply and an equitable distribution of coal and other fuel, and to facilitate the movement thereof between the several States and with foreign countries, to supply the Army and Navy, the Government of the United States and its several departments, and carriers engaged in interstate commerce with the same during such emergency, and for other purposes, the President shall appoint a Federal fuel distributor and fix his compensation. He shall perform his duties under the authority and direction of the President.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 20, strike out the word "He" and insert the words "Said distributor."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DENISON: Page 2, line 19, after the word "appoint," insert a comma and the words "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say only a word. I do not think there could be any more important official under our Government than the man who is to be appointed fuel distributor if this bill becomes a law. He will have absolute and dictatorial powers practically over one of the greatest industries of the country. Here is a proposition to authorize the President to appoint a man with that extraordinary power, and the usual provision is not included in the bill that his appointment shall be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. There is nobody in this House who has any more respect for or confidence in the President than I; but I do not think we ought to pass any law authorizing the President to appoint this kind of an official without the usual provision for confirmation as contemplated by the Constitution in important offices of this kind. It will be a kindness to the President to do this. I think it will protect him in the future. If this official is approved and confirmed by the Senate, it will in my judgment in a short time at least help to save the President from a great deal of improper criticism. In my judgment you will be doing the President a kindness to put this provision in the bill. We have a provision of law which requires the appointment of small postmasters to be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and the other day we passed a bill providing for the appointment of a commission to make merely an investigation of the coal industry, a fact-finding commission. In that we took the precaution to provide, as I remember, that those officials should be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. I do not see why we can not take that same precaution in this bill which provides for the appointment of an official who will have so much greater power and responsibility. I think it is a bad precedent to pass a bill of this kind appointing an officer of this power without that precaution. It think it would be a kindness to the President and save him future criticism.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's suggestion to my nostrils is redolent of the idea of hope of delay in getting this legislation into action. Nobody would object to having the Senate pass on the appointment of this man, but if there is anything at all about this legislation that is worth while, it is prompt action in the way of putting it into operation. We hold our brothers at the other end of the Capitol in high esteem, but even though of the same general family we realize that at times they are not any quicker than lightning itself, and we do not want to run the risk of monkeying this up by having some political business perhaps mature and ripen about the time the appointment goes to the Senate from the President, and having the whole thing set aside. At worst we hope that this will be a matter of only a few months; at best we hope that it will be a matter of weeks.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman noticed the newspaper account that the Senate will adjourn shortly after the passage of the bonus bill and the coal regulatory bills? If that is a fact, the President not being able to appoint until these bills are passed by both Houses, it would naturally hold up the activity of this fuel distributor if he is to be appointed with the consent and advice of the Senate.

Mr. WINSLOW. That is one of many possible reasons why we should avoid all features which might cause delay. The point is, we want to get it through. If it is worth having at all, we want it at the earliest possible moment. The whole business centers around the President of the United States as an emergency. To pass the bill and then put it in a pocket, where it may not be taken out until the whim of somebody or another permits it, and so delay the operation of the legislation, would be most unfortunate.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a division on that.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 17, noes 80.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have listened loud and long to the arguments pro and con in connection with this bill; to the recitals of facts and fiction; to the statements regarding conditions, and have heard pointed out the necessity for more laws when the evidence and facts submitted and the necessity of the hour points to the fact that we are suffering from an overdose of weak and ineffective laws or we would not be in the situation we are now in. I shall support this bill only as an emergency step.

Being a new Member and unfamiliar with the exact status and application of the various laws, of the different governmental agencies, of the multitudinous variety of boards, of the information in facts and figures now safely sleeping in the 57 different varieties of bureaus and agencies grown into a great bureaucracy, but admittedly of no account, I have sought to discover where we are nationally; I have, through faithful attendance at the daily sessions and attentively listening to the discussions, and at the hearings before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, sought to learn the present status of the different elements that go to make up the situation we are now in, and my hasty impressions—and what are my impressions must be the impressions of the great third party in all disputes between organized capital and organized labor, the unorganized public—are as follows:

1. An extreme crisis now confronts us in coal mining.

2. An extremely critical situation confronts us with the railroads.

3. There is no present law or agency of Government that can reach out its strong arm to effectually intervene.

4. It has been found necessary to pass—

(a) The Winslow fact-finding law.

(b) It has been found necessary to try and add temporarily to the power and authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission through the bill now before the House.

We unsophisticated people wonder why it is necessary to take so many bites at the cherry. The great majority of our people, with only average minds like my own, have learned through the stress of war to look to the Federal Government to meet any critical situation. Our present difficulties are largely a war heritage, the result of weakness and vascillation in high places, and in this publicly declared national emergency the people are looking to the Congress, neither in a mood to brook delay nor to stand for technical objections. We have heard some of our leaders admit lukewarmness for this bill, with no other in sight, and I can hear the cry of the people, "How long, oh Lord; how long!" [Applause.]

We have listened to the President's recital of the futility and failure of his painstaking, carefully considered, honest efforts to bring organized capital and organized labor together, both in the railroad world and in the coal industry. Suffering, deprivation, lawlessness, anarchy, and murder have left their unwholesome trail in these struggles. It seems to me in the light of such experiences it is time for the Congress to get busy, not with temporary expedients alone, but with a larger, constructive, permanent measure. The great American public is looking to the Congress to squarely meet the issue as to whether these great contests between organized capital on the one side and organized labor on the other are going to be allowed to continue to run their rampant courses, irrespective of law and order and utterly oblivious of the great unorganized public, the third party in issue. [Applause.]

The history and record of organized capital is far from a pleasant one to contemplate. Far too often it has been characterized by utter disregard of law, by selfishness, by avarice and cunning, by trickery and device, by trying to get the best of organized labor at all hazards, and because of these acts, repeated over and over, it has been found necessary more and more to bring its actions under the rules of law and order and common honesty and decency. Organized labor, too, has suffered from its extremists and radicals, and the time has now come when, in order to preserve the great good that has been wrought through organization, organized labor itself must cooperate in placing itself under the law.

It seems to me that with legislation to meet these emergencies passed, our great far-seeing leaders, familiar with all that has passed, in the light of experience should address themselves seriously and continuously to the highly patriotic task of wiping off from our statute books all the weak and ineffective laws that now cumber them, the laws that serve as a basis for the rearing of impossible labor boards and other governmental agencies that have not stood the acid test of these times, and in their places, that shall know them no more, should be reared a strong, full-powered, mediatorial court that can meet such emergencies and situations.

It is true that many if not most of the strikes and lockouts occur before the matters in dispute have been thoroughly threshed out. Even the present controversies in the railroad and coal fields find the matters now in issue far afield from the original declarations of both sides. As a first step in the settlement of any dispute or controversy we need an accurate and impartial statement of the facts—that is, the questions of labor, of costs, of living conditions, of rights properly accruing to the older employees, and so forth; of the policies of the employers; and we must give to such mediatorial court that we should rear at this time such full and complete authority that this court can examine books, summon witnesses and compel them to testify under oath, that can call in the officers of all organizations, incorporated or not, and individual employees, that can compel all organizations to keep their books and records of receipts and disbursements in such a way that an examination will reveal the entire history of money received and disbursed; of those employed directly or indirectly; and the failure to keep such records and to furnish them to the Government should be made a crime and personal punishment meted out on conviction, not alone a fine but by imprisonment as well, for it is vitally necessary that the Government should have all the facts in order to render justice to all.

Many of our American States have provided laws and reared agencies of public investigation, mediation, and arbitration in labor disputes; and no one has studied the records of the agencies in these States but what will admit there have been substantial and lasting results, especially through mediation.

In Massachusetts, for instance, their board is obliged by law to offer mediation when notified by either party or by local authorities, and in many cases this board intervenes as a matter of course.

In New York the law requires that some officer or agent shall proceed promptly to any locality where there is a dispute or controversy and seek by mediation to effect an amicable settlement of the controversy. Ohio has a similar law, and good results have been obtained.

If it is not necessary, and controversies and disputes can be settled, the Government should retain, unpublished, the results of investigation; nor should the Government in any controversy seek to assign the blame. Let it give to the general public the facts in any dispute that can not be settled through mediation or conciliation, and it can rest assured that the judgment of the people will correctly appraise those facts.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I can not yield just now. When I get through I will be glad to do so.

The rights of men and women to organize to better their conditions or to bargain collectively are fundamental rights, and the Congress should not seek to intervene, abridge, or try to hinder same. The right to strike is not in issue, but there are certain fundamentals that must be instilled into all our minds. We must guarantee to everyone the right to work or not to work, as they choose, but the right of anyone to labor when there is some one willing to employ him or her at an agreed price is as much a sacred right, to be backed up by the full strength of our Government, as any right. [Applause.]

We should write a new law that rears this mediatorial court, that defines the principles of collective bargaining, that sets up the machinery for conferences regarding differences between employers and employees, that makes it compulsory for organized labor and organized capital before a strike is called to submit their statement of grievances to this Government agency that should be formed; that is the absolute need of to-day. If this Congress, in the light of the last few months' experience, can not evolve through law such a court and prevent situations such as we are now in, or will not, then every Congressman, be he Republican or Democrat, who refuses to cooperate to that common-sense end should be retired and men of vision, appreciative of our situation and the crisis now here, put in their places. The Government fails—yes, civilization fails—when it fails to provide a court where justice and humanity can join hands to the end that indefensible strikes be banished from this fair land. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the indulgence of the gentlemen of the committee for a moment. What I may have to say may seem rather ungracious after the splendid speech we have just listened to, but nevertheless I will take a chance.

There are many Members here who have come from all over the room to me quietly and asked if I would not arrange to shut off the speaking. That is not a pleasant thing to do, and I am not disposed to do it, but there are a great many here who would like to see this bill put through to-day after an ample discussion directed to the bill only. So with no hard feelings toward anyone and for the purpose only of facilitating the passage of the bill, and that alone, I would like to give notice that hereafter, unless under some special provocation, which I can not now anticipate, I shall feel obliged to object to any extension of time beyond the five minutes provided for by the rule.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: On page 2, line 20, after the word "distributor," insert "to serve for a period not exceeding six months."

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I wish to read in that connection also an amendment which I will offer if this one should be adopted. That is, after the word "President" in line 22, to provide:

The President shall have power to appoint a successor for a like term, and an additional term thereafter, if the emergency still exists; such additional appointment shall, however, if the Senate be at the time in session, be made by and with the consent of the Senate of the United States.

Now, it seems to me, if the members of the committee will consider it, that there ought to be a limitation. This is the appointment of a person to an office indefinitely. There is no limit to the term whatsoever, and the only termination that could possibly come would be when the President, under the language of one of the sections of the bill, may proclaim that the emergency is ended. I think a period of six months ought to be sufficient to cover the emergency, but the next amendment offered will provide that if there should be a continuance of the emergency he can appoint a successor. But this ought to be put under some limitation. While we have all confidence in the President of the United States, as some one said in his remarks yesterday, no one can tell who may succeed him. It has been prophesied here that he will not succeed himself; that some other man will be President. Who can tell? This is permanent legislation. This is not simply an emergency bill, to be ended at a given period, but is a bill to be written into the statutes of the Nation and remain there. I think, therefore, there ought to be provided some definite limitation to the term.

Mr. WINSLOW. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has not an amendment to suggest later on which would in any way affect this?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I have one or two simply making the correction in other parts of the bill that ought to be made to put the bill in other respects in conformity with this provision, but not making any change otherwise in the purpose or plan of the bill.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I think there is much in what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] has to say about the limitation of the term of office. But if it is a forerunner of changes that may come long after it may be a different matter. The committee, I think, would not offer objections to a six months' arrangement, but I think it would not be a happy thing to leave it in the hands of the Senate.

Mr. SNELL. Along the line of suggestion, could we not strike out section 9 of the bill? That provides that any other President at any other time may determine that an emergency exists.

Mr. WINSLOW. That is another point. When we come to debate it, I think we will find there is more than one side to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has been stated that even if the anthracite coal situation should be settled to-morrow and the mining of anthracite should be resumed in full force, there will not be sufficient anthracite coal mined in eight months to meet the annual output that has been the average heretofore.

If such is the fact, I can conceive of a situation where this coal distributor might have need for functioning six months from date. I should think that if the gentleman would put it at a year there would not be any possibility of his having any desire to function further; but six months, I think, is entirely too short by reason of the situation in the anthracite field.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the subsequent amendment puts it in the power of the President to appoint for an additional six months, and then an additional six months, and surely any emergency that is going to continue that long ought to come under the purview and action of Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield again, I wish to say that in the bituminous situation the present understanding extends only to April 1. There is a commission to try to make some arrangement in January so as to adjust those rates of pay after April 1, but that would be the present emergency continuing. There would be no new emergency, because the present emergency would be continuing, and the President would not have the authority to declare the existence of a new emergency when it is the old emergency under which we are existing.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I would like to register the opinion that the committee is of a mind that the proposed amendment be not adopted.

Mr. ROSSDALE. Mr. Chairman, the country faces a dangerous situation by reason of the long-drawn-out strike in the coal fields, and unless some decisive action is quickly taken disastrous consequences will inevitably follow. I do not believe I am making any alarmist statement when I say that the situation is desperate. Already industry is shutting down. From various parts of the country come authentic reports of curtailment of industry because of lack of coal. Each day newspaper reports tell of threatened and impending closings of large industrial plants.

Throughout the country various States, municipalities, and communities are creating emergency organizations, such as coal commissions and fuel administrations, to purchase or seize or control the available coal supply in their territory; but unfortunately the available coal supply is so low that in my opinion their functioning will be valueless.

We have sat idly by during the many weeks of this cessation of coal mining while the mine operators and the striking coal miners have been fighting and rejecting the suggestions of President Harding for a settlement.

In the beginning Congress kept aloof and very properly did not interfere, believing and hoping that a settlement would be reached without interference by the Government. As it continued and the President's efforts at mediation proved ineffective, the country naturally looked to Congress for relief and Congress has been loath to interfere, but, gentlemen, the time for hesitation has gone by. It is no longer an academic question of whether the Government by legislative action should interfere in industrial disputes between employers and employees, but rather a simple question of providing an important necessity of life, for we must mine coal now to sustain human life in our Northern States during the coming winter.

If we are to prevent want and suffering all over the land, both in the North and South, even before the winter's cold shall have come upon us, we must mine coal now in order to keep our factories and mills working. If we are to keep our railroads and steamships in operation we must mine coal now, and if we are to enable our public utilities to furnish the necessary light, heat, and power we must mine coal now. In such an emergency it is plainly the duty of the Government to act.

It seems to me unthinkable that the disputes of a minority—coal miners and coal operators—shall be permitted to endanger the great majority of the people. I am in favor of this bill "to declare a national emergency to exist in the production transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributor, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel."

It has been said that this measure is unconstitutional and that some of its provisions would not stand the test of the courts. But that contention is usually made when any legislation is proposed to which there are strong interests opposed to its enactment. When logic and reason dictate a certain course of action, then the Constitution is often conveniently invoked as a safe haven of refuge and shelter.

The majority of the committee who drafted this bill are lawyers, and I believe are competent to draft a constitutional measure, and hence I believe it is constitutional. For myself, I will say that I am in accord with the gentleman from Illinois who stated here this afternoon that "I would rather have a people with a Constitution than a Constitution without a people."

It is unfortunate that this strike, with its resultant industrial upset, occurred at this time, for we were just getting the better of the long business depression that set in after the inflated post-war boom period of 1919. The labors of this Congress to bring the country back to normal conditions were commencing to bear fruit. The business tide was turning and business conditions throughout the country were rapidly improving. Merchants everywhere were reporting increased sales. There was a resumption of activity in all lines of industry when this coal strike came upon us.

I believe we ought to have a law with teeth in it that will provide a medium to prevent a recurrence of industrial wars that are so far-reaching in their consequences as to affect the very life of the Nation.

A somewhat similar situation confronted the country in 1902 during the strike in the anthracite coal fields. At that time anthracite coal was more generally used than now, and the paralyzing effect of the strike was countrywide. President Roosevelt then also tried mediation, and failing in that method, brought the strike quickly to an end in his characteristic way by calling the mine operators and owners together, giving them the ultimatum of settling the strike within a limited number of hours or else he would use all the powers and compelling force of the Government against them.

He did not have any special legislation by Congress, but he was nevertheless able to bring the operators to terms. We had no Federal reserve banking system then, and it is said that Mr. Roosevelt simply used strong-arm methods by his ultimatum to the mine owners to settle at once or he would instruct the Secretary of the Treasury to withdraw all Federal funds from the banks that were Government depositories and controlled by them, and if that was not sufficient he would request Congress for the necessary legislation to seize the mines and operate them. His ultimatum had the desired effect, and the strike was quickly settled.

I regret that this bill does not give to the President the discretionary power to seize and operate the mines, if in his judgment such extreme action becomes necessary. If the President were given such discretionary power, in all probability it would never become necessary to use it, but it would have the moral effect of averting or ending such industrial wars.

I would offer such an amendment, but under the rules of this House it would be out of order, as not germane to the bill. It is regrettable that the committee did not include such a provision in the bill, which, in my opinion, is lacking only in this. If the President had such power there would not be these daily reports of strike settlement. Instead there would be actual, instant settlement.

It is very evident that the principal objection of the opponents of this bill is the power it gives to the Government through distribution and regulation to fix prices. It is not a direct price-fixing measure, although it will by indirect action fix prices and prevent extortion by mine operators and dealers.

If we are to enact legislation to meet this crisis, by all means let there be teeth in it; otherwise the price of coal will be beyond the ability of ordinary folks to purchase it. Already the profiteers are reaping a harvest and coal is up to $20 a ton, although it did not cost a penny more either to mine or transport than before the strike.

The bill empowers the fuel administration and the Interstate Commerce Commission to ascertain the available supply of coal, its cost of production, supply, distribution, and transportation, and the power of granting priorities and embargoes, with penalties for violation of priorities granted. Coal owners attempting extortion will under its operation be unable to do business, for they will have no means of transportation or delivery.

As a general rule I am opposed to price fixing, but in a situation such as now exists there must be some method of preventing speculation and profiteering in coal. This act will enable the consumer to purchase whatever coal there is at a reasonable price.

It must be remembered that even if every coal mine in the country were to commence mining coal to-morrow there will still be a severe shortage of coal all during the long winter months, and if the dwellers in the tenements, apartment houses, and private dwellings of our cities are not to freeze next winter coal must be sold at reasonable prices. If this bill will prevent extortion in coal costs, as it is intended, then I am in favor of it.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I wish to speak in opposition to the amendment offered by Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: On page 2, line 20, after the word "distributor," insert "to serve for a period not exceeding six months." This amendment limits the operation of the bill to a period of six months. What the American people now want is coal. They do not want any further quibbling or any more delay. We are facing an emergency and we ought to meet that emergency with the necessary action by the Government.

What the amendment means, in effect, is that in the event that this difficulty is settled now and another situation like it arises we would have to go through the same process all over again. Suppose such an emergency arose when Congress is not in session. The President would then have to call a special session of Congress and bring Congress back here to meet another situation like it, and thus have to reenact similar legislation.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. No such condition can possibly arise. This first appointment is made for six months. If, in his judgment, the emergency is not ended at that time, the President can appoint a successor for six months, and so on for an additional six months. That provides for a year and a half.

Mr. ROSSDALE. In that case the amendment is superfluous, for, if the President can continue it for six months or longer, then we do not need the amendment. Why not give the President these powers? Surely the President of the United States can be trusted at all times to have the power to meet a situation when it may arise. For my part, I am willing to trust the President, and I feel certain the American people are willing to trust him. The people at home care nothing at all about this quibbling and all this hesitating about the right to give the President the necessary power. I repeat, what the American people now want is coal. Here are in Congress a lot of lawyers, excepting a few of us, and busily splitting hairs. The American people do not care a tinker's dam about all the hairsplitting of a lot of lawyers in Congress. What they want is coal to keep the wheels of industry going and to provide fuel for the cold of next winter. They do not care anything about section so-and-so and section such-and-such. That will not put any coal into the coal bins, and it is not going to give industry the necessary fuel it requires.

We have had too much lawyer-made legislation already, and the country is weary of it. I say this with all due respect to my colleagues who are lawyers, but you do spend entirely too much time quibbling over legal technicalities when quick action is needed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LANHAM: Page 2, line 20, after the word "compensation" strike out the period and insert a comma and the following: "at a rate not to exceed $7,500 per annum."

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago we had before us a bill to create a fact-finding commission in the coal industry. That bill as originally presented provided for a compensation of $10,000 a year to each of the commissioners. Upon an amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] that sum was reduced to $7,500 per year. It seems to me in the abstract a dangerous matter to delegate the determination of salary to anyone. It seems to me that we should fix the compensation, and that the duty really devolves upon us to do so. If we are to have a Federal fuel distributor, I think that in these times of unemployment, when economy is a prime consideration, we ought in this measure to limit the amount of compensation, and that amount might very properly be fixed at the sum specified in the amendment that I have offered.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the desire of the gentleman to economize, but it seems to me it is like trying to save money in the family by cutting out salt. We have a great job to be done here. It may take two months or three months or four months or six months. None of us, I think, believe that it will be longer. For that job the President will have to pick a man who is able to take up, almost at sight, one of the lines of industry that stands just now particularly in the limelight, made more difficult by the conditions surrounding it, expecting him to come to Washington and expecting him to get his coat off in a minute and begin work almost without notice.

Why trifle in a picayune way about the compensation of a man who ought to command more than the sum specified by the gentleman from Texas in his amendment? In spite of the lack of employment throughout the country, I do not think there are many of us who would select from the unemployed a man for this job. The President will select a man big enough to handle this job. I think the provision in the bill will give the President a first-class opportunity to reach out and get a man big enough to do the work required. [Applause.]

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman give his opinion as to what would be fair and proper compensation for such a Federal officer?

Mr. WINSLOW. How long is the term to be?

Mr. LANHAM. At the rate of how much?

Mr. WINSLOW. The rate does not prove anything. The man might be down here for three months.

Mr. LANHAM. The position may be perpetual, according to the terms of the bill.

Mr. WINSLOW. In that event I shall be in favor of repealing the law when the emergency no longer exists; but in the face of the conditions which we now have, and not knowing how long the term will be, I can not say how much the compensation should be for a man who can jump in and handle the job. If it is for a year's time, that is one thing. If it is six months, it will be another. If it is two months, it will be another. The shorter the time the more the country can afford to pay him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. LANHAM) there were—ayes 27, noes 64.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Virginia: Page 2, line 19, after the word "purposes," strike out the residue of the paragraph and add the following: "The Interstate Commerce Commission shall have and exercise the powers hereinafter provided in addition to the powers it now possesses."

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I shall support this bill, just as I supported the so-called fact-finding bill the other day, not with any particular confidence that it will achieve the desired results but because it is the only thing that is offered us at this juncture.

I have no reasonable doubt as to the validity of the bill. So far as the question of power is concerned, there is this to be said: That the existing commerce act, whose validity is not contested, vests in the Interstate Commerce Commission very extensive discretion to determine when an emergency exists and to deal with that emergency by directing the routing of traffic, the priority of movement, and so forth. That law, with respect to power, is simply plussed by this measure and in only one respect. This measure creates a fuel distributor and provides that he shall find the facts in reference to the production of coal, the normal price of coal, the current price of coal, and the localities where and the persons by whom coal is needed.

I believe that the Interstate Commerce Commission—I am talking about the matter of power and not the matter of penalties—under the present law, with such unlimited discretion can now do all that it will be able to do after we have passed this bill. It may, of course, secure more information under this bill as a basis for the exercise of the discretion it already possesses.

Let us assume that this bill is desirable because it specifically refers to certain facts that ought to be ascertained before the commission exercises its discretion. Those facts do not need a new agency of the Government for their ascertainment. The best agency of the Government to ascertain them is the Interstate Commerce Commission itself. The Interstate Commerce Commission is perhaps the most efficient agency of Government we now have. That commission already has a very large and a very expert force in its service. If it be said that the present force is not sufficient to enable it to go out and get at the facts in question, the reply is that an appropriation of even one-half of the amount mentioned in this bill, designed for the payment of the expenses of the proposed new agency, will give the Interstate Commerce Commission what it will require to widen out the scope of its inquiries, and that the commission will have no difficulty at all in executing the provisions of this bill. In my opinion the people—I can not speak for all the people, but I can speak for at least one of them and I believe for many of them—are sick and tired of unnecessary independent or dependent agencies being created. The House seems to be determined to create another one, a fuel distributor, who is to do a specific thing. He is to get at certain facts and communicate them to the Interstate Commerce Commission. He is to have his existence quite apart from the commission, however. He is to build up a new force, at a very considerable expense. Now, if all the work can be done just as well by the Interstate Commerce Commission, why not charge the Interstate Commerce Commission with the responsibility of doing the work?

Mr. WATSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. Is it not a fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission is already burdened with a great many propositions? Is it the idea to put everything onto the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Perhaps I am as familiar with the work of the commission as any man in the House. I know it is a very busy organization. Nevertheless the membership has been increased quite recently.

Mr. WATSON. That is true.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I know also that that commission does not do all of its work immediately by its own members any more than the President of the United States does all his work without the assistance of others. I know that the commission during a period of years has carefully selected a most competent force of employees. They are now at its service, and similar men can be obtained by the commission if there is some further amount made available for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If I may say a word further in the time of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW], who has been referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARKE] as a lawyer who does not function to his satisfaction [laughter], I venture to state that in my humble judgment there is not the slightest excuse for building up this new agency when we can do everything that is sought to be done, and I think more effectively, by trusting and relying upon an agency we already have. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I think the members of our committee would rather be disposed to agree with the gentleman from Virginia and approve his suggestions if there were no more to the question. At the time this bill was being drawn an investigation demonstrated the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission is not physically organized to take over this work. They have on hand all that every man in their organization can do. Even if they could employ additional clerks, they would still not have a directing head of the right quality, caliber, temperament, and type of man to put in charge of that division.

If it were only clerical help needed we could get it in several Government departments, but as we have to pick out a head as a coal distributor and have to hire new help we feel that the economical way and the practical way for quick action would be through a distributor, and if we were to cut him out we might as well rewrite the whole bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Line 20, page 2, add, after the word "distributor," "to serve for a period not exceeding 12 months."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: Page 2, line 20, after the word "distributor," insert "to serve for a period not exceeding 12 months."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments to the section close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York and all amendments to the section close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FAIRCHILD].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 13, after the word "distribution," insert "at a reasonable price to the ultimate consumer."

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I offer I hope will be accepted by the committee. Section 5 of the bill suggests price extortion as one of the elements to be considered by the Interstate Commerce Commission, but section 2, which is the section announcing the purpose of the bill, is strangely silent on the question of price. It says "because of such emergency and to assure"—what? To insure an adequate supply and to assure an equitable distribution, but no reference to a reasonable price. What my amendment purposes to do is to include price, so as to make it read "to assure an adequate supply and equitable distribution at a reasonable price to the ultimate consumer."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the Federal fuel distributor to ascertain (a) the available supply of coal and whether there exists within the United States or any part thereof a shortage or impending shortage of coal or other fuel and the extent of such shortage; (b) the fields of production of coal and other fuel and the principal markets to which such production is or may be transported and distributed and the means and methods of distribution; (c) the prices normally and usually charged for such coal and other fuel and whether current prices, considering the costs of production and distribution, are just and reasonable; (d) the kind and location of the consumers; and (e) whether persons, corporations, regions, municipalities, or communities should receive priority in transportation and distribution, and the degree thereof, and any other facts relating to the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel; and when so ascertained the Federal fuel distributor shall make appropriate recommendations pertaining thereto to the Interstate Commerce Commission from time to time either on his own motion or upon request of the commission, to the end that an equitable distribution of coal and other fuel may be secured so as best to meet the emergency and promote the general welfare.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 25, after the word "coal" insert the words "and other fuel."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

On page 3, line 6, after the word "distribution" strike out the word "thereat."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 10, strike out the word "firms" and insert the word "copartnerships."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

On general principles I am very strongly opposed to the interference of Government in private business, and only in times of stress do I feel such action is justified. That an emergency exists in this country in regard to the production and distribution of coal no man doubts, and unless something is done, and done quickly, the suffering of individuals and the disaster to industries will be acute and far-reaching. Somewhere in the chain between the shovel of the miner and the shovel of the consumer there is a link that represents neither the honest toil of the laborer or the fair profit of the distributor. It is where exorbitant profits come in and this bill proposes to cut that link from the chain.

There are millions of people in this country who are not represented in the councils of capital or in the councils of labor, but their interests rise supreme to both and must be protected and safeguarded.

Mr. Hoover, one of the clearest thinking and best informed men in America, states as his opinion that it is necessary that some restraint be placed on profiteering in coal. I will follow his advice and vote for this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out line 21.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, strike out all of line 21.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, that line is "to promote the general welfare." I do not think such language has any place in the bill. I do not think this bill promotes the general welfare. It does not seem to me that the general welfare is promoted by a bill to fix prices or for the Government to control private industry. What is "the general welfare"? Is it not the welfare of all of us? I want to show you where all of us are getting off on this proposition. Now, this supposed coal bill is really a railroad bill. Its main purpose besides fixing prices on coal is to control the transportation of coal. It is a result of the rail strike more than of the coal strike.

Talk about the railroad brotherhoods. They contain many splendid citizens and many good friends of mine, but let us say a word about the brotherhood of the general public. Here in this morning's paper, and you can take up yesterday's morning paper or any other paper and find the same thing—

Three held for grand jury for Michigan Central spike-pulling case.

The names of those three men are Charles Uselis, Joseph Popauritch, and Albino Alessio. All of these men were said to be striking shopmen. The article goes on to state that these arrests led the way for exposure of a plot to wreck the Twentieth Century Limited, one of the best and fastest trains in the country, which presumably would be full of people traveling about their lawful business.

Continuing, the article says:

Uselis declared that at the union meeting on Saturday a speaker, whose name he did not give although the police are said to know it, did not instruct him and his three companions to wreck a train. He said the speaker spoke as follows:

"You go out to Gary or somewhere in that neighborhood and jimmy up the track, to cause trouble and make it appear that equipment is in bum condition and that it's dangerous for train crews to ride trains."

It was on the day after the wreck, Uselis asserted, that plans were laid for him and Alessio to go to Elkhart, Ind., next week and seek work in the New York Central shops, supposedly as strike breakers, in an attempt to derail the Twentieth Century Limited.

In the same column of the same paper are the following items:

FORT SMITH, ARK., August 29.

Officers were rushed to the Missouri Pacific Railway shops at Van Buren, Ark., early to-night when a report was received that several volleys of shots had been fired at the building.

—

DANVILLE, ILL., August 29.

A series of four explosions early to-day shattered windows and demolished long strips of yard trackage in the shops of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois road here. It is believed an attempt had been made to destroy the entire shops. One bomb had been planted near the main entrance of the yard.

—

AUGUSTA, GA., August 29.

A young man named H. B. Moody, a new employee at the Georgia Railroad shops, was attacked on the streets here early this morning by three unknown men, who beat him severely about the head.

These murders and assaults are on people who are trying to get work in the United States of America in the 147th year of our supposed independence. What are we going to do about it? Instead of the wretched makeshift which is now before us we ought to have here a bill under the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce which would make interstate commerce safe. What is the power to regulate commerce? Does it not include the power to sustain, the power to maintain? Instead of such a bill as this on which we are piffling away our time, to authorize the fixing of prices, to authorize the Government to further engage in private industry or control private industry, we should be considering some measure to make interstate commerce safe. Why, the Republican party went into office on the proposition that we wanted more business in government and less government in business, and, thank God, we have carried out the first part of that pledge splendidly. I want to see us stay by the latter part of the pledge.

The general welfare means the general welfare of the general public, the brotherhood of the general public. It seems that we ought to stand by the first function of government. What is the first purpose and function of any government, even savage government, if you please? It is to make life, property, and work safe. That is the one thing which, strangely enough, we are not doing. I think the country will justly say that we are derelict on our job. [Applause.]

Here are a few of the other cases, clipped by me from just one recent newspaper. It would make far too large a file to collect them every day:

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., August 17.

Two attempts to blow up tracks of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad near Birmingham yesterday came to light to-day by the announcement from the office of Superintendent Smith of this division that "vandals" were at work on the line.

—

HORNELL, N. Y., August 16.

E. L. Nelson, of Buffalo, who arrived here yesterday to work in the Erie Railroad shops, was seized by a group of men and stripped of his clothing.

—

SAYRE, PA., August 16.

Norman Carmel, employed by the Lehigh Valley Railroad shops here, died early to-day from stiletto wounds received when he was attacked by five unknown men last night. No arrests have been made.

—

SCRANTON, PA., August 16.

A crowd, estimated at 2,000, attacked a shop worker at Bellevue and gave him a bad beating before he was rescued by policemen. Another crowd of 200 persons attacked workmen at the Keyser Valley works of the Lackawanna.

—

SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF., August 16.

Several persons were reported to have been injured by rocks thrown to-night when a crowd of several hundred persons gathered at the Santa Fe Railroad shops here and attempted to prevent employees working there in spite of the strike from leaving the inclosure.

Just how is the pending bill for distributing coal going to affect this case?

MURPHYSBORO, ILL., August 16.

Approximately 150 striking miners forced the crew of a Mobile & Ohio train to sidetrack five cars of coal at Willisville, 10 miles north of here, late this afternoon, which was bound for East St. Louis.

What we needed in that case was not a new Federal officer, a coal distributor, to issue his directions to that crowd by mail. What we needed was a squad of soldiers to prevent interference with the necessary business of the country. Somebody needed that coal, no doubt. Somebody probably needs it still. The function of Government was not to regulate the number of cars for its shipment but to see that the cars in which it was in fact shipped were kept moving.

I could multiply these instances by taking four or five from every daily paper that has been published since this strike started.

The people of the "western slope" of Colorado sent me a long resolution the other day. They say that their entire crop of fruits and vegetables will be a loss unless they can immediately obtain cars. I sent that resolution to the chairman of the committee which is presenting this coal distribution bill on the floor to-day. I am surprised that he has not made his "remedy" broad enough to cover both cases. They are identical in principle. To be sure, there is no strike among potato growers, but there is a shortage of potatoes in a good many parts of the country. There is, nevertheless, a splendid crop of potatoes. We have been told that there is an abundant supply of bituminous coal. But the coal does not get to the consumers because of the railroad strike. The potatoes do not get to them for exactly the same reason. Well, why not apply the same remedy? For the coal situation you propose to solve it by fixing the price of coal and apportioning the cars so that it will move to the localities that need it most. Well, let us fix the price of potatoes and apportion the cars to the growers that ask a "fair" price, and let them be sent to favored sections of the country. Perhaps the grower has contracted his crop in advance; perhaps he may have been paid a deposit on it. No matter. He shall have nothing to say on the question of where his potatoes shall be shipped, or what he will get for them.

Oh, gentlemen of the Congress of the United States, do not let us stand before the country in the weak and pitiable situation of saying, "Now that transportation is being tied up we will solve the situation by controlling the movements of the few cars that can move." What a pusillanimous proposal. What the country demands is that all the cars shall move. Can any one doubt that when they all do move, without unlawful hindrance, the matter of distribution will take care of itself? That fact is so obvious and our duty is so obvious that if my 5-year-old boy couldn't see it I would want to disown him. Our duty is the very plain and simple one to keep the cars moving—all the cars—by preventing unlawful interference with their movement and by preventing unlawful interference with their repair or with the repair of the motive power that takes potatoes and coal and wheat and cotton and everything else across a country which has been wont to boast that is was especially skilled in the art of self-government.

Potatoes and coal? Yes; and people, too. A few days ago train crews on the Santa Fe deserted their trains at the little desert village of Needles, Calif., because the railroad shop was guarded for the protection of employees there. In that train were aged people, one old lady more than 90 years old. There was one baby in arms, whose parents live in my town. In the blistering heat of several days without proper food that child almost died. Perhaps you can excuse that dastardly abandonment of duty by those train crews. I can not.

I suppose we will soon be distributing cars for the transportation of living human freight. That is the logical result of the remedy you propose. This great country will take such cars as Messrs. Uselis, Popauritch, and Alessio kindly allow us to have. When our allowance is less we will content ourselves with distributing the lesser number.

Well, this bill does not content me, and I do not propose to apologize to my constituents for voting for it. I shall vote against it. [Applause.]

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] is recognized.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, there is every reason why this bill should be immediately enacted into law. A coal strike has been in effect since April 1 until a few days ago. As a result the coal bins of the country are greatly depleted and in many instances empty. Factories and industrial institutions, employing thousands of our people, have been obliged to greatly reduce their forces and output, and in some instances close down altogether, on account of the coal shortage. Winter season is approaching, and those familiar with present industrial conditions and in the least observant of past experiences do not need to be informed that the "party of the third part"—the American public—which you and I have the honor to represent, are once again about to be called upon to pay the bill. Not only pay it in dollars and cents, but in personal sacrifices, inconvenience, and in many cases individual suffering, saying nothing of the interference with the orderly dispatch of everyone's business, with its consequent losses to all of our people alike.

When we take into account the present shortage of coal that exists in many sections of the country, the competition that will now ensue and is already under way to obtain coal, the inability of the railroad companies to make immediate and prompt delivery of coal shipments, the season of the year, and what not, we may naturally expect the profiteer to get in his work, the price of coal to soar, profiteering to run rampant, coal to be hoarded, and other like grievous wrongs against the public, all calculated to injure our people in one way or another unless we prevent it by some such legislation as is proposed in this bill. The general public depends upon Congress to protect them from the profiteers and other evils that creep into the business life of our country. We should not wait until the evil overtakes them and gains a strangle hold before we move. We should act promptly and forestall that which we all apprehend is sure to occur unless we do act. This bill, to a large extent, will protect the people from imposition by the profiteer, but, in my humble judgment, still further legislation is desirable and necessary if the American public is to be fully protected from other equally dangerous threatened industrial conditions. This bill, in other words, is a good antidote for the one particular threatened evil with which it deals, but, in my opinion, a major operation is necessary if we hope to secure the complete relief to which the public is entitled.

It has been freely predicted around the corridors of the Capitol for several days past that Congress would go into recess within the next 15 or 20 days. Doubtless this is true, and that some Members will return to their districts to enter their campaigns even sooner. Our services have been almost continuous since March 4, 1921, and it is entirely proper that we should at least recess for a sufficient length of time to make our campaign for reelection, but I frankly tell you that I am more concerned right at this time in remaining here until we have taken every necessary precaution of protecting the public and concluding the important legislation now in process of enactment into law than I am in taking a recess to conduct my campaign for reelection. A threatened serious industrial condition confronts the country.

The outlook is not encouraging unless a better understanding is soon reached between capital and labor, and in my judgment we should not recess until we have enacted legislation that will adequately and justly take care of the interests of the whole people in any situation that might arise. The situation could easily become such as to wreck business and industry all over the country and cause a serious interference with the general welfare and happiness of our people. They have a right to look to the President and to Congress for protection. It seems that our President in dealing with the situation has about reached the limit of his constitutional powers and legal authority under existing laws, and in my judgment this Congress should extend his authority, even to the extent of taking over the coal mines and railroads of the country if the emergency becomes such as to make this action necessary to prevent human suffering, loss to business, and wrecking of industrial and economic conditions. A tie-up of our transportation system right at this time would not only imperil the lives and happiness of our people but would utterly paralyze every business and industry of the country. Factories could not operate for lack of coal, people would be thrown out of employment, farmers and shippers could not market their live stock. Everything would come to a standstill, and right at a time, too, in the history of Government when we are trying to regain our equilibrium from the effects of the World War. This Government is too big and too strong to sit idly by when we apprehend that we are threatened with such an intolerable condition as might and could be easily brought upon us, without taking all necessary precautionary measures to prevent it so far as it is humanly possible for us to do so.

I would not only authorize the President to take over the railroads in case of urgent necessity and operate them for the public and with justice to the employees, but I would direct him that in case such a step as taking over the railroads became necessary that while we had them in hand we squeeze the water out of their stock and take the inflations out of their absurd valuations before we turned them back into the owners' hands. When this has once been effectually done the present high and exorbitant transportation charges could be so materially reduced that the country would sing our praises forever. I want the railroads to make a substantial return on the amount of their actual investment, but the people are getting pretty well fed up on paying tribute to watered stock and inflated values. The time is here when this evil must be corrected. The timely legislation enacted by this Congress has already brought about a visible steadying of general conditions, and we are gradually reaching a state of equal balance again were it not for the fact that the shipper, whether from the farm, factory, or store, is obliged to pay out half or more of his profits in transportation charges, and even at that the railroads, due to "disturbed industrial conditions," will only receive the farmer's live stock for shipment at the owner's risk of delay, requiring him to sign a contract that he has neither the time or patience to read. How long these conditions may continue we can only speculate, but we can at least prevent them from growing worse. We should immediately pass this bill under consideration and then proceed with a permanent cure for the other evils and threatened evils to which I have directed your attention. The public expects it. They have a right to expect it. I am unwilling to admit that any person, set of persons, or corporation is bigger than our Government. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. The Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized, and is hereby directed, to receive and consider the said recommendations of the Federal fuel distributor and in its discretion to issue such order or orders for priorities in car service, embargoes, and other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier or region, municipality, community, person, copartnership, or corporation, and to take any other necessary and appropriate steps for priority in car service and in equitable distribution of coal or other fuel so as best to meet the emergency, prevent extortion in prices charged for coal and other fuel, and promote the general welfare.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 4, line 9, strike out the word "in" and insert the words "for the."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DENISON: Page 4, line 10, after the word "emergency," strike out the words "prevent extortion in prices charged for coal and other fuel."

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 10 minutes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I would like to extend the time, but we have twice to-day been over this very same proposition. It has been voted to a standstill and why go over it again?

Mr. DENISON. Of course, the chairman understands that I did not take any time under general debate.

Mr. WINSLOW. But the gentleman had an opportunity if he wanted to.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman expect to pass this bill to day?

Mr. WINSLOW. I have no power to answer that question.

Mr. YOUNG. If the gentleman is not going to pass the bill to-day, he might as well grant the gentleman from Illinois some time.

Mr. WINSLOW. I am perfectly willing to allow the gentleman 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to speak for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, the difference between the amendment that I have offered and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] is simple. I eliminate from the bill only the provision for fixing the price of coal, and I accept all of the other provisions. For various reasons I would like very much to vote for the bill. I would like to vote for it because the President wants some kind of legislation that will help the present situation, and, of course, I would like to support anything that he wants along this line. However, if that provision remains in the bill, I can not vote for it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman please read that provision?

Mr. DENISON. My amendment is simply to strike out the words "prevent extortion in prices charged for coal and other fuel." I want to state briefly, without repeating the arguments that have been presented by other Members, the reasons why I can not support the bill with that provision in it.

Of course, it is apparent that those who drafted the bill shrewdly chose words that seem formidable, and our first impulse is to conclude that no one should object to the words "prevent extortion in prices" remaining in the bill, because no one would ordinarily approve of such a practice. But when given their practical effect the words "prevent extortion in prices charged for coal" mean simply to prevent the charging of a price in excess of that fixed by the fuel distributor. The language could mean nothing else. Mr. Hoover testified before our committee that the practical working out of this bill would result in the Federal fuel distributor fixing what would be called a "fair price" for coal at the mines, and it would be unlawful for any coal producer to charge more than the "fair price" fixed by the distributor; if he should do so, the Interstate Commerce Commission would have the power to punish him by refusing to permit him to receive cars with which to transport his coal to the market; in other words, they would issue an embargo against him. Therefore the amendment I have offered simply strikes from the bill the power conferred upon the fuel distributor or the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix the price of coal at the mines.

If the Interstate Commerce Commission does not have the power under the present law, by granting priorities and preferences in car service, to equitably and effectually distribute the coal supply of the country to those persons and to those regions where it will be most seriously needed, then I am willing to confer upon the commission such additional powers as will enable them to accomplish that purpose. Assuming that the provisions of this bill are intended to confer upon the Interstate Commerce Commission such additional powers with reference to car service, I think the bill ought to pass. I believe the Interstate Commerce Commission ought to have the very broadest possible powers to grant priorities and preferences in car service so as to provide for the quickest and most equitable distribution of all available coal to the persons and communities where it is most sorely needed. But I can not vote for a bill to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission or any other official of the Government to fix the price of coal.

In the first place, I know of no power conferred upon Congress by the Constitution which would authorize us to pass legislation fixing the price of coal or any other commodity. This is a subject that has been much discussed here in recent years. During the war we fixed the price of certain commodities by legislation in the exercise of our war powers. I do not think there is any doubt of our right to do so under the war powers, but our experience in doing so convinced me that the wisdom of such legislation was very doubtful. Until now I have never heard it contended that Congress could in time of peace fix the price of commodities by legislation. So far as I know this Government never before in its history undertook to do such a thing, nor has any other government except in time of war.

During the past two or three years, when the prices of the farmers' products have been going down and down until the farmers of the country were almost in a bankrupt condition, being compelled to market their products often at less than the cost of production, I have been appealed to time and again by the farmers and the farmers' organizations of my district, urging me to have legislation passed fixing the price of the farmers' products so that they could make a profit on them. This week I received a letter from a farmer stating that the farmers could not continue to live and cultivate their farms unless Congress, by legislation, would fix the price of wheat so that they could afford to raise it.

I have invariably written to these farmers and farm organizations that in my judgment Congress had no power under our Constitution to fix the price of farm products in time of peace. I have always understood that to be a constitutional limitation on the power of Congress. Therefore, if I should vote for this bill which provides for fixing the price of coal, I will be either acting in a manner inconsistent with my oft-expressed views as a lawyer or will be put in the position of disregarding my convictions under executive pressure, and I am unwilling to do either.

I have sometimes voted for legislation with regard to which I have had some little doubts as to its constitutionality, being willing to defer to what I have thought may be the better judgment of others. But I will not vote for any legislation which I firmly believe to be beyond the constitutional powers of Congress to enact. I have taken an oath to support and defend the Constitution, and I think it is in conflict with that oath to vote for any bill which I firmly believe is beyond our constitutional powers.

Therefore I can not vote for this bill if it contains the provision authorizing some Federal official to arbitrarily fix the price of coal at the mines. The amendment I have offered would eliminate that objectionable part of the bill.

It has been argued here to-day that if Congress can not exercise this power there will be no protection for the people from the greedy profiteers who will take advantage of the present industrial condition and exploit the people by unreasonable charges for coal. Surely, they say, the Congress must have the power to protect its own people from such imposition. The answer to that argument is that no such power can be found in the Constitution. All of us have known, if we have ordinary intelligence, that circumstances might arise in which there would be a shortage of coal in this country. All of us have known for years how the coal mines have been operated and labor conditions adjusted, and we have known that strikes could and might occur which would result in the shutting down of the coal mines and material increases in the price of coal. If we had been provident and had desired for the Government to exercise the extraordinary power of stepping in and fixing the price of coal by legislation, we should have before this amended the Constitution so as to confer that power upon the Congress. Not having done so, and the power not having been conferred upon Congress by the fathers who drafted the Constitution, I do not think we should even in the stress of present circumstances disregard our oaths of office and usurp that power.

I am opposed to this bill if it contains this provision authorizing the fuel distributor to fix the price of coal at the mines because it will, in my judgment, result in increasing the price of coal to the average consumer rather than decreasing it. If the Members will read the testimony of Mr. Hoover in the hearings before our committee, they will see he said that the practical effect of this legislation will be that the maximum price fixed by the Government will become the minimum price charged for coal. In other words, he said in substance that the fuel distributor will determine on what will be a "fair price" to be charged for coal at the mines. Anything above that price will be considered extortionate and, therefore, will be prohibited. If the fuel distributor should act at all with due regard to justice and fairness, he would have to fix the fair price at a reasonable amount above the cost of production at the most expensive mines. The cost of production at the most expensive mines will be the standard rather than the cost of production at the less expensive mines. And just as soon as the Government determines upon and announces what shall be the fair price for coal at the mines, the price of all coal will be advanced to the Government's "fair price." So that while the fixing of a fair price by the fuel distributor may result in preventing excessive prices charged for coal to large purchasers here and there who would purchase their coal from the more expensively operated mines, the great number of consumers who buy from the smaller and less expensively operated mines would have to pay more for their coal because the price would be advanced to the fair price fixed by the Government. In other words, because the Government's maximum price will immediately become the minimum price all over the country. That condition will continue so long as there is a shortage of coal. That is the testimony of Mr. Hoover himself; that was our experience during the war, and our judgment ought to tell us that that will be the case.

I am opposed to this price-fixing provision of the bill because, in my judgment, it will result in depressing or retarding the production of coal rather than increasing it.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the best solution to the threatened high prices resulting from shortage of coal in this country is to increase production as much as possible. The Government should do nothing that will depress or retard production. We should do everything we can to encourage and increase production. When we undertake to pass legislation to fix the price of coal, we are doctoring the symptom and not the cause of the industrial disease. Remove the cause and the symptom will disappear. Increase the output of the mines and the high price will disappear by natural law. Legislation that will deprive operators of coal mines of an opportunity for reasonable profit, that will permit the Government to meddle and interfere in the management of this great business, will remove the incentive to increase production and will prevent the very thing that will bring the price of coal down. Everyone knows there are more coal mines and more coal miners in this country than the normal demand for coal would justify. Under normal conditions the mines can not work much over half time. The bituminous strike has been settled and those mines have resumed work. The anthracite strike will be settled in a day or two, as everyone knows, and they will soon resume work. There will soon be a surplus of coal and competition will prevent unreasonable prices. That condition will be delayed, in my judgment, if we provide a Federal official and confer upon him power to arbitrarily and officiously interfere with the business and say what price the owners of coal mines shall charge for their product.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the price-fixing provision in this bill, because it will not reach the evil that it is intended to reach. This bill is aimed at the producers of coal only. It is not intended to catch the real profiteer in coal. Why there should be this discrimination I do not know. But this bill authorizes the fuel distributor to fix the price of coal at the mines. Everyone knows, I think, that the real profiteers have not been the producers, but the middlemen or resellers of coal. It will do very little good to fix the price of coal at the mines if you permit the broker or the retailer who buys the output of the mines at wholesale to charge such price as he wishes to charge to the consumers of coal. This bill does not hit the real profiteers.

This bill hits the producers, who ought to be encouraged rather than discouraged by the Government. If Congress is going to assume to fix the price of coal in this so-called emergency legislation, it ought to fix the price to the consumers, who will have to pay the bills, rather than to fix the price at the mines. The producers hardly ever sell coal to the actual consumers. This bill will not accomplish its intended or its pretended purpose. And unless it can be amended so as to prevent excessive prices being charged to the consumers of coal, I would not support it even if we had the constitutional authority to enact it.

I am opposed to the bill because it contains a section authorizing the President at any time in the future whenever he thinks that there is an emergency to so declare, and thereupon the powers of this bill shall be revived, and he will be authorized to appoint another fuel distributor with arbitrary powers over the coal industry.

I have almost unlimited confidence, I must confess, in President Harding. But the time has not yet come when I am willing to confer upon any President that may hereafter be chosen the power to declare an emergency and, by virtue of the emergency which he himself has declared to exist, appoint a public official with unlimited salary and unlimited duration of office to exercise unlimited control over a great industry like the coal industry. I do not share the view that the Congress can under our constitutional limitations authorize the President to declare the existence of an emergency in time of peace under which any extraordinary powers may be exercised. If we had such power I would not be in favor of granting it. If there are such things as emergencies which can be declared by the Government and by virtue of which extraordinary powers may be exercised, I think Congress and not the President should declare them. But I do not think either Congress or the President can, by the mere declaration of the existence of an emergency, thereby come into the possession of any powers that are not expressly conferred by the Constitution. If that were the case, then the difficult and tedious process of amending the Constitution in the manner provided in it could be avoided by the mere declaration of the existence of an emergency.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, it is apparent that this bill is going to pass and in some form will become a law. I would hesitate to defeat it even if I could do so. The objections I am stating to it, and the vote I shall cast against it if the price-fixing provision is not eliminated, simply represent my feeble protest against what I think is the exercise of an unconstitutional power and the pursuit of an unwise policy by Congress.

From one point of view I could hope to see this bill become a law. It is going to be an interesting experiment in legislation. At other times and under other conditions when Congress was not acting under Executive pressure this bill would not be seriously considered by the Members of the House or the Senate. It would be looked upon as absurd for the Government in a time of peace to presume to fix the price of any industrial products. But now there is a threatened shortage of coal. New England and the Northwest are threatened with serious results. The coal consumers overwhelmingly outnumber the coal producers of the country. Therefore we frantically dig through the Constitution for some Federal remedy that does not there exist.

Now, at the hearings one of those who was responsible for this bill justified it by the commerce clause of the Constitution. Another justified it by the so-called public-welfare clause of the Constitution. Those who drafted the bill combed the Constitution and placed in the first section of the bill all of the different congressional powers which might be considered as inferentially justifying this legislation, including the commerce clause, the welfare clause, the public-health clause, the post-office and post-roads clause, the Army clause, the Navy clause, and others.

If we have power, gentlemen, under the so-called public-welfare clause of the Constitution to pass legislation authorizing a Federal official to fix the price of coal at the mines, then there is absolutely no limit on what Congress may hereafter do, and we will have plenty to do from now on. If Congress can by legislation fix the price of coal because the prices charged are so high as to be unfair to the consumers, then we can also fix the price of coal because the prices paid are so unreasonably low as to be unfair to the producers of coal.

If we can by legislation fix the price of coal, then there is no reason why we should not by legislation fix the maximum price of wheat if the time should come when the farmers are getting too high prices for their wheat; and there is likewise no reason why Congress should not immediately authorize a Federal official to fix the price of wheat or other farm products, because the prices now realized are so low as to discourage production and threaten the food supply of the country. There is no end or limit to the maze of legislation that the exercise of this far-reaching power may lead us to; and even if we possessed the power to pass such a bill under the Constitution, any thinking man ought to at once see the unwisdom of it. If the so-called public welfare clause of the Constitution would justify such legislation as this, then I can not conceive of any further need of amending the Constitution in the manner provided in it, because all desired legislation could be passed under the color of public welfare. We could have passed a national prohibition law under the doctrine of public welfare. We could have passed an income tax law under the doctrine of public welfare. We could have passed the woman's suffrage amendment under the doctrine of public welfare. Almost any legislation could be enacted under the so-called public welfare clause of the Constitution if that clause should be construed as those of you would construe it who quote it to justify this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think the commerce clause of the Constitution can be perverted into any sort of authority or justification for price-fixing legislation. The decisions of the Supreme Court construing the commerce clause are indefinite and perhaps conflicting, but none of them have gone so far as to intimate that the power of Congress to regulate commerce between the States may be used to fix the prices of products within the States. And we can not do by indirection what we can not do directly.

Now, if this bill should become a law, let me show you what a grave injustice it would authorize. The price-fixing provision would authorize the Federal fuel distributor, through the Interstate Commerce Commission, to determine a fair price for coal. Any price charged for coal above the fair price fixed by the distributor would be considered extortionate within the meaning of the act. And the act authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant an embargo against any person who should violate any of the provisions of the act or any regulation of the fuel distributor. If, therefore, any coal company or any person should charge for coal shipped in interstate commerce a price higher than that which the fuel distributor had considered as fair the Interstate Commerce Commission could place an embargo against that company or person and deny him the right of transportation for his product and thereby close his mine. It would amount to a denial of the right to sell the product of his mine.

The right to sell property is as sacred as the right to own property. The Constitution guarantees to every person the right of property and provides that he shall not be deprived of it without due process. To deprive a person of the right to sell his property is to deprive him of his property, and, in my judgment, a law which would authorize any Federal official to arbitrarily deprive a citizen of his property without giving him the right of appeal or the right of review by some judicial tribunal would be depriving him of his property without due process of law, and for that reason would be unconstitutional.

Under this bill the Federal fuel distributor might act arbitrarily, he might fix the price at such an amount that the producer would have no profit or even suffer a loss, and if the producer should make a sale in excess of the price fixed by the distributor the Interstate Commerce Commission could immediately deprive him of the right to sell his coal and he would have no right of appeal. I can not vote for any law which I think will deprive citizens of their property without due process of law.

I object to this bill for the further reason that it makes no exception in favor of contracts that have already been made. I have no doubt there are many coal mines in the country whose entire output has already been sold to factories or public service companies in other States at a price which has been fixed by contract agreeable to both parties. If this bill becomes a law and the Federal fuel distributor fixes a fair price below that mentioned in such a contract, it would be unlawful to deliver coal in accordance with the contract, and if the producer should do so the Interstate Commerce Commission could order an embargo and deprive him of all right of transportation. Is that a fair or just way for a Government to act toward its citizens? The Constitution expressly prohibits the States from enacting any law that will violate the obligation of a contract. I am unwilling for the Federal Government to itself pass any law that will violate the obligation of a lawful contract. I do not think the Federal Government can afford to do that which the Constitution expressly prohibits the States from doing and which the laws of the land prohibit individuals from doing. This bill ought to contain a provision excluding from its provisions coal sold or delivered under contract made in good faith before the passage of the bill. Without such a provision it is manifestly unfair and unconscionable and I can not support it.

I think, too, Mr. Chairman, that the language of the price-fixing provision of the bill is too indefinite and too uncertain in meaning to be a proper basis for the exercise of arbitrary power or for use in a criminal statute. The Supreme Court held certain parts of the so-called Lever Act unconstitutional because the language used in defining the crime was so vague and uncertain in meaning that the citizens could not know with certainty when they were or were not committing the crime. Now, this bill uses the expression "prevent extortion in prices charged for coal." What is extortion in prices charged for coal? What price would amount to extortion?

In determining that question would the fuel distributor consider the cost of production, or the condition of the purchaser? Would he allow the operator a profit above cost of production, and if so, how much of a profit? Would he take into consideration the hazard of the business in determining what the price of the coal should be? Or, on the other hand, would he consider the condition of the purchaser, whether poor or rich? One price of coal might be considered extortionate to a poor man in need of fuel and at the same time be considered reasonable to a wealthy man who is amply able to pay. Would any price be an extortion, if purchasers were able and willing to pay it? What is the standard for determining extortion in prices of coal? No one can tell with certainty what the expression means.

I have consulted the law textbooks and judicial decisions to find what it means. I find that the word extortion has a technical meaning in law. It means the collection of money where none is due, or the collection of more money than by law is due by one holding a public office. It implies the use of force exerted by the person who commits the act upon the person who must pay the money under protest. That is in substance the definition of extortion in statutes and in the laws. But evidently it is not used in that sense in this bill. One person might construe it to mean one thing and another person another thing. It is indefinite and uncertain what it does mean, and for that reason it more than likely would render the bill invalid.

Another grave injustice will result from this bill because of the fact that there will be one price fixed by the Federal fuel distributor for fuel shipped in interstate commerce, and another price fixed either by the natural law of supply and demand or by some State tribunal for fuel shipped in intrastate commerce; so that mines similarly situated and perhaps in the same communities, each contributing proportionately and alike by taxes to the expenses of the Government, will not be permitted to receive the same or similar prices for their products. This will tend to disturb and demoralize the industry and to discourage production.

Mr. ROSSDALE. If a man charges you $22 or $25 a ton for coal, what would you call that?

Mr. DENISON. I would call that an exorbitant or unreasonable price.

Mr. ROSSDALE. You would not call it extortion?

Mr. DENISON. No; because it is not extortion, and you can not find the word so used in any law book or in any existing statute.

Mr. ROSSDALE. Would you tell the American people that it was not extortion?

Mr. DENISON. Well, I am telling you.

Mr. Chairman, if there were anything that Congress could properly and justly do within our powers to prevent profiteering in coal or to prevent unreasonable and unjust prices being charged, either by those producing coal or those selling coal at retail, I would not hesitate a moment to do it. I think that the operator of a coal mine or anyone else who would take advantage of the serious situation that has arisen by reason of the coal strike to exploit the people by charging outrageous prices ought to be ostracized from decent society and punished, if there is any law to punish them. I think the States themselves should immediately pass the necessary legislation to punish such practices, if they can do so. But however much I may condemn such conduct or wish to prohibit such imposition upon the people, I am unwilling to try to prevent it by such legislation as this, which, in my judgment, will be futile and will go beyond our constitutional power.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], which the Clerk will again report.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOIES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BOIES offers the following amendment: Amend the bill by adding thereto and incorporating therein a new and additional section immediately following section 5 of the bill, on page 4, to be designated as section 5½, and the same to read as follows:

"The Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized, and said commission is hereby directed and required, in view of the present declared emergency and to further promote the general welfare, to reduce by 50 per cent the freight rates and carrying charges now in force on coal and other fuel of railroads and other common carriers transporting coal or other fuel in interstate shipments, this provision and said reductions of carrying charges to become effective 10 days after the passage of this bill, and to continue in force and effect for the period of eight months.

"To the extent of its power and authority, the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby authorized and directed to likewise and to the same extent as above provided, reduce the freight rates and carrying charges of coal and other fuel in intrastate shipments by railroads and other common carriers."

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota makes a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It is not germane to the section.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, it ought to be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The point of order I make is that the amendment is not germane under the rules of the House. This is an amendment having to do with the reduction of freight rates. Clearly there could be no question about the lack of germaneness.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GRIFFIN. My inquiry is as to whether or not the Clerk has concluded the reading of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of the amendment was not concluded, but it has gone sufficiently far to indicate its character.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Then I make the point of order that the amendment should be read throughout before a point of order is interposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from New York is overruled.

Mr. BOIES. Mr. Chairman, section 5 is very broad in its language. It says, "other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier," and it provides against profiteering. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. There can not be any doubt that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa is not germane to the section of the bill or to any part of the bill. It has no relation whatever to the subject matter of the bill, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOODYKOONTZ: Page 4, section 5, line 10; after the word "emergency" insert a period and strike out the rest of the sentence.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that, the committee having already taken action on the identic amendment, it is not in order to move this amendment.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. The amendments are not identical.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] a short time ago offered an amendment exactly in the form that the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia takes. The committee having voted it down, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I beg the Chair's pardon. Those amendments are not alike.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, I insist that you examine those two amendments. They are not in the same language. I beg the Chair's pardon.

The CHAIRMAN. It strikes out the same words, "to prevent extortion in prices charged for coal and other fuel." It is exactly the same amendment.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. No, Mr. Chairman; it says, "and promote the general welfare."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. The Federal fuel distributor may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act and may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, district, or possession, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or any person or persons, and may avail himself of the advice and assistance of any department, commission, or board of the Government, and may appoint or create any agent or agency to facilitate the power and authority hereby conferred; and he shall have the power to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such assistants and employees, not in conflict with existing laws, and make such expenditures for rent, printing, telegrams, telephones, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other operating expenses as shall be necessary for the due and effective administration of this act. All facts, data, and records relating to the production, supply, distribution, and transportation of coal and other fuel in the possession of any commission, board, agency, or department of the Government shall at all times be available to the Federal fuel distributor and the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the person having custody of such facts, data, and records shall furnish the same promptly to the Federal fuel distributor or his duly authorized agent or to the commission on request therefor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a unanimous-consent request. I want to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, the War Department has called the attention of Congress by means of a letter from General Pershing to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee that under their construction of the legislation recently enacted reducing the commissioned officers of the Army to not exceeding 12,000 in number that it would be necessary to eliminate several hundred more officers than was contemplated in the statement I made on the floor of the House. The figures which I then gave, that in the total reduction of 1,000 about 367 would come from the Medical Corps and chaplains, and that there would be a reduction of about 600 in total number on the promotion list of officers, was substantially correct and would have been accomplished through the elimination and demotion provisions of the House bill if it had not been for a blunder made by the War Department itself in asking for the insertion of language by the Senate and prepared by the officer detailed from the General Staff, and which was accepted in conference. They intended to mitigate the severity of the provisions of the House bill, but their own language has proven to be more severe than the House conferees ever intended.

A propaganda of censure of Congress has since been carried on by the Army service papers and some of the newspapers of the country which have been influenced by them. Instead of criticizing Congress the War Department should more candidly admit that they have literally been "hoist by their own petard." The only criticism I am willing to stand for is that of having accepted the modification of the House language as written by the representative of the War Department itself and asked for in the conference without more careful scrutiny. The bill which I have now introduced is to relieve the situation for which the War Department is itself responsible.

When the Army appropriation bill was sent to conference the Senate amendment reducing the Army provided that the reduction of officers would be effected by elimination and absorption. The House had originally provided that the reduction should be effected by elimination and demotion. The final agreement of the conferees was to employ all three methods—elimination, absorption, and demotion.

The House conferees believed that the board of general officers charged with carrying out the provisions of the act, the board which is now in session in this city, should have full freedom of action in determining the number of officers to be eliminated, the number to be absorbed, and the number to be demoted. The Senate conferees wanted to restrict the board in demotions and absorption to a maximum of 800 officers. The suggestion to do this came from the General Staff officer working with the Senate committee and, therefore, from the War Department. This restriction was accepted by the House conferees. Of course it is this restriction on the number of officers that the board can dispose of by absorption and demotion which fixes the miminum number that must be disposed of by elimination. It is this latter minimum which must be eliminated that is causing all the present discussion and which necessitates remedial legislation.

I am introducing a bill which will carry out the original ideas of the House conferees. The board of general officers now engaged in carrying out the elimination provisions of the law have reached a point where it is possible to see that they should have some leeway in changing the authorized strength of the grades of colonel, major, and captain within very narrow limits, and that with this leeway and no restriction in their power to demote officers, it will be unnecessary to have any additional officers in any of the grades on January 1, 1923. In other words, the authority to dispose of surplus officers by absorption will be wiped out by this substitute and all officers will be disposed of, just as the House conferees believed they should be, by elimination and demotion. As between absorption and demotion there is no doubt in my mind but that demotion is far preferable.

Absorption means stagnation in promotion, means shutting the door in front of the junior officers for perhaps years to come, a condition that in my opinion is demoralizing to the officers of the Army. It means carrying surplus officers in all the grades and for no purpose other than to provide a berth for them until absorbed. While demotion, on the other hand, means forcing back into their proper grades the officers who were promoted too rapidly, but at the same time means that after January 1, 1923, there will be a steady, healthy flow of promotion in the Army, not a normal flow, because all promotions by reason of these eliminations at this time will be slowed down not only below the absurdly rapid rates of the last two years but below what should be a normal flow of promotion, and what we expect under the terms of the original act of June 30 and of my bill will be, in the course of a very few years, a normal flow of promotion. In other words, this bill, which wipes out the power of the board to dispose of officers by absorption and gives to the board great freedom of action in carrying out the reduction in the manner and by the two methods originally advocated by the House, will, in my opinion, accomplish the purpose in the best possible manner and to the greatest degree of satisfaction to the Congress and even to the Army itself. And under the terms of this bill not one single promotion-list officer, in my opinion, will be separated from the service unless, in the opinion of this board of distinguished generals, he is considered to be among the group classified by General Pershing as least effective. So that, if this bill becomes law, all this talk about having to get rid of officers with splendid records can stop.

The conferees were careful in the act of June 30 to safeguard the promotion-list standing and relative rank of the demoted officers. It has come to my attention that the Comptroller General is just about ready to render an opinion that the demotion of an officer operates to separate him from the military service and thereby changes his pay status. This should not be—in fact, it would be demoralizing—so I am including in my bill the language necessary to correct this situation. Generals Dickman and McCain, who are retired officers, who have been called to active service to perform the very important duty of serving on the board charged with carrying out the elimination provisions of the act, are not, under permanent law, entitled to active pay while on this active duty. It is only just to them, while they are performing a duty of such great importance, that they should receive the active pay of their grade. I am including in my bill the necessary authority for this.

All I have to add to this statement is this: I am in favor of a strong Regular Army, but I want to see it organized with some degree of proper proportions in the various grades—not absurdly top-heavy with high-ranking officers and no second lieutenants. And I want to see a flow of promotions in the various grades, not stagnation, even though for a time the officers who receive the promotions will be the very ones who have been demoted. On my record as one Member of this House who has taken an active part in the constructive Army legislation which has been enacted since the war I am willing to stand on the facts, but not on the untruths and misstatements that are carried from week to week in the service papers.

The following is the bill above referred to:

A bill (H. R. 12493) amending the act of June 30, 1922, making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President, upon the recommendation of the board of general officers convened to carry out the elimination provisions of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1922, is authorized to determine the number of officers below the grade of lieutenant colonel that shall be discharged and recommissioned in the next lower grade, notwithstanding the limitation of 800 in said act: Provided, That the President is authorized, upon the recommendation of said board, to increase the authorized strength of various grades as prescribed in said act by not more than 50 colonels, 150 majors, and 250 captains, and to decrease by a total of not to exceed 450, apportioned among the grades as the President may determine, the authorized strength of the two lowest grades as prescribed by said act: Provided further, That on and after January 1, 1923, there shall be not to exceed a total of 12,000 officers in the Army, and on and after that date the authorized number in each grade shall be as prescribed in said act or as modified and prescribed by the President in accordance with the provisions of the preceding proviso, and on that date there shall not be any promotion-list officers in any grade in addition to these prescribed numbers: Provided further, That the discharge and recommission of officers in the next lower grade shall not operate to reduce the pay or allowances which they are now receiving or to deprive them of credit for service now counted for purposes of pay or retirement.

SEC. 2. That the retired general officers who have been called to active duty for service on the said elimination board shall be entitled while so serving to the active pay and allowances of their grade.

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws in so far as they are inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I shall object to further requests during the consideration of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 22, strike out the words "provisions of," and insert in lieu thereof the words "duties imposed upon him by."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 5, strike out the word "hereby" and insert the word "herein."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 5, after the word "conferred" insert the words "upon him."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. Whenever the President shall be of the opinion that the existing emergency has passed he may by proclamation so declare, and thereupon the exercise of the powers conferred under this act shall be suspended until such time as they may be revived as hereinafter provided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 24, after the word "suspended" strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TOWNER). The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Strike out all of section 8 and insert the following language:

"SEC. 8. That the provisions of this act shall cease to be in effect on March 4, 1923; but the termination of this act shall not affect any act done, or any right or obligation accruing or accrued, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced in any civil case before the said termination pursuant to this act; but all rights and liabilities under this act arising before its termination shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if the act had not terminated. Any offense committed and all penalties, forfeitures, or liabilities incurred prior to such termination may be prosecuted or punished in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been terminated."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the bill gives the President the power to determine when the extraordinary authority granted in this bill shall cease. If my amendment is adopted the authority of the bill will definitely cease on the 4th of March, 1923, which is the expiration of the present Congress. I have not drawn the amendment hurriedly or without consideration. The amendment is identically the same as section 24 of the Lever Food and Fuel Control Act, except that there is this difference: Section 24 of the Lever Food and Fuel Control Act provides that the authority of the act shall cease upon the termination of the war with Germany, whereas I have provided in the amendment which I have just offered that the authority of this act shall terminate March 4, 1923.

Mr. HOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. HOCH. According to the gentleman's amendment, the power under this act would necessarily continue until the 4th of March, 1923?

Mr. BLACK. Yes. If the bill is to do any good at all, I presume it would be necessary to grant the authority for that long a time.

Mr. HOCH. Whereas it is hoped by many of us it will not run anywhere near as long as that.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; of course we hope it will not be necessary to grant these extraordinary powers for very long, and that is why I want to give them a definite limitation. Congress would be in session and have complete control of the matter, and if it thought it necessary to further extend the life of the act it could do so. No one ever expected when the Interstate Commerce Commission was created that jurisdiction would be conferred upon it to fix the price of commodities like coal by means of the power to withhold transportation facilities to persons, firms, and corporations not conforming to the commission's idea of a fair price. Congress has conferred from time to time upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to fix the cost of interstate transportation and to provide rules and regulations to carry on such transportation. In my judgment the commission has got a pretty large job cut out for it if it effectually deals with the matters properly falling within its jurisdiction, without embarking upon the uncharted sea of price fixing. I am not condemning the commission. It is not my understanding that its members are seeking this authority. What I am saying, however, is: If Congress is going to embark on the field of price fixing, some other method had best be adopted than the one sought to be applied in this bill.

When I voted for the Cummins-Esch railroad bill, I voted to give the commission very large powers over rates, car service, use of terminals, determination of priorities, and other related matters. I did that because I thought it was necessary in order that the people might be furnished efficient transportation. These powers already given to the commission are entirely sufficient to enable it to see that coal is freely moved to any part of the country where most needed, and wherever necessary that priorities are given. That is going about far enough, I think. I have never thought that Congress had the power to regulate the price of commodities or services unless it be with regard to a public utility engaged in interstate commerce like the railroads, and yet, gentlemen, under this bill you give authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. This bill, as I have already stated, makes a very unusual grant of power, one that I can not bring my mind to vote for. I think there are other and far better ways of handling the present situation than this bill proposes. Mr. Aitchison, a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in speaking of certain features of this bill, said:

> And if legislation for the future is to address itself through the medium of the extraordinary car service power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to reach prices, most of us frankly recognize that the power must be so broad in its terms that we can reach the case of 100 per cent car supply where there is no transportation disability, and say to the prospective shipper that because the price which you are demanding for your product is extortionate you shall not participate in interstate commerce.

Now, let me say this: The courts of the country have ruled that cars, whether used wholly within the State or not, are instruments of interstate commerce, and all the motive power of the railroad are likewise instruments of interstate commerce. The commission has entire control over the cars and motive power. Under this bill, if the commission is of the opinion that any particular mine is charging a price which it does not deem to be fair, it can withhold transportation service. I hold no brief whatever for producers of coal, but I do say that is a very far-reaching power to confer upon a regulatory commission.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. As a matter of fact, the way the bill is drawn now it does not limit it to carriers engaged in interstate commerce, it uses the broad term carriers and applies to intrastate as well as to interstate.

Mr. BLACK. I do not think there is any doubt about that. Now, in conclusion, let me again say that if we are going to grant such extraordinary powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission it ought to be definitely known that it is only a temporary proposition and does not extend beyond the 4th of March, 1923. That is why I have offered the amendment and I hope it will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee what his purpose is with reference to continuing the consideration of the bill for a while longer, or rising now?

Mr. WINSLOW. The chairman of the committee has no particular interest one way or the other, except to please the members of the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. It seems to be certain that we can not finish the bill to-night.

Mr. WINSLOW. Almost everybody who has spoken to me has asked that we go on and finish the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is hardly any probability that we can finish the bill to-night, and we might make time if we could come back fresh to-morrow.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Why can we not finish the bill to-night?

Mr. BARKLEY. Probably there will be amendments offered later on which will consume considerable time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Some of our Tennessee delegation are very anxious to get away to-night.

Mr. BARKLEY. You can not possibly get away to-night without keeping us here very late.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. DOWELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 12472 had come to no resolution thereon.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. VOLSTEAD presented the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 11396. An act to regulate foreign commerce in the importation into the United States of the adult honeybee (Apis mellifica);

H. R. 11699. An act relating to the appointment of the Chief of Staff of the Army;

H. R. 5775. An act for the relief of Liberty loan subscribers of the North Penn Bank, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Santa Rosa National Bank, Santa Rosa, Calif.; Mineral City Bank, Mineral City, Ohio; Robbinsdale State Bank, Robbinsdale, Minn.; and Farmers & Merchants State Bank, Kenmare, N. Dak.;

H. R. 858. An act for the relief of Alfred P. Reck; and

H. R. 4. An act granting relief to soldiers and sailors of the war with Spain, Philippine insurrection, and Chinese Boxer rebellion campaign; to widows, former widows, and dependent parents of such soldiers and sailors; and to certain Army nurses; and to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to pension the survivors of certain Indian wars from January 1, 1859, to January, 1891, inclusive, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1917.

SALT RIVER RECLAMATION PROJECT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SINNOTT presented the following conference report for printing under the rule:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10248) authorizing the sale of surplus power developed under the Salt River reclamation project, Arizona, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and from its amendment to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
CARL HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

CHAS. L. MCNARY,
W. L. JONES,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10248) authorizing the sale of surplus power developed under the Salt River reclamation project, Arizona, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

The effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee is to restore the bill to the form in which it passed the House.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
CARL HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the pending bill.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. ECHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Their own remarks on this bill.

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that all Members of the House have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extensions of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, no one disputes the fact that a national emergency exists in the mining and transportation of coal. That is admitted on every hand. We all know that the coal bin is empty, and we are all worried about our winter's supply. How shall we get it, and how shall we prevent ourselves from being gouged by the profiteer?

With this national emergency confronting us, shall we sit supinely by and merit the name of a do nothing Congress, or shall we do everything within our constitutional limits to see that the people of the country get coal, and get it at reasonable prices? Of one thing we can be sure, the coal manipulator and profiteer will be on his job this fall and winter.

All our experience teaches that the tendency of the price of coal is ever upward. The consumer to-day is paying from two to three times the pre-war price. No one seems to understand why, but he pays just the same. As a consequence of the miners' and railroad strikes, there is a situation for which the public is bound to pay dearly. No matter who wins, the public loses. Coal is a commodity that enters into every man's daily life, as almost no other does.

The fuel distribution committee has unquestionably done splendid work, but it can not cope with the situation existing at the present. The administration has gone to the extent of its powers, and it is now necessary for the Congress to take action. There is an almost total exhaustion of coal stocks, and in addition a growing shortage in transportation.

At the very best the coal situation this winter will bring privation and suffering to many homes, and unless we act promptly, conditions will be greatly aggravated.

After declaring that a national emergency exists the primary object of this bill is to grant an extension of the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission in such a way as to give positive priority to the movement of nonprofiteering coal. The bill does not seek to directly regulate the price, but puts it in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission to prevent profiteering through its power of regulating or withholding the means of transportation. It goes on the theory that if the profiteer can not get cars for transporting his coal he will sell at a reasonable price rather than not sell at all.

Ordinary competition in buying when the stores are depleted is bound to send the price of coal soaring. Add to this the unusual opportunity afforded the profiteer as winter approaches when everybody must have coal and we have a situation that demands immediate congressional action.

Of course we all know that the Congress has no constitutional power to fix the price of any commodity by direct legislation. At the same time we must realize that the man with the empty coal bin ought not to be left to the mercy of either the coal manipulator or profiteer.

The provisions of this bill are well within our constitutional bounds. The bill does not attempt to fix prices but it does provide a method, when the price is unreasonable or extortionate, for imposing an embargo or denying transportation facilities to the offender.

The emergency, in my opinion, is so great that had the President requested power to seize the mines and the necessary transportation facilities I would have voted to grant him such power. But we are not asked to grant such sweeping powers. The method in this bill is far from being so radical and at the same time promises to be thoroughly effective. Mr. Hoover, the chairman of the fuel committee, has stated that the plan proposed in this bill is the most effective and expeditious for taking care of the emergency that has been suggested.

Every home in the land is affected by the coal scarcity. It is our plain duty to do what we can to prevent extortion.

It is not the intention or design of this measure to interfere with the legitimate coal business or with the nonprofiteering coal operator. But it is the intention to confer upon the fuel distributor and the Interstate Commerce Commission such powers as may be necessary to curb the speculator and profiteer in coal.

Under the bill it will be the duty of the fuel distributor to ascertain the available supply of coal and other fuel, and whether there exists a shortage within the United States; to ascertain the fields of production of coal, as well as the principal markets to which such production may be transported; and to further ascertain the prices normally and usually charged for such coal, and whether current prices are just and reasonable; and the kind and location of the consumers, and who should receive priority in transportation and distribution, and make appropriate recommendations to the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the end that an equitable distribution of fuel may be secured. Upon the information so furnished by the fuel distributor, the Interstate Commerce Commission will issue orders for priorities in car service, embargoes, and other suitable measures for the best meeting of the emergency and the curbing of fuel profiteers.

Such a measure is at this time absolutely necessary for the general welfare of the people of the country, and I shall therefore give it my full support.

Mr. COLE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am in favor of these regulatory measures in the exigency with which we are now confronted.

We have reached the point in our political and industrial life where it behooves every loyal citizen to pause and take stock for the future. The strike menace in this country has become intolerable. When it becomes necessary for the Chief Executive of the United States to lay aside the arduous duties that necessarily devolve upon him and for months devote his time almost exclusively in an attempt to settle industrial disorders, the whole country becomes aware of the approach of a power that menaces our very freedom.

The development of a great portion of our vast domain has been wholly accomplished through the instrumentality of our network of railroads. When the great transcontinental lines cease to operate the business of that portion of the country that depends upon them will cease to function and the people, wanting food and fuel, will be forced to abandon their loved homes or suffer and perish for want of the necessaries of life.

We boast, and rightfully, of our boundless resources. Not only do we produce abundantly for all our people but yearly export millions of dollars' worth of our products to foreign nations, and yet it is proven that in the midst of this wonderful production, under our own flag, conditions may arise that will bring ruin and death to thousands of our people. Gentlemen, "these things ought not so to be."

The President, ever mindful of the welfare of all the people, his great heart pulsating in sympathy with the suffering public, has voluntarily chosen to enter this seething vortex of industrial disorder and seeks to bring order out of the awful chaos.

But even the President is limited in his powers to act in such an emergency, and the most intelligent falter in attempting a solution of the problem. Government control and operation should be the last resort. Our costly experience in that particular during and following the war is still a bugbear in the minds of the people. Yet something must be done, and speedily. Such a procedure would further disturb the fiscal policies of the Nation, but human lives are not to be measured with money and human suffering must not wait long upon private industrial adjustments.

Conferences have failed. Proposals and counterproposals have come to naught. There stand the two opposing forces, grim determination depicted in every line and feature, while the great American public and the great American industries, in helpless repose, stand the mute and silent victims of the foul emanations of selfishness and hate. Eliminate these two elements and industrial peace and prosperity will speedily follow. The recurring nausea of industrial disturbances will never cease until all classes of our people are willing to go back and stand fairly and squarely upon the fundamental principles and laws of the land, as established by our fathers.

The American people have a divine mission to fulfill in the world, which is the maintenance of the faith of our fathers. The highest destiny of our Nation and welfare of our people are grounded in that faith, and if in that faith our Nation was conceived and brought forth it is in that faith it must live and achieve its highest destiny. Driven from their loved homes in the Old World, not so much because of the lack of material resources, but because of the bans to their freedom of action and conscience, they bade adieu forever to the limitations of the mother country and established here the highest type of government of which the mind of man, aided by divinity, is able to conceive. They were not so much concerned about the tremendous possibilities embraced in the vast physical resources of the country. The sweeping plains, the boundless forests, the majestic streams, the sublime mountains, were all subservient to the appealing theme of civil and religious liberty.

Material development and great wealth were not the highest goal. To them this was not to be a government of sweeping plains, of rich mines, of towering mountains, of majestic streams, but a government of the people, and the marvelous material resources were considered valuable only in so far as they contributed to the development of the people in civil and religious life. These were some of the lofty motives that sponsored the establishment of the Government.

Where are we to-day? I am not content to assume the role of a pessimist. One who is somewhat familiar with the humble beginning of the Republic and standing to-day in the midst of the marvelous achievements that have been wrought can not restrain an emotion of genuine pride that his destiny is coincidental with such a Government. But when one great class of our people undertakes to humiliate and harass another class at the expense of both themselves and the whole, we are drifting away from the fundamentals, and it is high time that warning voices were heard.

Happiness and contentment among all conditions of our people is the highest conception of the purpose of government, and therefore should be the basic motive of all American activities. When we have gone so far in our mad frenzy for riches that we are content to disregard the baneful effect upon our fellows, we have lost the faith of our fathers and become a detriment to the welfare of our country.

On the other hand, if our endowments are such as to make it incumbent upon us to labor in the physical walks of life, our greatest contribution to the welfare of the Nation is a feeling of appreciation for the opportunities afforded, and to insist, not through hatred, not through destruction of property, but through love of home and country, that the reward for our labor shall be in keeping with the American standards of living and make possible the abundant instillation of high ideals of citizenship in the hearts and souls of the rising generations.

I believe that the industrial relations of our Nation could be so adjusted as to bring a reasonable degree of happiness and contentment to everybody, but that comprehends recognition of the humanity in every man, regardless of his sphere in life.

There are both material and mental opportunities and obligations in the world. He who feels an inclination to perform labor in the material world should and may have that inclination gratified, and he who feels an inclination to perform labor in the mental world should and may have that inclination gratified. These inclinations are born with us, hence are endowments from the Creator Himself. So that when a man occupying a position by reason of the exercise of his mental faculties thinks himself better or more exalted than one who is exercising his faculties in the material world, he is questioning the wisdom and judgment of the great Creator and is therefore a detriment to the welfare of humanity.

It matters not to what eminence in the political world a man may have attained, it matters not how great his accumulation of wealth, it matters not how vast his store of knowledge, he is not better than any other man who is exercising his talents in the realm of his choice, and if he have superior talents it is his bounden duty and primal obligation to exercise those talents to the fullest extent in an endeavor to ameliorate the wants of men and to assist in their elevation to higher planes of living; for there is no honor, there is no exaltation, there is no excellency, except in honest endeavor for the welfare of one another.

If these principles had been invoked in the beginning, this strike never would have been called, and we shall never cease to be troubled with industrial disturbances until these principles are invoked.

This strike, however, is not a theory but a deplorable fact. No one who is familiar with the law will question the right of a man or number of men to quit work whenever they feel like it or for any cause except in violation of a contract. But the right to work is as inviolable as the right to cease work, and can never be otherwise under any just arrangement. No normal man who has kept step with modern progress will question the right of labor to organize for mutual welfare and benefit. Neither will he question the right of capital to combine, that the great industries of the country, industries that furnish employment to labor, might be fostered and kept in motion. These two, labor and capital, should work amicably together. They are interdependent. Without the one the other can not survive. Why, then, this constant warfare? And while this war is on not only do the parties to the controversy suffer economic loss but the great public must endure unnecessary privation.

Capital was the first to organize. The development of the country necessitated such organization, and I am inclined to think had capital treated its labor fairly there never would have been any organization of labor. They were driven to it through the onus of self-protection. Therefore capital ought not now find fault with labor for combining. It is an obvious fact that where labor receives a just reward and recognition that institution is never hampered with a strike. That principle is exemplified in the President's own establishment at Marion, Ohio.

It is a regrettable fact that heinous crimes are often committed during the period of a strike. Unscrupulous agitators have drifted in, and from within, like a loathsome disease, gnaw at the very vitals of our industrial life. With secret, scheming, ulterior motives they circulate among the men, scatter the deadly venom of vile hate, and morality, innocency and all decency are submerged in the caulron of crime. They have no use for government; they despise the restraints of legal freedom; and secreted in the brambles of deceit, like a venomous reptile, strike the innocent victim, and the poison of rebellion does its deadly work. No punishment is too severe for this law-breaking, authority-defying element. "Creatures and parasites of the devil" are they, and the sooner they are sent to their damnable reward or banished from our shores the better for our country.

But equally as bad, equally as loathsome, are they who will attempt to take advantage of a situation such as the one with which we are now confronted and wantonly, needlessly, and soullessly raise the price of the commodities over which they have control or lower the wages of labor for the purpose of extorting from the helpless of the country that which is needed to provide the bare necessities of life. When these people are literally crushed beneath the overwhelming sentiment of an outraged public, then, and not until then, may we hope to experience surcease of industrial sorrows.

The profiteer, traitorous product of the World War! While the flower and hope of American manhood on the fields of Flanders and elsewhere were making the supreme sacrifice upon the altars of our country, and while the great body of the American public were enduring every known privation to support them in their patriotic devotion, these leeches of society, calling themselves American citizens to the disgrace and dishonor of our fair name, were drawing, drawing at the very vitals of our body politic, and there is no punishment too severe to mete out to them.

For five long months the President has been exerting the powers and prestige of his high office in an endeavor to effect a settlement of this strike, using every known argument to bring the disputing parties together to the end that all threatened hardships to the great mass of our people might be averted. On the 18th of August he appeared before a joint session of Congress and delivered one of the greatest messages ever heard in this Chamber, suggesting ways and means whereby the awful calamity of nonproduction and nondistribution might be checked. In concluding that message the President said:

> In the weeks of patient conference and attempts at settlement I have come to appraise another element in the engrossing industrial dispute of which it is only fair to take cognizance. It is in some degree responsible for the strikes and has hindered attempts at adjustment. I refer to the warfare on the unions of labor. The Government has no sympathy or approval for this element of discord in the ranks of industry. Any legislation in the future must be as free from this element of trouble making as it is from labor extremists who strive for class domination. We recognize these organizations in the law, and we must accredit them with incalculable contribution to labor's uplift. It is of public interest to preserve them and profit by the good that is in them, but we must check the abuses and the excesses which conflict with public interest, precisely as we have been progressively legislating to prevent capitalistic, corporate, or managerial domination which is contrary to public welfare. We also recognize the right of employers and employees alike, within the law, to establish their methods of conducting business, to choose their employment, and to determine their relations with each other. We must reassert the doctrine that in this Republic the first obligation and the first allegiance of every citizen, high or low, is to his Government, and to hold that Government to be the just and unchallenged sponsor for public welfare, and the liberty, security, and rights of all its citizens. No matter what clouds may gather, no matter what storms may ensue, no matter what hardships may attend or what sacrifices may be necessary, government by law must and will be sustained.
>
> Wherefore I am resolved to use all the power of the Government to maintain transportation and sustain the rights of men to work.

What clearer, fairer proposition for both sides could possibly be expressed? What shall be the hope of our country if its Chief Executive declare not for the enforcement of law? What just criticism can be offered to such a declaration?

We must never forget that both capital and labor, as well as the great American public, are always and forever absolutely dependent upon the maintenance and perpetuity of the great American Union. If our Government fail, all that we have, all that we are, and all that we can hope to be will follow in its lurid wake. There will be no strikes, but revolution. There will be no law, but license. There will be no peace, but death.

At this time of extreme emergency let us enact these laws granting to the Government the authority to regulate and control the production and distribution of the necessaries of life so long as the need exists. And then awake, America! Let every loyal citizen realize that it is his Government that is being weighed in the balance; that it is his future that is being threatened with destruction. Then let us turn from our petty political bickerings, authorize the amicable adjustment of our domestic industrial disturbances, eliminate from the body politic every semblance of soviet disorder, foil the unholy conceptions of every disloyal profiteer, and with keen, unobstructed vision may we all peer into the clear vista of the future, behold the brilliant star of our destiny, full orbed in the firmament of nations, guiding the old ship of state safely toward the harbor of the highest possible attainments in governmental perfection.

EMERGENCY COAL LEGISLATION—A FEDERAL FUEL DISTRIBUTOR WITH NOTHING TO DISTRIBUTE.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I spoke against this bill yesterday and gave the reason for my opposition. It is not that I am opposed to its purpose or that I am lacking in appreciation of the gravity of the coal situation. My objection is that the measure does not go far enough. It falls amazingly short of the scope which we were led by the President's message to expect.

He appeared before the joint session of the two Houses of Congress on August 18 and said:

> If it may have your approval, I recommend immediate provision for a temporary national coal agency, with needed capital, to purchase, sell, and distribute coal which is carried in interstate shipment. I do not mean that all interstate coal shall be handled by such a Federal organization; perhaps none will be necessary; but it will restore its capital to the Public Treasury and will be the instrumentality of guarding the public interest where private conscience is insensible to a public need.

I heartily concur in the purpose which seemed then to have animated him, and regret that he has been led, in some way, to change his views, and stand for less than he rightfully demanded and the crisis requires.

In the report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce we find this very frank admission. The chairman of that committee is always blunt and candid, and I have always admired in him those rare and commendable traits. He says:

> Since the utterance of the foregoing suggestion by the President, his advisors, including members of the voluntary committee appointed by the President, and those also who have advised and assisted in the preparation of this bill (H. R. 12472) have determined and agreed that the possible plan suggested by the President could be well set aside and another method followed in working out the problem. The President is in accord with this conclusion.

While the bill was under discussion yesterday, however, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] called attention to the fact that the President is not altogether "in accord" with the conclusion of the committee. The Washington Star so quotes him or, at least, states that he has not abandoned the idea promulgated in his message of legislation providing for a national coal agency to purchase, sell, and distribute coal to guard the public interest "where private conscience is insensible to a public need."

THE TERM "FEDERAL DISTRIBUTOR" A MISNOMER.

I think the President must realize, as the people sooner or later will find out to their sorrow, that the bill before us, offered as a substitute for the President's plan, is a hollow mockery and a sham. As I pointed out yesterday, the name of "fuel distributor" is a misnomer. He has nothing to distribute and has no powers, except to investigate certain phases of the coal situation. For instance, among the foolish things he is authorized to investigate is whether or not there is a shortage of coal. And when he is done investigating, all he can do is to make a recommendation to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Then that body can "in its discretion," according to section 5 of the law, "issue such order or orders for priority in car service, embargoes, and other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier or region, municipality, community, person, copartnership, or corporation."

What is the sense of appointing a Federal fuel distributor who has not the power to distribute and where the real power to meet the situation is vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission? Would it not be better to intrust control of the entire situation to the Interstate Commerce Commission? The obvious purpose of investing it with such plenary powers, as are provided in this bill, is to enable it to throttle profiteers by availing itself of its power to allocate cars for coal distribution?

The Interstate Commerce Commission is clearly the commission, among all the branches of the Government, which ought to be intrusted with such control. I have no fault to find with the powers granted to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I would make them even larger and broader than they are.

What I object to is the interposition of the so-called "Federal fuel distributor," whose only function, it appears, is to organize another elaborate bureau in the maze of governmental bureaus already burdening the taxpayer. He is given $250,000 to organize this bureau and make jobs for the faithful. What a pity it is in this hour of the country's distress that even an eminent coal famine is taken advantage of to make jobs for partisan cohorts!

The pretense that a Federal fuel distributor is necessary to investigate and report to the Interstate Commerce Commission would be laughable if it were not so pathetic. He is required, under this bill, to investigate the very things and to ascertain the very information which other bureaus of our Government are amply competent to furnish. The United States Department of Geology can give full information as to the fields of production of coal and other fuel. The daily press can give the prices normally and usually charged for such coal and other fuel, and the public itself will testify, without much coaxing, that such prices are very far, indeed, from being "just and reasonable." Yet to determine these questions the Federal fuel distributor is called upon to organize a bureau at the enormous expense of a quarter of a million dollars.

HOW ABOUT THE UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION?

If any bureau or instrumentality of government were necessary to collate and submit to the Interstate Commerce Commission information necessary upon which to predicate priority orders, why could we not intrust it to the United States coal commission, which Congress authorized last week with an appropriation of $100,000? Congress was called together on August 15, with a great blare of trumpets, in order to pass the United States coal commission bill. I find that the authority of that commission runs largely parallel to the powers with which the Federal fuel distributor is vested. Its powers and the scope of its inquiries are much broader than that intrusted to the fuel distributor in the bill before us. The conclusion is therefore inevitable that the appointment of a Federal fuel distributor is to make patronage rather than to afford relief to the public.

THE BOGIE OF "UNCONSTITUTIONALITY."

I would prefer to see the Federal fuel distributor and his bureau eliminated from this bill, but the minority is powerless. I do not think we can afford to vote against it even for this glaring defect. I entertained the hope that enough public spirit would be aroused in this House to strike out that provision from the bill, but I can not discern among the bitterest opponents of the bill who have spoken on this floor any disposition to save the National Treasury. Most of the opposition against the measure seems to be based upon that vague and tenuous but persistent stand-by of forum orators, namely, "its unconstitutionality." They become very much wrought up over the prospect of seeing the poor coal profiteer deprived of cars to move his product by "unconstitutional" interference with private business, and all that sort of hoary persiflage. But, to my mind, it is this very prospect which offers the only ray of hope in the bill. That is the very reason why I have determined to vote for it. The Interstate Commerce Commission has control of the carriers. It has authority to fix rates for passengers and freight. Passengers and freight can not be carried without locomotives, and locomotives can not be run without coal. Coal is therefore an essential, fundamental element in the fixing of rates. It is as much a public utility as the vehicles it propels. Without it interstate as well as intrastate commerce would be impossible. My only hope is that the Interstate Commerce Commission will be permitted to get to work at the earliest possible moment to put an end to the most dastardly form of profiteering to which this country has ever been subjected.

Mr. ECHOLS. Mr. Speaker, the coal business has been prostrate now for about 20 months, except in very limited sections. The minute that there appears to be a revival of the industry we are asked to enact legislation that will again throw it into a chaotic condition. The purpose of the present bill, if it has any purpose at all, as has been admitted by its advocates, is that of regulating the price of coal in an indirect manner. We undertake to do a thing indirectly that we admit can not be done directly. The local press has suggested in the last day or two that it is proposed to fix a flat rate of $10 or $11 on bituminous coal when sold to the consumer here in the city. That suggestion shows how little price fixers understand the value of coal. It might as well be suggested that a flat rate be fixed on the sale of every pair of shoes or suit of clothes. Coal has different values the same as any other commodity. There are three distinct coal fields producing various grades of coal in the district that I represent, namely, the Kanawha, the New River, and the Winding Gulf fields. When the coal distributor makes his so-called investigation for the purpose of giving information to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which regulates the price of coal by withholding cars, I venture the assertion that there will be a uniform price upon all the coal produced in that section, although it is well known to anybody familiar with the production of coal that the grades are not the same and that it costs more to produce in one field than it does in another. But it will all be bituminous coal, and it will all be in West Virginia within a comparatively limited area. Judging the future by the past, if any difference is made in the price, the producers of lower-grade coal will no doubt receive the higher price.

Here is the practical effect of this bill. A manufacturer doing business in my district goes to a coal producer within 3 miles of his factory and asks the price of a carload of coal. The producer says $3.25 per ton. The coal distributor's agent on the ground says that is an exorbitant price. There are no cars available to ship coal at that price in this field. The freight rate is 25 cents per ton, and the total cost $3.50 delivered at the factory. The producer is willing to sell at that price—he can not sell at a lower price and operate his mine. The manufacturer is willing to pay the price asked—he can not pay more and run his factory. Result—closed factory and closed mine and more men out of employment; or the manufacturer must go to some other coal field, if he can afford it, where some other governmental agent who knows nothing about the value of coal fixes a price at which the operator can operate his mine, buy his coal at perhaps a higher price and in addition pay $2 a ton freight.

It has been admitted by every advocate of the bill who has mentioned that phase of the matter at all that there will be no difficulty in producing a sufficient quantity of coal for the needs of the country, but the bill is proposed because the railroads are unable to haul the coal to the places of consumption. The railroads have been "regulated" until they are a wreck. The advocates of Government regulation are now turning their attention to another industry that will not only not reduce the price of coal but will no doubt cost the consumers millions of dollars before we get away from the regulation. If any advocate of this bill will point out to me with any substantial proof of his statement where the Government has interfered with the business of the country as this bill proposes to do with the coal industry and thereby helped the consumer to obtain a cheaper commodity, then I will vote for this bill.

It has been pointed out by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] that the bill confers no new power except the provision which undertakes to regulate the price of coal; that every other power conferred by this bill upon the Interstate Commerce Commission is now lodged in that commission by the transportation act.

I have not heard of the gentlemen from the New England States urging price fixing of shoes, woolen garments, or silken fabrics; and yet we know the prices of these commodities, necessaries of life, are very much more out of proportion today than is the price of coal at the mines. Nor have I heard of the gentlemen from the Northwest who advocate the passage of this bill say anything about fixing the price of lumber, wheat, flour, or any other commodity produced in that particular section. They are anxious to fix the price upon everything except those things that immediately affect their constituents.

If we are to fix the price of coal, then we must necessarily fix the price of other commodities. One section of this country will not stand for the fixing of the price of the commodity produced in that section and allow the commodity produced in another section to be sold at extravagant and extortionate prices. It should not be so. For the past few years we have been paying from $10 to $20 for a pair of shoes that everyone who buys them knows that the cost of material and labor in those shoes is far less than 50 per cent of the price the consumer is required to pay.

If we are to believe the press, the Chief Executive admits there is no necessity for this bill at this time. We are here engaged in enacting legislation for which there exists no necessity, and for which there may never exist a necessity. We are meddling with an industry upon which the prosperity of the country must largely depend. We are preparing to appoint another man coal distributor. We might as well call him coal administrator, but that phrase is a sort of stench in the nostrils of the country by reason of the experience with the coal administrator during and after the war. It has been asserted that a single week's work of that Government agency cost the people of the country more than a billion dollars. If this bill is ever put into effect we will do well to get out with a cost of a billion dollars to the country.

Secretary Hoover says that practically all of the large coal producers of the country have kept faith in their gentlemen's agreement upon the price of coal at the mines. In my own section 95 per cent of the coal producers have scrupulously kept their agreement with Secretary Hoover not to raise the price of coal. Is there any more danger in the future than there has been in the past? Everyone knows that the coal strike is ended and that the country can produce more coal than is required. Those who think know that there is keener competition among those who produce and sell coal at the mines than perhaps any other industry in the country, and everyone who thinks knows that competition is the only thing that will properly regulate the price of any commodity.

If the Congress is to follow the requests of departments and bureaus for more power in the regulation of the business of the country, then Congress and the country must expect stagnation of the industries until we get a Congress that will let the law of supply and demand regulate the business. We had reasonable freight and passenger rates in this country until too much regulation and Government control sent the rates to the sky line and stopped the building of railroads. What happened with the railroads by too much regulation will, of course, happen to the coal industry, only to a more marked degree, for the simple reason that there could never be the limited competition in the coal industry that is in the transportation of the country. This bill, when it becomes effective and is put into operation, will but add to the cost of coal to the consumer and serve to increase the existing industrial chaos, which has been largely augmented by Government boards and commissions.

It might be pertinent to ask, What does the Interstate Commerce Commission know about the coal industry? If we are to judge by what they have done with the transportation system, we might answer "nothing." Some members of the commission have devoted years of time to the transportation system, and yet I have heard of no one complimenting them upon their store of information about that particular subject. Now we are going to confer upon them additional powers in a matter that, it is safe to say, they know far less than they do about the transportation of the country. Who is the coal distributor to be—a doctor of medicine, a doctor of divinity, or a doctor of philosophy, as the coal administrator was. I do not mean any reflection upon these men. They are among our best and most useful citizens. It is reasonably safe to say that the coal distributor will not be a man who is familiar with the coal industry, and yet we are turning over the absolute control of one of the greatest industries in the country to a single individual, and his word, if it is anything at all, will be the law regulating that particular industry. Oh, he will have his assistants, clerks, stenographers, and so forth, selected from somewhere in the United States where they know nothing whatever about the difficulties and cost of producing coal or what is a fair price for it at the mine. From such an organization there will come favoritism, confusion, reduced production, and increased cost.

I venture the assertion that there is not a socialist in the country who believes in the nationalization of the industries but what is in favor of this bill. There is not an I. W. W. from the Atlantic to the Pacific that will not rejoice when he knows the Congress is considering the passage of a bill of this character. They know what this sort of legislation will inevitably lead to. Russia is gradually moving around on the other side of the globe.

If we are to judge by what has been said upon the floor of this House by the proponents of the bill, we are bound to reach the conclusion that they have but little confidence in any good resulting from its passage. Mr. MONDELL, the majority floor leader, consumed 20 minutes of the time of the House apologizing for his support of the bill and wound up intimating he had some slight hopes of some good coming from it, while earlier in his speech he admitted that in the end it would very probably do more harm than it would do good by prolonging the high price of coal to the consumer after the emergency has passed. There is no attempt to reach the coal broker, the man who has but little investment and employs but little labor and who is undoubtedy more guilty of profiteering than is the coal producer, who has millions invested and upon whom hundreds of thousands of people, including women and children, depend for a living.

What the country needs is fewer boards, commissions, and so forth, undertaking to deal with industrial matters instead of creating more of them. This so-called coal distributor has no function in the world that does not now belong to at least three other governmental agencies, namely, the Federal Trade Commission, the Bureau of Mines, and the Interstate Commerce Commission; and if the bill we passed a few days ago, called a "fact-finding bill," should become law, there will be five Federal agencies upon which are conferred exactly the same powers that are conferred by this bill upon the coal distributor.

Mr. BOIES. The speaker has some doubts as the germaneness of the amendment offered as section 5½ to H. R. 12472, a bill conferring additional powers upon the Interstate Commerce Commission on account of the coal and other fuel situation, and the declared emergency existing in the production, transportation, and distribution thereof. This amendment was intended to confer the power on the commission to reduce the present freight rates on coal and other fuel by 50 per cent.

If the amendment has no other effect it is hoped that the Committee of the House on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may be induced to prepare and introduce a bill authorizing and directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix reasonable freight rates on coal, and also on the produce from the farms of this country. This commission possesses that power and authority now—the only obstacle in the way is, will it take notice of the price of these commodities and act? If not, will the committee of the House having jurisdiction of the matter see to it that a law is provided at this session of Congress relieving an intolerable situation?

It is a well-known fact that the consumers of coal in this country have been required to pay outrageous prices during the past several years, and there is more than a suspicion lodged in the minds of the people that there has been unjustifiable profiteering along the road some place between the mouth of the mine and the door of the furnace. It is also well known that though Congress has often made an attempt it has not been able to ascertain the facts in connection with the mining and distribution and the sale of coal in this country. There should be no ownership in facts outside of the knowledge possessed by the people in general in connection with the production and sale of the necessities of life.

It is also well understood that the coal mines of this country have not been operated in the interests of the people but exclusively in the interests of the mine owners and with dead secrecy so far as the consumers of coal have been and are concerned. It is well understood that there is buried in the earth in the State of Pennsylvania bituminous coal sufficient to supply the needs of the people of this country for a thousand years, and that thousands of acres of coal land are owned by private individuals and corporations that will not be opened up during the lives of several generations to come.

The same wording and the same holding in construction of laws and in the construction of the Constitution of the United States should not necessarily obtain in connection with property rights in the coal fields of this country when the lives and the health of the people are in jeopardy. If the coal mines and the coal fields of this country may be permitted to remain locked at the expense of the consumers, then, to my mind, in such connection the preamble of our Constitution is meaningless.

The emergency exists to-day in respect to the production and transportation of coal and such emergency calls for new laws and not a hidebound construction of the provisions of the Constitution of this Government. Emergency has been the mother of all laws since the dawn of civilization, and it is time now for emergency to give birth to a new order of things rightfully connected with the mining and distribution of the fuel of this country.

I hope I understand as thoroughly as the ordinary individual that the transportation facilities of this country must be on a paying basis, and I would not favor a disturbance of such a situation. However, I feel that Congress during the past two years has dealt generously with the railroads of this country.

Glancing at the quotations in the newspapers this morning from the New York Stock Exchange, I saw that on yesterday's market there was almost a universal advance in the price of railroad stocks: The Baltimore & Ohio Ry. advanced $1 per share; Brooklyn Rapid Transit 1⅛; Canadian Pacific advanced 3⅜; Chicago & Eastern Ill. advanced ⅝; the preferred $1; C., M. & St. P. Ry. advanced ⅛; its preferred stock ½; Chicago & N. W. advanced 3½; C., R. I. & P. advanced 1¼; Erie advanced ¾; its preferred advanced 1½; Erie 2d preferred advanced ¼; Great Northern preferred advanced 1½; Great Northern Ore advanced ⅝; Illinois Central, standing at 108½, advanced ¼; Lake Erie & W. advanced ⅜; Louisville & Nashville advanced $1; Market St. Ry. advanced ¼; M. & St. L., new, advanced ⅜; M., K. & T., new, advanced ⅜; M., K. & T. preferred, new, advanced ⅞; Missouri Pac. advanced ½; Missouri Pac. preferred advanced 1⅛; New York Central advanced ¾; New York Central & St. L. advanced $1; New York, New Haven & Hartford advanced $1; New York, Ont. & W. advanced ¾; Norfolk & Western advanced 2½; Northern Pacific advanced 1⅛; the Pennsylvania advanced ¼; Peoria & East, advanced $1; Pullman Co. standing at 126¾, advanced 1¾; Reading advanced 1½; St. Louis Southwestern advanced 1⅛; Southern Pacific, standing at 95, advanced 1⅝; Southern Railway advanced ⅝; Southern Railway preferred advanced $1; Texas & Pac. advanced $1; Texas Pac. C. & O. advanced ⅝; Union Pac., standing at 150¾, advanced 2½; United Ry. Inv. advanced 1¼; United Ry. Inv. preferred advanced 2⅝; Wabash advanced ½; Wabash preferred A advanced ¾; Western Md. advanced ⅞; Western Md. 2d preferred advanced ⅞.

More than nine in ten of the stocks on the exchange yesterday advanced. Otis Elevator advanced $7; Marland Oil advanced 2⅝; May Dept. Store, 3¾; Mexican Petrol, 3¾; N. Y. Air Brake, 1⅛; North Am. Rights, 3⅛; Standard Oil N. J., standing at 183, advanced $1; Standard Oil Cal. advanced 3⅝; Vanadium Inc. advanced 2¼; Western Union Tel., standing at 120¼, advanced $4; Willys-Overland preferred advanced 1⅝; Studebaker, standing at 129½, advanced 1½.

Scores of other stocks not named advanced from a fraction of a dollar or more. United States Government war loans made a nice advance, but we hear that a very large proportion of them purchased by the common people do not now belong to them.

Glancing at another column of the same paper the Chicago grain market showed that wheat closed at 1⅝ to 1¾ lower; corn was down 1⅛ to 1¼; oats ¼ off; hogs were from 10 cents to 25 cents lower.

I have generally refrained from saying anything that would give an unreasonable radical an opportunity to base his rantings thereon. I am glad to see good prices everywhere and for everything, but I would like to have some one tell me why it is that most everything excepting products from the farm are bringing higher and better prices, good prices, while the products of the farm, net to the farmer, are below the cost of production. If it is a question of supply and demand and this thing keeps up, many of the farmers will have to go out of business—and there will not be much encouragement in the interests of large appropriations by Congress for the questionable policy of the artificial watering of lands while the Government is staggering under its debt and the people are becoming discouraged on account of high taxes, ruinous freight rates to the farmer, and the increasing cost of things that the farmer and the ordinary consumer are obliged to purchase at retail.

This is a partial recital of some of the conditions that confront the people of the country to-day, and in discussing the price of coal and the cost of transportation and the unrest in the country they are matters that should be considered, and considered earnestly, in behalf of the welfare of the people and in connection with their contentment and rights which they should enjoy.

Having my attention called to the wonderful advance of prices on the stock exchanges of this country, and keeping in mind the improvements that the railroads have been afforded an opportunity to make during the past year or so, and their earnings during that time, leads me to believe that it is not unjust or unfair to ask the railroads of this country, during this great emergency, to reduce their freight rates on coal during the next few months by 50 per cent and thus assume a little of the responsibility that rests upon the shoulders of all the people at this time.

What I have said is not intended for the ears of the anarchist, the criminal, nor those disposed to create unrest, but is intended for the sober thought of the Members of this House, whose ability to think and disposition to do the right thing is not at such "a low ebb" after all.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I must confess that it is not with my whole approval that I shall vote for the measure under discussion, but I shall do so, and that gladly, under the compulsion of existing conditions. We are told by those who are opposed to this bill that it is a venture in price fixing that may lead to disastrous results. If Congress can fix the price of coal it can fix the price of any other commodity. But the proper answer to this objection may be that we are not fixing the price of coal, but forbidding extortion, or profiteering at least, in the same. Nor is it wholly true that this is a first venture. The Government has long made rates for railroad service, and it has more recently undertaken to fix the wages of railroad labor.

The bill under consideration is so drastic that I am sorry its enactment is necessary. It would not be necessary if all men in business were just and if none were disposed to take advantage of a critical situation in the industrial world as at present constituted. Those who will deal justly, as many are still disposed to do, have nothing to fear from the enactment of this bill into law. Such laws are not made for those who do what is right, but for those who would do what is wrong.

Those who object to the measure have frequently invoked the Constitution. I am not a constitutional lawyer, nor am I willing to admit that those who raise this objection are all constitutional lawyers, though some of them may be educated in the law. Constitutional objections are very ancient in American history. In 1803 President Jefferson hesitated in the annexation of Louisiana on constitutional grounds until he was persuaded that the doing of a great public good could not be unconstitutional. Can it be said that we are not doing a great public good in enacting a law to prevent profiteering in a public necessity like coal, upon which all industrial activities are based and which is part of the comfort and the health of every home in the land?

The people who during the cold months of the fast oncoming winter might be compelled to pay unreasonable prices for their fuel may not be in a mood to discuss constitutional technicalities such as have been brought forth in debates in this House during the past few days. A constitution that might be construed to rob them or to freeze them might be a constitution brought into public contempt. We must not cast this odiom on a Constitution that is already frequently reviled by the unthinking among us.

That the consumers must pay for the disastrous disturbances in the coal-mining fields is plainly axiomatic. But there are ways of paying that are more reprehensible than others. In the Illinois fields, according to newspaper reports, the mine owners and operators seem to have calculated their losses during the strike, including interest on their idle investments and estimates of profits that they might have made, and this lump sum running up into the millions is to be apportioned to each ton of coal that may be mined between now and the 1st of April, when the strike settlement period expires. We are told that this apportionment amounts to $1 or $1.25 per ton. This they propose to add deliberately to the mine price of coal. That is making the public pay for their losses, although some of these losses may have been due to their own mismanagement of the situation, for it can not be assumed that the blame for this strike was all on one side. Nor must we lose sight of the fact that during this strike the operators disposed of large surpluses of coal at increased prices and they probably sold slack and slag and slate at coal prices, an eager and dependent public not judging the quality of the fuel that they needed.

But in what other line of business could such losses be so coolly charged up to others? Shall the mine operators be the only ones who in the end will suffer no loss?

Surely the miners, who do the more important work of actually producing the coal, will not be able to add their lost wages to their wages during the next five months, for they have gone back at the old wage scale. I have received a statement from one business concern in my home city to the effect that the strike increased their operating expenses to the extent of $24,000. From what I know of their business I know that they will not be able to add it to their selling prices during the next five months. Every shipper, including the farmers of my district and State, has suffered grievous losses on account of the strike in the coal fields. The prices of farm products have been depressed and shipments have been delayed because of the shortage of fuel. We all know that the farmers will not be able to add these losses, brought about through no fault of their own, to the prices which they will receive for their potatoes and corn, their hogs and cattle, between now and the 1st of April.

The farmers, for whom I have a right to speak, and for whom it is my duty to speak while I am here, are confronted with the fact that they must buy their coal mined at war wages and sold at war-time profits, while they are selling their own products at prices that are down to the pre-war levels. This may be borne for another season, but it is something that can not always be endured with the patience and patriotism which have always characterized those who have been tillers of the soil. There must be readjustments in the labor world and in the domains of industry and business to correspond with the readjustments that have already taken place in agriculture, and until there is such coordination and cooperation we shall not be wholly normalized.

To my mind, the only thing to be feared is that even under nationalized supervision coal prices will be still too high and not too low. The recent ruling of $3.50 to $4.50 at the mines is an illustration of what we have to fear under this legislation, for even Government control is not always wholly wise, nor can it be made wholly efficient. Under this ruling mines from which coal can be placed on the cars around $2 a ton were permitted to increase their gains. Government regulations must be more or less uniform, and they have to be based, to some extent, on the cost at the mines least advantageously located.

But the action contemplated in this bill is not only demanded of us who make laws here in Washington, but I believe it is the best that we can do, whatever its imperfections may be.

There is the alternative of Government seizure and operation of the mines, which has been favored by some. But for this we can now find neither pretext nor justification. That emergency passed with the resumption of mining. Nor would it, under any circumstances, serve the public better. We all know that Government operation of railroads and ships has been wasteful beyond expression in money. If the Government had seized the mines, what assurance would it have had that the striking miners would have returned to work except through the concessions which they demanded? Even a Government can not force men back into the mines—men might refuse to work even if there were a bayonet back of each man. It is human nature and stubborn facts that we have to deal with here and not sentimentalities.

In conclusion, may we not invoke a return of the old-time morals in the business world? We complain of the exactions of labor, and we do that justly, for labor is often misled, but can we give a clean bill of public morals to the business world? The trouble with us is that each man is determined to have for himself all that he can get. This is as characteristic of the so-called employing class as it is of employees. The war spoiled all classes. Wage and business morals alike were cast to the wind, and we now find ourselves confronted by the necessity of returning to the old standards. We are all anxious to reform the other man, but might we not with profit consider the reformation of ourselves. Pity it is that in this critical situation the men who control the coal supplies of the Nation have not been able to be big enough in morals and in business to come forward with the assurances and the evidences that they would deal justly with the public, exacting no profits out of national necessity. I doubt not there are many men so minded, but there are enough not so minded to make it necessary for us through the enactment of this bill into law to interpose the strong hand of the Government between their greed and their would-be victims. Those who would or might wrong the public are forcing this legislation to be placed on the statute books.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, in considering this bill (H. R. 12472), which is designed to relieve the exigency created by the railway and coal miners' strikes, I desire to offer some observations that do not bear directly on the bill but deal with the difficulty that has made it necessary.

It is time that some one should call attention to the situation that confronts agriculture, and especially agriculture in the Northwest, and offer some explanation of the industrial difficulties under which they are suffering. The World War came to an end almost four years ago. During the war the Government, under its war powers, sought to limit to some extent the prices of manufactured products, but after the armistice was signed all restraint upon senseless and insatiate greed was relaxed. The Federal Reserve Board aided the crazy boom that followed the war by recklessly extending credit in every direction. It evidently was not until 1920 that it commenced to dawn upon the board that the fool's paradise it had helped to create must in the end bring disaster. Restrictions upon credit were then ordered and business commenced to slow down. Under normal conditions this might have brought substantial reductions in the prices of manufactured goods, but during the war the Government had encouraged and even compelled combinations of capital and labor, and these organizations, though a number of them have been attacked by the Attorney General, have in many lines of business been able practically to maintain war-time prices.

This is not true of the farmers. They have not been able to maintain their prices. Not only are farmers largely unorganized but much of their products must be sold in foreign countries, and foreign prices in a measure limit the figures at which their products can be sold in this country. The average prices of farm products in the great agricultural sections of the Northwest are as low to-day as, and the prices of many products way below, the pre-war levels, while the things the farmer has to purchase are only slightly below war prices. Unless this condition is changed, the farmers face ruin. No law that you can pass, no remedy that you can propose, that does not affect a readjustment of this economic condition will save them. Unless the change comes and comes soon you will see in the West what you have seen in the East—abandoned farms and deserted homes. There is at present no hope for anyone on a farm in my section. The farm boys will crowd to the cities until a readjustment occurs. Why should a person invest twenty or thirty thousand dollars in a farm if he can go to some city and after a few years training in almost any occupation earn with his bare hands more money than he can possibly hope to secure from such a farm, working 12 to 14 hours a day? No argument can persuade him to wear away his life upon a farm if penury and the poorhouse are all it promises.

It is popular to blame all our troubles on "Wall Street," and "big business." I wish I could do so in this case. While I shall not minimize the greed of capital, I would not be candid if I did not recognize the share that certain labor leaders have in this tragic situation. Labor and capital are usually represented as hostile to each other, but evidently the lion and the lamb have lain down together. Capital and labor have many interests in common.

As long as a manufacturer can sell his product at the same rate of profit on the cost of production, whether the article costs him much or little to produce, he profits by high wages. To illustrate: If at a high wage it costs $5 to produce a pair of shoes, but only $2.50 at a low wage, the manufacturer will make twice as much profit on the sale of the high-priced shoe as he does on the low priced. In other words, as long as the public can be made to pay the same rate of profit on the cost of production the manufacturer makes more money if he pays a high than if he pays a low wage. I am assured that it is upon this theory that wages and prices have been maintained.

TRANSPORTATION AND COAL PRICES.

No one would be better pleased than I could these war wages be maintained without spelling ruin to agriculture. Whenever high wages or big profits are exacted in any important industry a direct toll is taken from the farmer. Let me give you an illustration or two. The farmer pays a very large share of railway freight charges, both in the sale of his products and in the purchase of coal, lumber, machinery, and everything that he has to buy. In 1916, the year before we entered the war, the official record shows that the railroads paid $1,468,576,398 as wages to their employees. For operating substantially the same mileage they paid for the same purpose in 1920, the last year for which I have been able to get figures, $3,698,216,351, or $2,229,639,953 more than they paid in 1916. The wages of 1920 have been slightly reduced since then, but they are still more than double what they were before the war. In a letter that I received a few months ago from the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission I am told that the average rate of pay of all railway employees in 1916 was a little less than 27 cents per hour and that the rate of pay at the date of that letter was on the average more than 69 cents per hour and that 60 cents of every dollar that is paid for freight goes to pay for labor. A sum that is largely augmented by the labor cost of coal and other material used by railways.

Coal is indispensable in the Northwest for fuel in every home and in every industry. The wages of coal miners average, I am told, from $7.50 to $10 a day, and when paid at a certain price per ton may run as high as $25 per day. The miners do not claim that this wage would be reasonable if they could secure work all the time, but say that there are so many mines and miners that they only work about half the time and hence need this wage to maintain themselves. Bricklayers in large cities get from $12 to $15 per day, while carpenters and other mechanics get correspondingly high pay.

When anyone suggests that wages are high, he is at once denounced as an enemy of labor and a friend of predatory wealth. I would be entirely willing that war wages be maintained if the people in farming communities could also receive war wages and prices. Not only do the high wages and increased cost of production in our large cities affect the farmers but they are a burden upon all classes that are dependent upon the farm. Labor on the farm and in the small cities and villages in my section never received the high wage paid in the large manufacturing centers, and their wage is to-day not much, if any, above the pre-war figure. I have always tried to be liberal toward labor, as my record will abundantly show, and my objection is based solely upon the ground that high wages and big profits are a crushing burden upon those I represent.

It is often insisted that the increased cost of an article is trifling because of the increase in wages. That is a very superficial view. It has been pointed out that the increase in the cost of a ton of coal, because of the increase in the miner's wage, is comparatively small. While that is true, the wage paid the miner is only a part of the wage increase charged to the cost of coal before it reaches the top of the mine. Speaking of soft coal, the wage charge now is from $2.50 to $4 per ton, varying with the thickness of the coal vein. It will average more than $3 per ton. Before the war soft coal sold at the mine at an average of not to exceed $1.50 per ton, cost of coal and profit included, while the minimum price is now about $3.50 and the sky is the limit. But that is not all; every time this coal is handled from the time it leaves the mine until it reaches its final destination wages and capital take additional tolls. If capital was content to make the same rate of profit on high-priced coal that it makes on the low priced, it would more than double its charge; but in many instances capital has acted the conscienceless hog and charged all it could gouge out of the public. It is to be hoped that this bill may go a long way toward stopping that sort of profiteering. This argument that increases in wages do not materially affect the price of a product has been made in favor of maintaining railway wages as well as wages in all other industries.

ESCH-CUMMINS LAW.

Every possible effort is being made to conceal the effect that the wage increases of railway employees have on freight and passenger charges. To divert attention from the actual facts the Esch-Cummins law has been unsparingly denounced. It has been claimed that the Government is guaranteeing 6 per cent interest on watered stocks and bonds, including every penny that the railways claim they have invested in the roads. These statements are utterly false. There is no provision in the law that permits anything of the kind.

When the Government took over the roads during the war it promised to pay for their use a rental equal to their average earnings during the three preceding years. The Government had no power to take the roads without paying for their use any more than it could take any other property without paying for it. When the Government came to turn the roads back to their owners it was evident that it would take some time for the owners to reorganize them, and to save them from this loss, for which the Government acknowledged responsibility, it agreed that during that period, which was limited to six months, it would see that the roads earned as much during that time as they would have if the Government continued to pay rent for those six months. This is the only guaranty the Government ever gave the railways. The claim that it guaranteed 6 per cent income, or any other rate, for two years thereafter is absolutely false. During those two years the roads earned, according to the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, less than 3 per cent, and the railroads have never claimed any such guaranty. The claim is nothing but reckless propaganda.

The claim that the Esch-Cummins law permits freight and passenger rates to be based on watered stocks and bonds is a part of the same propaganda, and so is the claim that the amount invested in the roads determines their value. The law does not authorize anything of the kind, but directs that rates must be based upon the actual value of the roads. The Interstate Commerce Commission valued the roads for rate-making purposes at about $1,000,000,000 less than the railroads claimed to have paid into them, and added not a penny to that valuation because of any outstanding stocks or bonds.

Ever since 1913 this commission has been at work with a large force of men to find the actual value, and it has practically completed the work on all important roads. A man from my own State, in whom I have the utmost confidence, Mr. Staples, has been at the head of this valuation work. I should certainly prefer to take his statement for that valuation in preference to that of some one trying to create a prejudice against the law.

The Esch-Cummins law is the most drastic railroad law that has ever been passed. Under it the Government practically runs the roads. They can not issue a dollar of stock or of bonds without getting permission from the Interstate Commerce Commission to do so. They must keep books showing every dollar that they receive and pay out, and the officers are under heavy penalties for any false entries in such books. They must report annually and are under close governmental supervision. The rates they charge for freight and passengers are fixed by this Government commission, and practically everything that the roads can do is subject to its control. If any road earns more than 6 per cent upon the actual value of its property, one half of all sums earned in excess of 6 per cent must be paid to the Government and of the other half of such excess a sum equal to 5 per cent of the value of the road must be held by it for use in lean years. To adjust disputes between the roads and their employees, it creates a labor board to determine what are proper wages and conditions of employment. It is this provision that has arrayed against it the hostility of labor, and the reason for it is that for the first time in the history of this kind of legislation the public is given representation upon such a board.

The present railway strike was provoked by a decision of this board directing a reduction of wages of certain railway employees. This board is made up of three railway employees, three representatives of the railways, and three appointed by the President to protect the public interest. When the Esch-

Cummins law was passed it was fought with intense bitterness by a large group of railway employees, who sought to force the Government to buy the roads and turn them over to a corporation under an arrangement that would practically have made the employees the owners of the roads, with power to fix their own wages. This was the famous Plumb plan, for which it was said at the time that $4,000,000 were raised to secure its adoption. It is but fair to say that a large proportion of the railway employees did not support this plan and took no part in this fight. The Plumb plan is apparently dead and buried.

The increases in the railway wages and railway freights were made at the direction of the Government, and most of them took place under Government operation. While the Government ran the roads it paid the loss from the Treasury, but as this could not continue rates were increased to pay the expenses.

DISASTROUS EFFECT OF BOOM PRICES.

I notice that Mr. Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, has just issued a statement in which he boasts that the pay of organized labor is still within 5 per cent of the highest wage that was paid during the war and the boom period following it. This can not continue indefinitely. Some time this bubble will break. With the price of production sky-high no foreign export can long continue, nor can any large amount of products find any market in our agricultural sections or among other classes of our people who do not profit by this abnormal condition.

Buildings are being erected at a cost that must eventually make living conditions and the expenses of doing business intolerable in our cities if a rate of profit is to be collected in rents that will pay the rate that capital is now demanding. There can be no prospect of a real business revival until conditions are readjusted so as to give all classes fair play. This abnormal condition has in a large measure been maintained by strikes and threats of strikes. The coal-mine strikes have just been settled by conceding to labor the highest wage it ever received under contracts that mean two years of high coal prices. In the contest between capital and labor the public is not only helpless, but it is made to suffer until one side or the other, in dread of public resentment, is compelled to yield, and in the end the public pays the cost of the contest. It has been freely charged that in these strikes capital and labor leaders have been conspiring together to boost prices at the expense of the public.

STRIKES AND LOCKOUTS.

The power to stop mines and factories and to paralyze all transportation is a power that no czar would dare to exercise. It threatens not only our entire industrial system, but it threatens even the health and life of our people. As to absolute essentials, such as coal and transportation, some other remedy for settling industrial disputes must be found.

We may have the power now, in case railway managers refuse to render service, to take possession of the railways and run them; and if we do not have the power to temporarily take them over, it should be given. But as to organized labor, no power to control them exists. A little group of labor leaders may stop the railways and stop every industry in the country. This would be true as to railways even if the Government operated them.

We have got to face this issue sooner or later. The American people will not permanently submit to a situation in which they may be held up and robbed by any group of people, whether it be capital or labor. The method by which disputes between labor and capital are settled is industrial war, in which murder is freely resorted to for the purpose of enforcing demands. It is selfish, irresponsible tyranny. The contest should be settled in some civilized fashion and with some regard to the public interest. This system breeds lawlessness, encourages riot, and threatens revolution. The contention that it can not be settled in any other way is a contention that the right of a class is superior to the rights of the public. Not more than 100 years ago men insisted upon the right of settling their own quarrels. If offended, a person would challenge his opponent to mortal combat, and the sword or gun would decide the issue. The right of the Government to interfere was strenuously denied. It was a species of personal liberty that its votaries insisted was sacred. We have brushed aside the contention. Disputes over property, the protection of our persons, and even the right to live are submitted to our courts—rights that certainly are as sacred as the right to any particular wage.

Some tribunal must be set up to settle labor disputes. The strike and lockout must be outlawed. The decision of such a tribunal must be made binding on capital and labor alike. Of course, no one can or should be compelled to work, but a conspiracy to quit work because the decision of a legally constituted tribunal is not satisfactory can be made an offense, and those who are willing to work should and must be protected. A person's right to work is as sacred as his right to quit work.

I know that these views are not very popular at this time in some quarters, but if this Government is to be maintained and our people are to be permitted to enjoy the blessings of peace and of prosperity, that extend fairly to all classes, they will be popular some day.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the farm loan bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the farm loan bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to an amendment to the Federal farm loan act which I introduced the other day, but which I am informed can not receive consideration during this session of the Congress. My proposition, to increase loans under this act from $10,000 to $25,000, is not new. Amendments of similar purport have been pending here for some time. I regret that the decision not to take up new legislation before adjournment prevents consideration of this amendment, for it is one of vital importance to many farming sections.

Under the present restrictions the Federal farm loan banks have almost ceased to function in States like Iowa, where the high price of land, ranging from $200 to $300 and higher per acre, makes a $10,000 loan wholly inadequate for a minimum farm of 120 to 160 acres. No tenant can hope to acquire the land which he tills on such a loan. Tenant farming has been increasing in States where land is high priced, and if the Federal farm loan act holds out no hope of solution of this problem, then it will have failed of one of its highest purposes.

Why make a new law and why establish a new system and then place limitations on their operations that defeat the purpose which we had in view? Why hold out the hope in words and then defeat it in acts?

The objection that to increase such loans may promote rural inflation is not tenable, for the Government has in operation another system of rural financing under which what are known as the joint-stock land banks are operated, which already have the loaning power which we are seeking for the Federal farm loan banks. We are seeking this power for these banks because they are more favorable to the borrower, being wholly cooperative, while the joint-stock land banks are not so cooperative. Both systems—the Federal farm loan banks and the joint-stock land banks—are based on the issuance of tax-exempt bonds, and are directed under the same bureau. Both systems are allowed a spread of 1 per cent for what are called operating expenses. That is, money realized from 4½ per cent bonds may be loaned at 5½ per cent. It has been found that these systems can be operated on much less than 1 per cent, probably on one-half of 1 per cent. In the case of the Federal farm loan banks the surplus is distributed to the borrowers in the form of dividends on their stock, each borrower being compelled to take 5 per cent of his loan in stock. The Omaha bank is now paying 10 per cent dividends on this stock, reducing the interest paid by the borrower to 5½ per cent. In the case of the joint-stock land banks this surplus is not so distributed, but inures to the benefit of the shareholders, who are not the borrowers but the promoters and managers of these banks. The joint-stock land banks are now permitted to loan as high as $50,000 to one borrower. The farm borrowers can see no reason why restrictions should be placed on the loans made by the banks that are more favorable to them.

The merits of these systems of rural financing are no longer subjects of debate. The Federal farm loan banks have been in successful operation for many years. They have met with the approval of the farmers, and the financiers who at one time scoffed at them have been compelled to admit that they have been successfully operated. A former director of this system, Mr. Herbert Quick, in a recent magazine article called it "the most wonderful experiment in financing ever carried out in America." This somewhat extravagant language is fairly justified by the facts. Mr. Quick also said that these banks "have done in five years more than any foreign land mortgage system ever did in three times that period." He believes that the good work that these banks are doing is only in its beginning and he asks that they be dealt with by the Congress in a fostering spirit and not in a limiting one. "They are the big things in American agriculture" is his final judgment.

I confess that I share in much of this enthusiasm expressed by Mr. Quick. I have come to my conclusions from a somewhat careful study of the system here in Washington as well as from observation in the farming sections. I am therefore anxious to have this system made available to my constituents who are so favored as to live and to work in that part of the country where land has received its highest development and has attained the highest prices, not only by reason of such development but because of natural fertility and favored conditions as to sunshine and rain. It is to enable men on these high-priced lands to take advantage of this favorable system that I introduced the amendment to the Federal farm loan act. This amendment has received the urgent indorsement of all the agricultural organizations in my State, and it is not opposed, so far as I know, by any of the banking interests.

But while I am anxious to remove the present limitation on the loaning powers of the Federal farm loan banks, I am equally anxious to restrict these banks wholly to agricultural purposes. We should not extend the use of tax-exempt bonds—if we use such bonds at all—to mere speculators in land. Those who till the land should be the sole beneficiaries. It is a use of supreme power to issue bonds exempt from all taxes, and if there is any excuse for the use of such bonds it must be found in the promotion of an industry essential to the public welfare. This, I believe, can be said of agriculture, the great basic industry.

I think so well of this Federal farm loan bank system that I am in favor of extending it to include what have been called short-time rural credits, to the establishment of which President Harding recently pledged his administration. We need not only long-time land loans, but we need short-time loans to cover the marketing of products and to carry on such industries as live-stock feeding. Stable, low-rate loans, loans that can not be called at inopportune times, are necessary to carry on this part of the farmer's business. The effectiveness of such financing has been shown during the past year, following the revival of what is known as the War Finance Corporation.

This corporation, with less than half a billion of assets, has been so wisely administered that it relieved financial distress in the agricultural sections, and even increased prices of farm products by the promotion of judicious marketing and the export of products. I think that this one thing did more to bring about a revival of rural prosperity than any other one undertaking of the Government. I see no reason why we should not have some system like this made permanent. The War Finance Corporation will expire next year, and I believe that it will be a wise and proper act to transfer its assets and its power to be administered as part of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau.

I believe that these two systems, long-time land loans and short-time commodity loans, can be successfully operated as parts of one system. It will make coordination and cooperation possible, and it will do away with the unnecessary machinery of another organization.

I believe that with these two systems, with the amendment to the Federal farm loan act which I have proposed, and which others have proposed, that we will be in a fair way to place agriculture on a business basis. It will be doing for agriculture what has already been done for the business and commercial interests of the country, especially through the Federal reserve banking system, a beneficent system, but the advantages of which have not always been wisely placed within reach of the agricultural interests. In fact, there is a prevalent belief that the Federal reserve system has at times been operated to the disadvantage of agriculture. I can not share the belief that this was done intentionally or deliberately, but I can not avoid the conclusion that the effect of some of these operations was at one time severely disastrous to agriculture.

By these two extensions of the functions of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau, first, the increase of loans permissible from $10,000 to $25,000, and second, the extension to include short-time or what may be called farm-commodity credits, we will, I believe, solve many of the problems that have distressed us in the agricultural States. It will give to the farming interests a financial system that will be based on their needs and that will be operated to promote their welfare.

I see no reason why there should be any opposition to the amendment which I have proposed and the further extension of the system which I have suggested in these remarks on the part of any other business or financial interests. We are asking for no sectional or occupational legislation. I am opposed to class legislation of all kinds. All that we are asking is a broad national financial policy for the stabilization of agriculture. I need not at this time call attention to the basic character of this industry, nor point out to you or to the country the important relation in which this industry stands toward all other industries. This thought which I have in mind was recently well expressed by Vice President Coolidge when he said that "the aggregate prosperity of manufactures and the aggregate prosperity of agriculture are intimately connected." I need add nothing to this axiomatic and epigrammatic utterance. From first to last we have had a great deal of futile agitation and legislation on subjects agricultural. This great industry has been buffeted on the billows of populism and other wild and impossible theories and movements. All these loose and radical movements have accomplished nothing for this vital industry. The time has come when we must legislate for it on a business basis, and so far as is within the powers of the Congress place it on a self-respecting and self-sustaining business basis. Let us do for agriculture what has been done for other business, and if we do that we shall find that agriculture will serve the welfare of all the people.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. LANGLEY, for three days, on account of business.

To Mr. CLARK of Florida, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. LANKFORD, for three days, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, August 31, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CABLE: A bill (H. R. 12515) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Tippecanoe City, Ohio; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SMITHWICK: A bill (H. R. 12516) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to equitably determine and confirm by patent the title to lots in the city of Pensacola, Fla.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. SCOTT of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 12517) to amend the war risk insurance act as amended; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAND of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 12518) granting a pension to Rosy J. Barnes; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12519) granting a pension to Sarah A. Brown; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12520) granting an increase of pension to Senea Beamon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12521) granting an increase of pension to Sarah C. Cannon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 12522) granting a pension to Virginia V. Deyo; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GENSMAN: A bill (H. R. 12523) granting a pension to Margaret Kerkendall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12524) granting a pension to Mary M. Gunter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 12525) granting an increase of pension to David Vasen; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MAPES: A bill (H. R. 12526) providing for the commissioning of William A. Pearl and granting him immediately thereafter an honorable discharge; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: A bill (H. R. 12527) for the relief of the heirs of Oliver P. Phillips; to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6250. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of sundry citizens of the State of Wisconsin, favoring legislation in favor of light wines and beer; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6251. Also (by request): Petition of the American Legion, Boise, Idaho, favoring the passage of the Smith-McNary bill for the reclamation of arid lands; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

6252. By Mr. ANSORGE: Petition of George V. Rogers, general manager, New York Tribune, opposing proposed tariff of 1 cent per pound on rotagravure paper; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6253. Also, petition of Women's City Club of New York, favoring the establishment of national parks, supporting the Barbour bill (H. R. 7452), and opposing the Osborne amendment thereto; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

6254. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Grain Trade Association of San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, opposing the Volstead law; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6255. Also, petition of Mr. B. Douglas, Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring a duty of 40 per cent on wire cloth; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6256. By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: Petition of the Kiwanis Club of St. Anthony, Idaho, urging the punishment of those guilty of killing 34 persons at Herrin, Williamson County, Ill., on the 22d day of June, 1922; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, August 31, 1922.

(Legislative day of Friday, August 25, 1922.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

COMPENSATION OF WORLD WAR VETERANS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield while I suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. LODGE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Sheppard
Ball	Gerry	McLean	Shortridge
Brandegee	Glass	McNary	Simmons
Broussard	Gooding	Myers	Smith
Bursum	Hale	Nelson	Smoot
Calder	Heflin	New	Stanfield
Cameron	Hitchcock	Newberry	Sterling
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Sutherland
Colt	Kellogg	Oddie	Trammell
Culberson	Kendrick	Pepper	Underwood
Cummins	Keyes	Phipps	Wadsworth
Curtis	La Follette	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Lenroot	Rawson	Walsh, Mont.
Dillingham	Lodge	Reed, Mo.	Watson, Ga.
Edge	McCormick	Reed, Pa.	Watson, Ind.
Fletcher	McCumber	Robinson	Willis

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I realize how anxious the Senate is to vote upon the pending bill, and none can be more anxious than I am to bring the discussion to a close. But I can not let the bill go to the final vote without expressing very briefly my own views in regard to it and the opinions and feelings which have led me to take the position which I take. I can assure the Senate that I shall try to be as brief as possible.

Mr. President, there has been some discussion as to the title of the bill, as to its accuracy of definition. I think the element of compensation enters into it, as I shall try to show in a few moments, but it does not matter to me by what name it is called. The purpose of the bill is to pay, in part at least, what seems to me a debt. It is a debt of gratitude. Debts of gratitude for great service rendered can never be paid in full, but they can be recognized and remembered.

I shall not go over the long list of historical precedents. They are well known. Similar gifts or provisions have been made for soldiers following all our wars, chiefly in the homestead acts and the giving of lands to soldiers. The giving of recognition to soldiers who have fought is a very old principle indeed. There is nothing novel in it. I am sure every Senator here remembers the great speech which Shakespeare puts into the mouth of Henry V before the Battle of Agincourt, in which he says:

> We few, we happy few, we band of brothers;
> For he to-day that sheds his blood with me
> Shall be my brother; be he ne'er so vile,
> This day shall gentle his condition.

At that period, though, perhaps, not at the period of Shakespeare, that promise was within the power of the King, and no greater offer of reward could have been made than when Henry V declared, as he does in the play, that "this day shall gentle his condition." It meant social advancement, it meant the recognition of a rank which most of them did not hold, and, of course, was of pecuniary value to every recipient. Whether the royal promise was historical or not, I never heard that the English soldiers at Agincourt fought any the less well or that patriotism was commercialized because of any offer made by the King.

As I have said, I shall not review the historical precedents in this country. They are abundant. But I desire to say a word in regard to the policy of the United States as to other debts imposed upon us by the war.

Of course, the largest and most obvious debt is represented by the Government bonds. They involve the credit of the United States. Everyone believes that they must be paid, and be paid in gold, principal and interest, without the deduction of a cent. The holders of the Government bonds lent their money, which was an important service during the time of the war, and they are thoroughly protected, as they should be.

As was pointed out by the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] last night, we have given something over $200,000,000 in bonuses to civilian employees, no doubt for very good and sufficient reasons. I voted for those appropriations, and I think they were well bestowed.

The industries of the country made large profits. I am not speaking of profiteers or of extortionate or fraudulent profits; those lie outside of any rule and some of them were crimes against the Government; but the industries of the United States during the war years, when vast expenditures were being made by the Government, earned legitimately a great deal of money; they made very large profits. They were taxed on those profits, but, nevertheless, the net profits were very large, and they had full opportunity to make them.

As to the railroads which the Government took over, the debts due to those roads, amounting to many millions, have all been provided for and paid. I voted to do it in every case, and I think it was proper to do it. We have also made provision for debts due on contracts and on account of the cancellation of contracts. I voted to make such provision and for the appropriation of the money necessary to pay those debts, and I think it was proper that we should pay them.

At the same time, as I look over the field, apart from the sick and wounded soldiers, who in many cases are mutilated and diseased for life, I can not find that the soldiers have received anything beyond their insurance, which they took out and paid for themselves. That has been our course; and I can detect only one difference between our distinction between the cases I have enumerated and our attitude toward the soldiers, and that is the difference in the amount which would be required to meet the provisions of the bill which is now pending before us. We are punctilious in the payment of all services involving money and curb our generosity only when we come to services involving life. Under this bill, which I understand is acceptable to the ex-service men, the total amount which will ever be paid, according to figures which seem to be very carefully made in the report of the committee, will be $3,845,000,000. Of course, it will all be paid and be paid by the people of the United States. Whether we impose a tax now or whether we impose a tax later on, or whether we borrow money or whether we take the money from the debt due us from foreign governments, if any is paid to us, it all will be paid by the people of the United States. But the payments under this bill will be spread over a period of 40 years, which will not reduce the total but will make a great difference in the mode of payment and in the pressure that it will cause upon the Treasury of the United States.

Under the bill for the first year, in round numbers, the payment will be $77,000,000; the next year it will be $92,000,000; the next year it will be $73,000,000; the next year it will be $370,000,000; the next year it will be $148,000,000; the next year it will be $137,000,000. Then come payments of $92,000,000, $36,000,000, $25,000,000, $21,000,000, $18,000,000, $18,000,000, $19,000,000, $19,000,000, $27,000,000, $27,000,000, $28,000,000, $13,000,000, $7,000,000, and in 1942, $104,000,000.

The necessary expenditures are thus distributed over a long series of years. It is idle to say that the appropriation of $77,000,000 for the ensuing year is going to embarrass or bankrupt the Treasury or cause a decline in our credit. In many instances the total expenditures for a year will not exceed what we have freely given year by year to the construction of roads alone.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMICK. I wondered if the Senator was going to contrast the payment of $3,800,000,000 over a period of 40 years with the payment of $3,500,000,000 on the national debt during the last three years?

Mr. LODGE. That is a contrast well worth making. We have managed to reduce the public debt in the last three years by about $3,500,000,000; and I think the Government of the United States is perfectly solvent and perfectly able to take care of these proposed expenditures as they arise without any effect upon the price of Government bonds or upon the credit of the country.

There is terror, apparently, among the great financial interests lest the credit of the country may be affected. The credit of the country has been rising pretty steadily, judging by the price of bonds, which has been going up now for the last 18 months at least. I have not looked at the quotation of to-day, but I think most of the bonds are in the neighborhood of par. So I am not alarmed about the credit of the country. Now, of course, if credence is to be given to the stories which one sees in the press and the assertion that the pending bill is going to cost us $7,000,000,000, to be paid at once, that would have an effect on the money market. Those who make that statement, however, arrive at the conclusion that the sum to be expended will be $7,000,000,000, as nearly as I can make out, by giving every soldier every alternative or option, when he can only take one, which, of course, would increase the total amount; but the total amount, so far as I can see, will be what the committee has reported, not what enemies of the bill have guessed at. Therefore I do not think it is going to hurt the credit of the United States or paralyze the New York Stock Exchange or do anything of that kind. I think the credit of the United States is good enough—I have such an opinion of it—to stand the shock. It certainly stood the shock of war with a very slight decline, and I think it can stand the effects of the pending proposal perfectly well, with the payments scattered over a period of years.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator has stated, as so many of our colleagues have done, that this bill is satisfactory to the ex-service men. No one has stated upon what authority that assertion is made.

Mr. LODGE. I have no other authority except what ex-service men have told me.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Those would be individual service men, would they not?

Mr. LODGE. I can only say that service men, in whom I have confidence, among the leaders of the American Legion, seem to think that it is satisfactory. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has talked with more of them than have I.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Of course, the Senator knows that there are a great many of the ex-service men who never joined any of the Legion posts, and therefore, even if we had the unanimous voice of the Legion, that would not necessarily be the voice of the ex-service men.

Mr. LODGE. We have to judge by such information as we can obtain, and I have been informed by men in whose judgment I have every confidence—soldiers who served all the time at the front—that the measure is satisfactory and has been accepted by the great mass of the service men.

Now, as to the question of compensation, to which I referred at the beginning. A situation was presented in the World War which had not been previously presented. We had a draft during the Civil War, and I think the number of men secured under that draft was only 186,000, although we had over 2,000,000 men under arms on the Union side; but when we entered the war with Germany we passed what was known as a general conscription act, a universal draft act. I voted for it; I think it was the right thing to have done at that time, and I warmly supported the recommendations of the then administration; but it introduced a new element which had never before been present in connection with our Army, namely, that a large proportion of the soldiers—in fact, the major proportion—came to the colors summoned by law; and yet gave just as good service as the volunteers gave, and they rank the same so far as service goes.

But a large number of men who were eligible in every way for military service were exempted on the ground—no doubt the proper ground—of need for their services in essential industries. Those men, of course, received the very high wages and secured the good places which were thrown open at that time when there was naturally a great reduction in the number of men who were competing for industrial places and when the wage scale was stimulated by the war. The soldiers in the Army, of course, were strictly limited. We paid our soldiers better than any other nation, I believe, much better than most of the nations; but their pay was limited. It was a dollar a day; but there was no limit placed upon the money that could be earned in essential industries, and there was no limit placed on the profits of business.

To take a specific illustration, when in our camps here work had to be done, such as plumbing, the laying of pipes, or something of that kind, there were men among the soldiers who were qualified for that work and who were detailed to it. In many cases there were not enough experienced men to do all the work, and so others were called in from the outside, and they received $15 a day. I do not suppose it was possible to have conscripted labor and compelled men to work and receive the same compensation as the soldier, but the soldier had to obey orders and do the work. The case I have given is not an imaginary one. It is one that was given me by an officer distinguished in the war, who served all through the war on the front line in France. That comparison of pay left a keen and natural feeling of injustice with the soldier.

I know another case, that came within my own knowledge, of two brothers. One was exempted, and went into an essential industry. The other brother—I think the elder brother, who happened to have a wife and two children—went into the Army and then abroad, and was in France and in the trenches for a year and a half. When he came back he found that the younger brother had had good employment all through the war, and had laid up something like $1,800. He came back without his place, and with no money laid up; it became necessary for him to find new employment; and I think he felt, very naturally, that some compensation ought to be paid to him; and out of that relation created by the conscription act grew up what in my mind was a real injustice. It is an injustice which can not endure and will be remedied because it is an injustice. If not now, later and more expensively.

These men were all serving the Government. The men who were making great profits in industry were serving the Government, carrying on the work of producing the material which was necessary for the Government. The men who worked in the essential industries were carrying on work which the Government had to have done; but there was a broad distinction made between them and the soldiers when it came to pay. I think that in that matter of compensation there is a very strong and persuasive argument in favor of a bill which shall give some measure of justice to the soldier. There is strong objection made to commercializing patriotism, of which I see no danger; but because we are in fear of commercializing patriotism is no reason why we should penalize it.

So far as the argument goes, it has seemed to me that that argument was a sound one and was founded on reason and justice. I know very well, of course, that the soldier has no legal claim; but it seems to me that this is a case that goes beyond that. I believe he has a moral claim, both on the ground of compensation and on the ground of service.

I shall not attempt to enter into other arguments, of which I think there are many. I do not wish to take any more time, but I intend to say something on two points which I will begin by admitting are sentimental and yet I can not prevent their weighing heavily with me. I criticize nobody by what I am about to say. I am speaking only of the feeling which lies very deep in my own heart.

I was one of those—not a numerous body, for it comprised only Members of the House and the Senate, compared to the entire body of the people, a very small number—who were in a position of representation and upon whom fell the duty of declaring war—a very grim duty, which no man who has been obliged to face it can regard with anything but feelings of the deepest sorrow. I have no doubt it was the only thing and the absolutely right thing to do, and I voted for the declaration of war. I could not have done otherwise. It was necessary for the defense of my country's rights. It was necessary to preserve the freedom and civilization of the world, in my judgment, and we threw our sword into the scale; and the sword we threw was our Army, the very men who are the soldiers of this bill. We threw that living sword into the scale and turned the scale at the critical moment. The declaration of war was followed by the conscription act. As I have already said, I believe that act was right. I entirely approved the recommendation of the President in regard to it. I voted for it. I should do it again under similar circumstances; but, Mr. President, I can not forget, and the feeling has been with me ever since I cast those votes, that I had summoned men, not only by an appeal to patriotism but by law, to go forth and fight for their country and, if need be, sacrifice their lives. I personally was far too old to go to the war. I should have been absolutely useless, worse than useless. I could not go, but in the performance of a great duty I voted to send other men. Being unable to go myself, I voted to send other men to war and to death. I think I was right in doing so, but it left with me a feeling from which I can never recover. That burning memory makes me feel that if there is anything in reason that I, who could not go to the war and did not go, can do for the men whom I sent to the war, I propose to do it.

That, I know well, is not a legal or financial argument; it is not based on figures; it is a matter of deep personal feeling. I happen to have that feeling very strongly, and I do not hesitate to say that it has produced a profound effect upon my decision, made more than a year ago, when I voted to take up the first bill reported, to vote for this bill if it could be presented in any proper form.

Mr. President, there is another feeling I have about this measure which is not personal, and which I believe is shared by many people. It also is a memory that I can never lose. I think the point I am about to make is best expressed in those bitter words in Kipling's ballad where he says, in the refrain of one of his stanzas—he is addressing the British private soldier—

Oh, it's "Tommy this" and "Tommy that" and "Tommy, 'ow's your soul?"
But it's "thin red line of heroes" when the drums begin to roll.

Now, I would not have those lines apply to us and to the American people. I looked on those men when they went to the war, as I think we all did, with some choking in our throats and with a deep feeling of pride. We felt the same lump in the throat, the same pride, exultant now, when they came back marching up the Avenue behind General Pershing. I do not say that in 4,000,000 soldiers there is not a small percentage of unworthy men as in every other 4,000,000 of the population. I know very well that 2,000,000 did not go to France; but they were there, ready to go at any moment. They were under orders in the camps. The orders happened to be only the usual commands for drill and camp duty, but in the possibilities of things at any moment they might have been ordered to go with the marines into that hell of Belleau Wood, or again into the awful fighting that occurred in the Argonne. They were there; they were ready; they would have obeyed their orders, and they would have gone, and they would have fought as the American soldier always fights. I felt, as I say, when they went and when they returned, a deep sense of gratitude to them for what they had done. I am ready to take the responsibility of doing the best I possibly can for them in reason and in justice to others; and if I am going to err I prefer to err on the liberal side, on the side of the men who offered their bodies and their lives. I am not prepared to treat this as commercializing patriotism. The fact that a soldier is paid is not making him commercial or diminishing his patriotism; and he received his pay, small as it was. Almost every one of the fighting nations has made some gift—gratuity, if you choose to call it so—some recognition of service, in some cases very large, as in Canada and Australia and New Zealand, in some cases much smaller, but all recognizing the principle. With this bill adjusted as it is, it seems to me a not unreasonable expression of the gratitude which I hope this country will always feel to the men who fought for it; and I, for one, am wholly ready to vote for this bill, and I trust that will become a law.

ARMY OF OCCUPATION OF THE RHINE.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has said expressed almost exactly my ideas of our responsibility toward the American veteran. I had not expected to say anything on the subject of the pending bill, and I do not expect to take any of the time of the Senate now, except to present a short statement of another responsibility which I think the American people are under at the present time.

Something more than a year ago I received a copy of the printed circular which I hold in my hand, describing in some detail what was called the horror on the Rhine. It purported to be the complaint of German people living in the German territory occupied by French troops. These German people protested against the conduct of France in keeping thousands of black soldiers from her African Provinces quartered among the people. It charged that the black African troops of France, whether Negroes or Singalese, were committing unspeakable crimes against German women and children.

The statement declared that the crimes committed by these black troops generally went unpunished, and that the so-called trials were a farce. The crimes committed up to the time the statement was issued were specified as follows:

Cases of attempted rape	40
Cases of accomplished rape	70
Cases of sexual misdemeanor of various other kinds	20
Cases of unnatural intercourse with boys	7

The statement was signed by a number of German associations and societies located in other parts of Germany. They appealed to the civilized world to bring influence to bear to induce France to withdraw her black troops and substitute French soldiers. The names attached to the circular were as follows:

Heinrich Kessemeier, editor of the monthly magazine Waffenschmied; Ernst Krüger, engineer; Heinrich Retter, merchant; Gen. Maj. a. D. von Arent, Hamburg; Alfred Jacobsen, Rechtsanwalt, Hamburg; J. Henningsen, Geschäftsführer, Hamburg; Paul Woermann, Hamburg; Welscher, Waschereibesitzer, Wandsbek; Oberst a. D. Fellinger, Rendsburg; Pastor Lucht, Carby (Holstein); Justizrat Dr. jur. Zieze, Rendsburg; Artur Brausewetter, Danzig; Pfarrer Boggasch, Forst L. Konsistorialrat Klein, Wollin; Konteradmiral a. D. Kalau vom Hofe, Baden-Baden; Professor Hoffmann, Hamburg; Justizrat Wittenburg, Rostock; Frau Anna Schaper, M. d. B., Hamburg; Dr. A. Th. Assmann, Rechtsanw., Berlin.

I do not know whether any influence was brought to bear on France. I made some private inquiries through officials of our Government and was informed that France was withdrawing the black troops, and very soon thereafter France made some public announcement that they were being withdrawn. Thus the matter quieted down.

In recent months, however, the black troops on the Rhine have again become a cause of bitter complaint. Reports of returning American travelers and letters from American tourists have brought news that France has thousands of black troops quartered among the German population and that repulsive crimes are again inflaming race hatred.

At best a military occupation by an army of white men belonging to a civilized race is bad enough. When the soldiers belong to half-civilized races of Africa it becomes horrible.

Among other letters which I have recently received on this subject I have been much impressed by one. It is from a citizen of my State—a naturalized citizen. He was born a British subject and heretofore his prejudices have naturally been pro-British and anti-German.

His sympathies have been with the French. The letter is written from Coblenz, which is still occupied by a few American soldiers—about a thousand, I believe. Formerly we had 15,000 in that district. As our troops have been withdrawn French troops have come in, although General Allen still holds command in the district, and the prayer of the people is that he be permitted to remain even with the handful of American troops still there. The occupation by American troops has been peaceful and marked by strict discipline, law, and order. While it has lasted it has been regarded by the Germans as an international enforcement of treaty terms without hatred or bitterness. These same Germans dread the day when this international occupation shall terminate and become French occupation. It will then be the occupation by a conqueror and an enemy. Its worst feature, however, is that a large portion of the incoming French troops are blacks from Africa. Referring to them, my friend writes:

If you were here and saw the French troops, mostly colored, and heard the stories our boys—buddies I talked to—tell of their behavior * * * it would certainly arouse you.

Mr. President, such statements coming from one who has heretofore sympathized with France are impressive.

My purpose to-day is to propose that it is the duty of our Government to suggest to France the substitution of white troops for African troops in the army of occupation on the Rhine.

We may sit idly by while France in her folly proceeds to cripple, if not to crush, the German Republic by demands for reparations which all the world knows Germany can not possibly meet at this time. We may even witness in silence the fall of the German Republic and see the German people driven in desperation back into the grasp of the plotting monarchists or into the arms of Bolshevism. But we as a Nation are in part responsible for the Rhineland being under military occupation and it is our right, as well as our duty, to protest against quartering half-civilized black troops among white people, where they appear as conquerors and act as criminals.

COMPENSATION OF WORLD WAR VETERANS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I would not ask the indulgence of the Senate for another moment but for the fact that under the 20-minute rule I was not able to conclude some remarks which I began day before yesterday. I shall hardly expect to follow out the line of argument begun in that address, but I want to make a few observations yet before this bill comes to a vote.

I was interested in some things said by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts a few moments ago, and particularly with his opening statement, a quotation from Shakespeare, where men were urged to fight because thereby they might "gentle their condition." But how were they, under that assurance, to gentle their condition? By gifts of lands, by gifts of titles, perhaps by other substantial and material reward. But, Mr. President, we live in another day, in another age, when booty or unusual material reward can not be held out as an inducement for a soldier to perform his duty in the service of his country.

Not during our history, surely, would such an offer or such an inducement have been tolerated. It would not have been during the heroic days of the Revolution, not in the War of 1812, nor in the great Civil War, when men on either side, North or South, fought conscientiously for what they believed to be a just cause, nor in the Spanish-American War, which was essentially a war for liberty. Nor did we suppose it would be an inducement to be held out to those who fought for humanity, for liberty, and for civilization in the great World War. We have no precedent in our history for anything of the kind suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Reference has been made to what was given Revolutionary officers and soldiers as compensation or reward for their services, but in those cases the reward rested on a principle altogether different from that which lies behind the pending bill. This bill, in contradistinction to what they were offered and given, provides for a cash bonus or a gratuity, which means a greater burden upon the people of the United States. The offer meant, and their reward was, if they chose to accept it, public lands, part of the public domain, of which there was such great abundance.

Reference also has been frequently made to the benefits that Civil War veterans received because of their service in the Union cause. What were those benefits? I personally know something of what they were through my business in Dakota Territory in the early days, when public lands were yet open to preemption entries, to timber culture entries, to homestead entries. What benefit did the Union soldier of the Civil War receive? Simply this: He had a right to file upon a homestead the same as any other qualified citizen of the United States had the right, and he had a right to be credited, on the five years' residence required of every citizen under the law, with his period of service in the Army during the war. If he had served one year, he need live on his homestead entry but four; if two years, then he was credited with two years, and he was required to live on the land before he could make his final proof and receive a patent to the land but three years, and so on. That was the only preference right the soldier of the Civil War had so far as land was concerned. As for the rest, he received $13 per month in depreciated currency while in the service and did not get a service pension until nearly 50 years after the war.

But, Mr. President, while I place one objection to this bill on what I believe to be even higher grounds than that it creates a great additional indebtedness which the people will have to pay through taxation, yet I want to recur to the question I was discussing when my attention was called to the limitation on the debate the other day.

I was speaking of what the United States had done in comparison with other Governments in regard to the soldiers of the late war, and I had just stated that Great Britain, in the bounty she had paid for more than four years of service, had paid only $6,000,000 more than our Government had paid her soldiers for a service of one year seven months and five days. So that what we expended in the $60 paid to the discharged soldiers after the war amounted proportionately to a greater sum than that which had been paid by Great Britain, and each soldier received proportionately a greater amount. The British soldier, it will be remembered, received but $11.40 a month, as against the $30 a month paid the enlisted men of the United States.

France paid to each soldier but $27.55 for the one year seven months and five days during which we paid $570. Italy paid the sum of $33.06 for the same period for which we paid $570.

Russia paid $7.41 to her soldiers for the same period for which our Government paid $570. Great Britain paid $138.70 to her soldiers for the same period for which we paid $570.

The privates in each of the countries engaged in the war on the allied side and on the side of the enemy were paid: Australia, the comparatively large sum of $43.50 per month. New Zealand paid the sum of $36.60. Canada paid $33 per month. The United States came next with $30 per month; Great Britain, $11.40; Germany, $3; France, $1.45; Austria-Hungary, 96 cents per month; Japan, 78 cents per month; and Italy, $1.75 per month. Was the expenditure by Canada, Australia, and New Zealand really more than that of the United States? In the claim for adjusted compensation it is argued, I think, that we should give compensation comparable to that paid by these last-named countries. But, Mr. President, this consideration must be kept in mind, namely, that neither of those three countries—Australia, Canada, or New Zealand—had any such burden to bear as had the mother country or as had the United States or as had France. Why was that? A great part of the expense of those countries incidental to the war was, I think, met by the mother country, and, further and more important than all, neither one of them had a great, expensive naval establishment to maintain. That constitutes, of course, a great part of the burden of debt of the United States, Great Britain, and France.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator contend that Canada did not bear a greater proportional burden than the United States?

Mr. STERLING. That is my contention now, that she did not bear a greater proportional burden than the United States.

Mr. LENROOT. I should be very glad to have the Senator demonstrate that.

Mr. STERLING. I have just said that while Australia paid her men $43.50 per month, New Zealand paid hers $36.60 per month, and Canada paid hers $33 a month, yet there were many other great expenses of the war which fell upon the mother country that these dominions of Great Britain did not have to bear, and among them was the maintenance of a naval establishment, which formed a great part of the burdens borne by our country and by their mother country.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator remembers that Canada was in the war three times as long as the United States. Does he insist that the per capita cost to the Canadians was less than the per capita cost to the citizens of the United States?

Mr. STERLING. I am not quite saying that, when you consider the length of service. I would not want to declare that the per capita cost was less, and yet I am inclined to think it was less even with the longer service of her men. If the Senator from Wisconsin has figures to show otherwise, I shall be glad to stand corrected, but I can not believe that the per capita cost in Canada was greater than the per capita cost in the United States or as great as it was in the United States.

Let me refer to what the claim was in Canada and the action taken by the Canadian Government in regard to the claim for an additional bonus. It will be seen that these claims grow by what they feed upon, as is well illustrated by the demand of the ex-service men in Canada. Approximately $164,000,000 was paid to the department of militia and defense for war-service gratuities—$164,000,000 only. Several proposals asking for much larger payments were made on behalf of the returned soldiers. The question was finally referred to a special committee appointed by a resolution of the House of Commons on September 18, 1918. This committee presented its final report on October 31, 1919. In rejecting three alternative proposals involving expenditures estimated at $1,000,000,000 for the first, $400,000,000 for the second, and $200,000,000 for the third, the committee found that any one of them would be seriously detrimental to the financial interests of the country, would involve obligations to meet which no satisfactory scheme of taxation had hitherto been devised, and by inflating the currency and thus lowering the purchasing power of money would increase the high cost of living to the disadvantage of the soldiers themselves.

The Canadian committee, Mr. President, in declining those proposals made in behalf of the returned soldiers of Canada used exactly the same sound argument that has been used in the discussion here against the pending bill.

Mr. President, here is a reference to some of the war gratuities paid and the amounts. The British Army gratuity or bonus payments totaled £114,000,000. Privates with a minimum of a month's service or less got £5 if any portion of this service was foreign. Noncommissioned officers, including corporals, sergeants, and warrant officers, got £6 to £15, depending on rank. Their regular pay during the war was $11.40 per month. But, Mr. President, in comparing what our country has done with what other principal countries involved in the war have done we must consider, too, what they paid their soldiers as regular monthly pay during their service in the war.

Czechoslovakia's regular pay during the war was $1.45 per month. France's regular pay during the war $1.45 per month. I quoted a little while ago in giving the pay of France to her soldiers from a statement furnished by the Library of Congress, which I think gave it at $1.50 a month, but here $1.45 per month is given. Italy paid during the war $1.75 per month. Belgium paid regularly during the war $2 per month. Germany paid during the war regularly $3 per month, and which, as I remember, was the pay she gave before the war.

Let us look a moment at some of the other benefits received by our soldiers and their dependents and their families through the legislation of Congress. I hardly think that the legislation of any other country will compare with it in the generous provisions made. Military and naval family allowances aggregate $298,615,000; military and naval compensation, $557,150,000; administration of these, $33,896,880; hospitalization, $224,729,402; hospital construction, $47,095,000; vocational training, $469,123,370, making the enormous total of $1,956,260,634.

I here call attention to what has been specifically appropriated for the War Veterans' Bureau for the current fiscal year. Beginning July 1, 1922, the Republican Congress has made an actual appropriation of $418,053,843 for use by the Veterans' Bureau. With the single exception of the item of interest on the public debt, this is the largest single appropriation made by the Congress for any department or function of the United States Government. It is $86,000,000 greater than the total appropriations for the War Department, $93,000,000 greater than the total appropriations for the Department of the Interior, $121,000,000 greater than the total appropriations for the Navy Department, four times the total appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, including appropriations for public highways, twenty-two times the total appropriations for the Department of Commerce, thirty-two times the total appropriations for all other independent commissions and bodies, like the Interstate Commerce Commission, twenty-three times the total appropriations for the Department of Justice, forty times the total appropriations for the Department of State, and fifty-nine times the total appropriations for the Department of Labor.

It is approximately double the total amount of money appropriated for pensions and other relief for the survivors and all the dependents of the survivors of all wars, exclusive of the World War, in which the United States ever has been engaged. Whatever may be said of other Republics, who will say in the face of such a record that this Republic has been ungrateful? Yet the assertion is made here that we are chargeable with the crime of ingratitude if we do not support the bonus bill which adds, in the aggregate, perhaps $5,000,000,000 to the public debt.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to ask the Senator whether or not he voted for the bill that was passed by the Congress providing for the readjustment of the pay of war contractors, and also the bill providing for the readjustment of the pay of railroads for our use of them during the war, and also for the extra pay of civilian employees of the Government? Did the Senator vote for all those measures?

Mr. STERLING. I did; and I know, too, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee, what a handle is sought to be made of what we have done in that respect in the Senate. Mr. President, Senators have referred to the bonus of $240 per annum given to the civilian employees of the Government. The soldiers, of course, were furnished their clothing and furnished their subsistence while in the service, but the people in the Government service, whether in Washington or in the field, had to have a bonus in order that they might live and in order that the Government might still retain them in the service.

The pay which most of them received for services rendered was inadequate. It was inadequate for the services rendered and inadequate also when we consider the high cost of living and the station in life which they occupied.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. What does the Senator say about the soldier's dependents—his wife and children—who were compelled to remain at home on the pittance of $15 or $30 a month?

Mr. STERLING. I say, Mr. President, that it was not a pittance of $15 a month. That was merely the amount furnished by the Government, but the soldier himself was required then to provide an equal amount; so that the allowance aggregated $30 a month for the dependents or the family. Where there were other dependents than the wife there was a further allotment.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator from South Dakota think that a soldier who had a wife and babies was on an equality with the civilian employees in the compensation received from the Government?

Mr. STERLING. I am not quite saying that, Mr. President, and I am not saying here, I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin, that I should not have been in favor of a greater allowance; but that is outside the present real issue. If we had not given them anything, it would be outside the issue.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield further to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. If a soldier who had a dependent family was required by law to give up $15 a month and then gave $15 more, thus taking all his salary, does not the Senator think that as to such soldiers the Government might afford to give them something additional where all their salary was taken for their dependents during the war?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; but the pending bill, which is favored by the Senator from Tennessee, does not provide for anything of that kind. If it did, consideration might be given to it. If the bill provided for some additional compensation to the 300,000 veterans of the World War who, it is said, are out of employment it would be a different proposition. As to there being 300,000 ex-soldiers out of employment, I am not admitting that they are necessarily out of employment; but with that as the need, it is now proposed to give a bonus to each of 4,000,000 men in order to provide a slight and temporary relief for 300,000.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. With reference to the bonus given to civilian employees, was any distinction made between the civilian employee who had a family and the one who had none?

Mr. STERLING. No, there was not; and I can say in a general way, with reference to that proposition, that the bonus was not too much for the man who had no family and was hardly sufficient for the man who had a family.

Mr. LENROOT. Yet the Senator from South Dakota thinks that it was sufficient to allow $15 a month to the soldier who had a family?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, Mr. President, it was war in which we were then engaged, and no country ever did, and I do not know whether or not any country ever will, propose to furnish the entire living and subsistence and sustenance of the soldier's family and dependents. I think our Government, as history will show, made liberal provision for them. I do not think such provision had ever been made before in our history or that anything like it had ever been done in the history of any other government. The Government made such provision as seemed reasonable and liberal under all the circumstances. It was war, Mr. President; it was the belief, and justly the belief, on the part of the Government—if a government can believe, and I suppose it does through its Congress and its officials—that there would be patriotic citizens enough in this country who were able to prevent and who would see that there was no suffering upon the part of a soldier's dependents, his wife and his children.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will permit me to say so, aside from some inexcusable delays upon the part of the War Risk Insurance Bureau in sending out the allotments, I have known of no distress which followed from the Government's course or because of the limited amount which it paid as an allowance to the soldier's family.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it the Senator's position, then, that in time of war patriotic service should only be demanded upon the part of those who fight and not upon the part of those who stay at home?

Mr. STERLING. No, indeed, Mr. President. Patriotic service was demanded on the part of those who stayed at home; and, in obedience to that call to patriotic service, the friends and relatives of the soldier's dependents, his family and his children, would have said, and no doubt often did say, "These shall not suffer or be deprived of any of the necessities or even of the comforts of life because he has gone to war and because of the limited allowance which the Government provides."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from South Dakota stated that he did not think the amount paid to the soldiers during the war was sufficient, but he excuses the low salary on the ground that it was war; and, therefore, on the ground that it was war, the soldier ought not to be paid anything additional. If that be good logic, why should it not have been applied to the war contractors when they came before us and got $800,000,000 of additional compensation on war contracts? In other words, if the doctrine is right so far as the soldier is concerned, why is not the same doctrine applicable to the war profiteers?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if there is any argument in regard to which I have not been able to accord an overabundance of patience it is the argument in regard to what the war profiteers received.

Ah, Mr. President, there is something wrong in the principle that a soldier or his representative should come before Congress and demand a bonus on the ground that the profiteers got so much. That is not good ground because, in the first place, it has its foundation, if it has any at all, in wrong. Because there were conscienceless profiteers, will you make out of the soldier himself a profiteer?

Mr. President, this aspect of the situation, I think, has been greatly exaggerated. There were war contracts and there was an adjustment of many of the contracts. What led to that adjustment? I am not here to say that all the adjustments were equitable; not at all; there may have been some inequity or injustice in various adjustments; but it should be remembered that during the war and at the instance and urgent request of this Government men had invested their millions in plants which were to manufacture and provide war material, subsistence, clothing, guns, and munitions for the very men we had sent abroad. It was in their interest that such contracts were originally made. Having invested their millions a short time before the war ended, the day of the armistice came, with the consequence that all operations were suspended, and many of the contractors—I can not say how many of them—had their just claims against the Government because of the investments they had made in behalf of the Government to help the Government "carry on" and "carry on" successfully in the great struggle.

There were, Mr. President, some conscienceless profiteers; there is no question about that. I think that the contractors who built the camps and cantonments on the "cost-plus" plan of contract, although some of them were conscientious, perhaps, paid enormous wages to carpenters, plumbers, and electricians which they ought not to have paid; but, again, there is this to be taken into consideration: We have an old adage that "Haste makes waste." We were in haste, and necessarily so, and the Government's position was "that the work must be accomplished and quickly, at whatever cost." I think, however, notwithstanding the examples of gross profiteering and examples of wrongs amounting perhaps to crimes in the matter of some of the war contracts, history will justify the Government, as a rule, in doing what it did in making the contracts under the emergency which then existed and in making afterwards the adjustments authorized by law.

Mr. President, I wish to hasten on; I did not expect to take this long in the discussion. I want to speak just a word about the practical benefits which will accrue to the soldiers from the bonus. We have an example in the case of New Zealand as portrayed by Nellie Margaret Scanlan, American correspondent to the New Zealand Free Lance. Under the caption "Aid extended by New Zealand to ex-service men has not been an unmixed blessing to veterans," she goes into a very careful analysis, which impresses the reader with its truth, of conditions in New Zealand, of what New Zealand, with her little more than 1,000,000 people, had done during the war, more fortunately situated in some respects than other countries, I think, because of what I believe to be the homogeneity of her population. She says this:

When a soldier returned home from the war he was given a free pass available for a month over the railways which are State owned. Later came a gratuity or bonus which was based on the man's pay and estimated on his period of service. Many of them received as much as $300 and $400. The thrifty ones saved it; others spent it on holiday or recuperating; and not a few invested in engagement rings. Human nature runs that way. It took a large sum to pay this gratuity, and but very little permanent good was achieved.

Further on this writer says:

One thing, however, is quite evident, and that is the futility of giving the soldiers money in small sums or unemployment doles. It merely evaporates, and often the last state of that man is worse than the first. The idea is to help them to help themselves by financing the initial step of reestablishment in civil life, giving them a chance to recover what they have lost by the sacrifice made on active service. Responsibility for ultimate repayment of the money makes for industry and self-reliance, essential factors in the reorganization of this after-war chaos, and it is along this road alone that success lies.

Mr. President, that portrays, by taking the opposite view, the peculiar vice of this bill, which permits the soldier to negotiate or pledge his certificate at a bank for a loan and go away and forget about it. What he receives will not go far toward his rehabilitation if that is what he needs; it is hardly sufficient to finance any enterprise; but it is easy money, and instead of encouraging a spirit of thrift upon the part of the soldier, instead of encouraging him to find some enterprise in which he can engage, some fruitful employment, it invites him to recklessness in expenditure; and you will have the condition in America, so far as a great many of the returned soldiers are concerned, that this writer portrays as existing in New Zealand.

Mr. President, naturally enough reference has been made again and again to the duty and the patriotism of men; I call attention briefly to a few letters which I have received at various times. The lessons they contain ought to be of value in a time like this.

Here is a copy of a letter the original of which I submitted for the RECORD in 1920. I think it was the first letter from an ex-service man that had been submitted for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so far as the Senate is concerned. I want to reread that letter. It is dated March 6, 1920.

It is addressed to myself and reads as follows:

Concerning the pending legislation relative to a bonus for the soldiers:

As one who spent nearly two years in a uniform, and who is now in touch with a large number of others who did likewise, I want to express myself, where it is apt to do the most good, as being opposed to any gift or bonus being given me or any other uninjured returned soldier.

The Nation suffered through a war which has left us with an immense debt for future generations, perhaps, to struggle with, and I know that the best of the 4,000,000 young men who gave up some of their time for the good cause do not wish to make this burden greater, but to lessen it. We gladly sacrificed what was necessary for humanity and the United States and do not now wish to have pay for patriotism.

Whose heart does not respond to the sentiment of that ex-soldier, who had served his country for nearly two years, and, as I recall, was in the service overseas?

I do not want to quit with reading this one letter. Here are a couple from fathers of men who were in the service.

This is dated April 22, 1921:

Feeling that you are interested in the attitude of those most concerned in the soldier bonus bill now up for legislation, especially those who had sons and friends in the late war, I am going to briefly give you my viewpoint.

I had four sons in the service, having lost one, and know that all three of those living, including myself, feel that the burden which this bill would put upon the taxpaying public would be an exceptional one, and they all feel that they did their bit willingly and are ready to do their part in getting the finances of our country back onto a more stable basis without saddling the taxpayer with this additional burden.

Mr. President, I sought to point out the other day, before being interrupted in the course of my remarks, that under present conditions, industrial and financial, with a coal strike on, a railroad strike on, and with no one knowing what the future holds for us in the way of industrial or financial disturbance, we are not in a condition, although we thought prosperity was just around the corner, to saddle upon the American people any greater indebtedness than they now have to bear.

One more letter. This is from a South Dakota farmer. In a few terse sentences he expresses the whole argument, both practical and sentimental, as against this proposed bonus:

It is of date February 13, 1922.

I wish very strongly to protest against any bonus bill. I have two boys who have been soldiers, but I think they will agree with me that the bill is vicious in every way.

Our taxes are now a burden that is crushing the farmer. The pension privilege has been abused, and a bonus will establish a bad precedent. There are some things in life that we do for honor and patriotism.

This State has shown a generous disposition, as have others, by a bonus. No amount can fully repay our brave boys.

Let well enough alone. Let all Legion men say with Roosevelt: "I did not go to war for the pay there was in it."

Mr. President, I wish the kind of a sentiment so well expressed in these letters animated all the boys of the American Legion to-day. If it did we would not have this bonus bill before us.

Mr. President, providing as we have already for the sick, for the disabled, for the wounded, for those whose health was impaired in any way, what is the situation of the man who went abroad, fought our battles there, and then came home sound in body, sound in mind, with the glow of health on his cheeks, richer in experience, richer from the educational standpoint by far than he ever would have been otherwise? What is his situation? Oh, and what else? He had the privilege of going and fighting for the grandest Republic on God's footstool; and instead of claiming a bonus now, he ought to consider himself, with all that he is and all that he has gained, the debtor of the Nation rather than its creditor. That is the situation. Those who are maimed or who suffer from disease, those whom the Veterans' Bureau is taking care of, those whom we in Congress will continue to take care of, are our creditors and we must pay our debt to them to the last farthing.

It is a good time to sound the call to duty, it seems to me. Whether to a citizen or to a soldier, no higher tribute can be paid than that found in these lines:

His life consisted most of plain devotedness to duty, steadfast and still, nor seeking mortal praise,
But finding amplest recompense in work done squarely, and unwasted days;
For this we honor him.

Mr. President, "peace hath her victories, no less renowned than war"; but the victories of war have always been gained by sacrifice. Of little account are they unless there was sacrifice in gaining them. So the achievements of peace, the victories of peace, require sacrifice, and they are of little worth, as a rule, unless there is the sacrifice.

What we call upon the boys who fought bravely and well in the late war to do is to make a sacrifice of what? Not anything material, not of property, not of time, not of a moment's energy—none of these, but just the sacrifice of a desire for a bonus, which, while it means so little to each one individually, piles up and increases the national debt by $5,000,000,000, or nearly so, as a new burden upon an already overburdened people.

Mr. President, these are my reasons for opposing the soldiers' bonus bill. As I said in the outset, I cheered the soldiers when they enlisted; I cheered them when they went abroad, and was deeply grateful for all they accomplished at home or abroad; but here is the time, now, to show what good citizenship means and to show that peace as well as war calls for the practice of patriotism. What idea do we want to inculcate? What is the question involved? That it is not alone the benefit of the million or two million men or even four million men, granting this would be a benefit, that we are seeking. The guiding principle for every Senator is or ought to be, I know: That the legislation which he supports must be in the interest of and not opposed to the public welfare. Under existing conditions this bill, in my judgment, is opposed to that welfare which every citizen of the Republic should seek to promote.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in view of the argument that took place here yesterday and the day before in reference to the payment of interest obligations by Great Britain, I desire to read a statement that was published in this morning's Washington Post:

BRITAIN SHIPPING GOLD TO PAY DEBT INTEREST—$65,000,000 DUE OCTOBER 15; $38,000,000 SENT OVER IN LAST MONTH.

Great Britain is shipping gold from her reserves to this country in preparation for the interest payment due on the British war debts to this country in October, according to a report to the commerce department yesterday.

Quoting Sir Robert Horne, chancellor of the exchequer of Great Britain, the report said: "Gold has been withdrawn from the reserve for the purposes of shipment to the United States of America in connection with the dollar requirements of the Government, more particularly the approaching interest payment on the British debt to the United States Government."

Of the totals of about $43,000,000 of gold imported by this country during July approximately $38,000,000 came from Great Britain. In round numbers $100,000,000 of interest on the British debt is due during October and November, about $65,000,000 being payable on October 15. Interest payments from Great Britain so far have been the only expected income from foreign debts included in Treasury estimates of receipts for the next two years.

This indicates, of course, that the interest payments from Great Britain alone, as I stated a day or two ago, will be ample to take care of the payments to be made under the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, yesterday I expressed my views on the amendment in the nature of a substitute to this bill offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM]. I am still very firmly of the opinion that the Senators made a mistake when they voted down that substitute. It would have given to those who had a service credit of $50 the same relief that is given by the pending measure. It would have given to the rest of the soldiers who had a service credit of over $50 one-half of that credit in cash and the balance in securities payable in five years. That would have been a real relief to the soldier.

Under the pending bill we give to him a certificate and ask him to go out among the banks. Perhaps they will make the loan, perhaps they will not; he does not know. In any event it is an attempt to impose upon the banks a duty which belongs to the Government, if it belongs to anybody, and it makes it incumbent upon the soldier to go out with his certificate and see whether he can negotiate a loan. I do not think that such legislation comports with the dignity of the great Government of the United States.

But we are now up to the point where we must decide what shall be done with the pending measure. I served on a special committee of five, appointed by the Senate in 1921 under Senate Resolution 59, and that committee submitted a preliminary report on July 20, 1921, and a further supplemental report on August 22, 1921, with respect to what should be done for the disabled veterans. The labors of that committee resulted in considerable changes in the relief measures which had theretofore been adopted.

I do not intend to discuss those reports or the legislation which grew out of the investigation, except to say that I am quite sure, so far as the wounded or disabled war veteran is concerned, I voice the sentiments of the Senate, as well as of the country at large, when I say that the Government of the United States ought to treat him with the same generosity that any well-to-do and well-intentioned parent would treat his son under the same circumstances.

I think I may say that, so far as the Congress is concerned, the wounded and disabled have been cared for. Up to May 19, 1922, according to a statement submitted to me by Colonel Forbes, the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, under that date, we had already expended $1,639,000,000 in their behalf, and other appropriations have been made since which, according to the statement made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] on yesterday, make it over $2,000,000,000.

The question now is, What shall we do for the other veterans? I realize that a very strong argument can be made both for and against the pending bill, depending upon the viewpoint. If we are to be guided alone by sentiment, then this bill is wholly inadequate. If we are to be guided alone by the financial viewpoint, then it is adding to the burdens of the Government and the taxpayers. But I do not think that sound wisdom will suggest to the Senate or to the country that we should deal with this problem wholly on the sentimental side or wholly on the financial side.

What shall we do? This subject has been agitated for several years. Twenty-two States in the Union have voted upon the subject. Of course, those votes related to a State bonus, not to Federal compensation. But in each of these States the vote was overwhelmingly in favor of relief. In the State of Ohio, where there was a referendum vote, the people of that State by the ballot, by a majority of three to one, authorized the issue of bonds of the State to the amount of $25,000,000, which at that time was believed to be sufficient. It has transpired since that an additional six or seven million will be required and the legislature of the State has voted an additional appropriation for that sum.

It may be suggested that those votes were on a State offering and not on an offering by the Federal Government. So be it. But it will be borne in mind at the same time that the States did this voluntarily, when there was no obligation on their part to do it, and I think that everyone must admit that if an obligation lies anywhere it lies with the Federal Government. I conclude from this statement that if the votes had been upon a Federal offering instead of a State offering, the votes in the several States would have been more pronouncedly in favor of the Federal offering than they were in favor of the several State offerings.

I realize very fully that industry everywhere is laboring under very substantial burdens. There is a good deal of force in the statement that we compensated those who had financial investments for their losses, particularly when engaged in governmental activities, and it makes it very difficult, therefore, to say why these boys should not be similarly recompensed for their losses. I know, on the other hand, it is said that this is an attempt to compensate patriotism by cash. I do not think that construction can be properly placed upon this movement.

This bill may or may not be defeated, it may or may not be vetoed, but whatever may be the fate of the pending bill, I am sure that the sentiment throughout the country will not subside until something substantial is done. It has been suggested that there has been a change in thought throughout the country and that if the same propositions were presented in the several States of the Union now which have been voted upon in the past the result would be different. But has anybody pointed out any substantial evidence which justifies that conclusion?

My belief is that while there has been some change of sentiment, perhaps one way and perhaps the other, the people generally want something done. That was evidenced, in my judgment, in the two conventions which met last week in Ohio. It is true there was nothing said on the subject by the Republican convention, and I have no authority to speak for the Republican convention, but I think we understand the reason why the Republican platform was silent on the subject. My belief is that if there had been a poll of the Republican convention the delegates would have very strongly indorsed some form of relief. That is what the Democratic convention did. It did not indorse this particular bill, but it expressed itself in favor of substantial relief. Under these circumstances it seems to me that Senators and Congressmen alike sooner or later will be required to do what the voters back home want done.

Mr. President, it is suggested that this will be setting a bad example for the future. I hope that we shall have no more wars of this kind, but if we are looking for precedents as to what shall be done in matters of this sort I think we can find ample precedent during the Revolutionary War. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to refer in detail to all of the relief measures which were inaugurated by the Continental Congress, or later, but I want to refer to one resolution which was passed by the Continental Congress.

On September 16, 1776, the Continental Congress provided for a bounty of $20 to each noncommissioned officer and private soldier "who shall enlist to serve during the war unless sooner discharged," and in the same resolution Congress made provision for granting lands to officers and soldiers engaged in the service, as follows: To a colonel, 500 acres; lieutenant colonel, 450 acres; major, 400 acres; captain, 300 acres; lieutenant, 200 acres; ensign, 150 acres; each noncommissioned officer and soldier, 100 acres. Money meant more then than it does now, and land was cheaper then than it is now, but we had lands to bestow then, and we have but little land now to bestow. The McNary amendment to the pending bill will give a preference to the soldier and sailor who hereafter may take up the unimproved lands of the country.

Mr. President, I realize, as I said a moment ago, that there is much that may be said both for and against the bill, but my belief is that if we will examine into it very carefully our own reason, as well as our own sentiment, must suggest that something be done.

I have before me the report which was filed on April 20, 1922, by the chairman of the Finance Committee in support of the bill. By reference to page 6 of that report, I find payments since the war by foreign countries to their veterans as follows, and this gives, as I understand it, the maximum possible: Great Britain, £29, or $101.50; Canada, $600, or, converted into our money, $540; Australia, £117, or, converted into our money, $409.50; New Zealand, £117, or, converted into our money, $409.50. I recognize that the soldiers from Canada, Australia, and New Zealand were longer in the service than were ours. They fought a true fight and they kept the faith, as our soldiers did. Notwithstanding the tremendous burdens which were on those dominions or provinces, they voted these very substantial amounts of money to their soldiers. Shall the United States do less than the British provinces did?

Mr. President, it is urged that much of the money may be dissipated. That may be so, but as I understand it, when money goes to a beneficiary the one who gave it or the power which gave it never seeks to exercise control over it afterwards. That it will be a benefit to many there can be no doubt. That it will be of little benefit to some is just as certain. But shall we decline to give to those who would be benefited because some would receive who would not be benefited?

I regret the burden that this measure is going to be to the country at large, but my belief is that the public generally would rather share the burden than to have it said that we were not grateful.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I want to say just a word in explanation of the vote which I cast yesterday against the so-called Bursum amendment. My examination of that amendment, after it had been amended several times on the floor of the Senate, led me to the conclusion that it was probably a better measure for the soldiers than the pending bill; but I also understood that the amendment, if passed, would lead to a veto of the bill and that those who were watching the measure especially on behalf of the soldiers desired that the bill be passed in substantially the form in which it now appears before the Senate. Out of deference to their judgment and on account of the situation I have described, I voted against the Bursum amendment.

I shall vote for the bill. It is not a bill that is satisfactory to me. When the revenue bill was before the Senate and it was proposed to strike out the excess-profits tax, I sought to retain that tax and to devote it to the payment of a soldiers' bonus. Three times, I believe, that proposition was voted upon in various forms and was defeated. If that amendment had passed, all or at least a large part of the moneys would have been provided without levying any tribute or tax, or at least a very infinitesimal tax, upon the ordinary population of the country. It would have given the soldiers a payment in cash which would have been very substantial and which would have resulted in their obtaining their entire compensation within a period of two or three years, unless, indeed, the experts of the Treasury were in error in the estimate of the amount of excess-profits tax which would be paid.

I have had occasion hitherto in discussing the excess-profits tax to rebut the statement so often made that taxes are carried on to and paid by the ultimate consumer. Undoubtedly there are taxes which the individual or corporation pays and which it is possible to add to the price of the product, thus compelling the ultimate consumer to pay the tax. But it is also true that there are other taxes which can not be entirely passed on and some of them, in my judgment, are rarely if ever passed on to the ultimate consumer.

Let us take the question of income tax upon very large incomes. We remitted a portion of that tax and it was sought by the majority to remit a very much larger portion, to take away from the possessors of great incomes a tax burden of $90,000,000 a year.

Mr. President, if that tax had been paid, I question whether any substantial amount of it at all would ever have been passed on to the ultimate consumer. The possessors of great incomes receive them as personal emoluments; they come to them as the result of transactions that are already closed, of investments that are already made. It would be difficult to conceive of how they could be passed on to the general public. The income of the individual who is its beneficiary is already raised as high as the genius and ability of that individual can raise it. He has not lowered it out of consideration for the general public. That there may be slight exceptions or variations will be admitted, but, as a broad and general proposition, an income tax, particularly a tax upon the enormous incomes to which I am referring, can not be passed on.

In like manner, when we speak of the excess-profits tax, going back to an analysis of the origin of those profits, a candid review will convince most men, I think, that the man who reaps the very high profits is an individual who, for some reason, is able to extort a very high price, and the limit to the price which he charges is the ability to sell the article to people. He charges just as much as he can get; indeed, that is human nature, and that practice is generally indulged in.

If a man has already charged all he can get, it would be very difficult for him to add any amount on account of a tax he must pay.

The exception to that rule is found in those articles that are highly competitive, where prices are kept down by the competitive condition of the market. Where that is true, the ability to add to the price is destroyed by the fact that competition makes that out of the question. So these two classes of taxation, the one upon excess profits and the other upon very large incomes, are for the most part not passed on, and the argument that we have heard here in that behalf is fallacious.

Moreover, if we needed any other proof, we should find it in the fact that the demand for the reduction of such taxes did not come from the masses of the people, but came from the individuals or corporations required to pay them. They started the agitation; they carried on the agitation; and they were the ones who loudly complained.

Moreover, the testimony of the Secretary of the Treasury, who had demanded the repeal of the excess-profits tax and also a reduction of high income taxes, I think, sets the question at rest, for while he insisted that the tax was passed on his chief argument as to taxes upon great incomes nevertheless was that the possessors of those incomes would not pay the taxes. Indeed, he described various devices by which he said they were able to defeat the purpose of the law and to escape paying the burdens imposed upon them. So we simply stand to-day in the situation in which we were placed by the Secretary of the Treasury, by the President, and by the majority of the Congress.

That situation was this: They insisted on reducing the taxes upon incomes of more than $68,000 a year by $90,000,000 per annum. In that they were partially defeated, but the reduction nevertheless was enormous. They insisted on taking off the profiteer the excess-profits tax of $450,000,000, and in that they were completely successful. The Secretary of the Treasury had insisted that the bonus bill should not be passed because we would not have enough revenue, according to his statement. The reason we were not to have sufficient revenue was because he proposed to force the repeal of those taxes. He succeeded in forcing the repeal of the taxes and in forcing the abandonment, for a time, of the bonus bill. Accordingly, when the bonus bill is now brought forward we are compelled to pass it without any adequate provision for the payment of the bonus. The Senate is powerless to create that revenue, because we in this body can not originate a tax bill. If we could, then we would have brought forward a proposition to restore the excess-profits tax and to have thus afforded a fund from which the bonus could be paid. The soldier, therefore, who fails to be satisfied by this bonus bill must charge it to those who cut off the sources of revenue from which the bonus could have been paid, and paid in cash or, at least, paid within two or three years' time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Missouri to yield for just a moment at that point?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to ask the Senator whether or not he would think favorably of a plan by which a special addition to the income tax might be imposed in order to raise sufficient revenue to meet this obligation? Of course, under such a plan the people having the larger incomes would have to pay the larger proportion of such tax.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I have complained because the majority in Congress have reduced the tax on the larger incomes. That majority also reduced or entirely took off the excess-profits tax; and we here in the Senate are powerless to restore those taxes until a revenue measure shall have been brought before us, which we might amend. Since there is no revenue provision in this bill, of course we can not amend the bill in that respect.

Mr. FLETCHER. Such a proposition would have to originate in the other House.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It would have to originate in the House of Representatives.

Mr. FLETCHER. It may be, however, that some plan similar to that which the Senator from Missouri is suggesting may later develop there.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Such a proposition may come to us hereafter.

Mr. President, let those who have stood here and said that we could not have the revenues, who have offered that as the excuse for voting against this bill, also have it written under their names that they cut off the revenue, that they did so with their eyes open, and with the warning sounded in their ears upon this floor not once but many times and day after day. They obeyed their master's voice—the Secretary of the Treasury. He demanded that the taxes should be taken off the profiteer and should be reduced on incomes above $68,000. Having reduced the revenues of the Treasury, and done it with full and complete warning, they should not be heard here to cry poverty.

Mr. President, I have listened to the most singular array of verbal contradictions during this debate that I ever heard on this floor. A Senator will rise and tell us that when a soldier goes out on the field of battle he is engaged in so glorious a work that he can never be repaid by a grateful country. In the next breath, the same Senator will tell us that the soldier is indebted to his country for the privilege of fighting at all, and that the debt is all on the other side. I have heard those two statements made in the last few minutes, and the two statements were not more than 50 seconds apart. It is a fitting illustration of the fallacies which are brought forward to buttress a bad case, the bad case which is here now. We are told that our country, that no country can ever repay the debt of gratitude it owes to the soldiers who bared their bosoms upon the battle plains of France, and Senators go into heroics as they describe the wonderful valor of our troops. Having declared that we have a debt of gratitude that never can be paid, the inquiry naturally comes, For what are we grateful? The answer must be: We are grateful for services of inestimable value. If, then, we owe a debt of that kind, what sort of argument is it to say, "Because your services were beyond all value that can be fixed in dollars and in cents, we refuse to give you a penny to compensate you for your actual financial losses"?

In other words, "if you had stayed home and worked at a bench and made shells, you would have been," according to their philosophy, "entitled to pay for making the shells, because it was a commonplace thing to make the shells; but if you stood upon the field of battle as a gunner, shooting those shells and being shot at, then, because that can not be fully compensated in dollars you must not have anything at all to make up for the financial loss you suffered while you were there." In other words, "the more you do, the less claim you have on your country. If you stayed home and worked and profiteered you are entitled to pay; but if you went over yonder and worked harder, physically, than anybody at home, and chanced your life and your limb and your health, then, because you did so much more than a man at home you shall not have anything, while he has everything."

What kind of philosophy is that?

Here is a man who has a Government contract. He is making not only a return upon all he invested but he is making 100 or 200 or 300 per cent in addition. That is a sacred obligation. That must be redeemed to the uttermost farthing. That must be paid to the last penny. If he suffered any loss in his factory, if he suffered any loss by virtue of changed conditions, we make it up. But if that man had performed service under a rain of lead and of steel, then we would say to him, "Oh, they were shooting at you while you were doing this, and we will not pay you what is justly coming to you."

In one sense, of course, the service of the man who answers to his country's call never can be paid in dollars and cents; but does that mean that you shall not treat him fairly in so far as dollars and cents are concerned in the equation? I suppose that no man ever can repay his mother for the mother's ministrations to him from babyhood's hours to manhood's estate. Yet, because he could not pay her for her divine love and her tender ministrations, he does not send her to the poorhouse. He does not refuse to look after her physical wants. I suppose that no man could pay in money for the affection of his sister or his wife or his brother; but because you owe a debt so tender and so divine that money can not pay it, that does not give you license to pick their pockets or plunder them of that to which they are entitled. Nobody proposes to pay these men for their patriotism, but some of us wish to aid them with a little money that may help them get their feet under themselves and in a way compensate them for the financial loss they incurred in going into the war.

What would you think, anyway, of a fellow whose child was in a burning building, and a neighbor or a stranger came by, rushed into the flames, and carried the child out, and had his own clothes burned off of him, who would say to that man, "If you had lost this suit of clothes working in my garden, I would have made it up; but since you lost it saving my child, and I can not fully pay you for the life of the child, I will not even pay you for the shirt that was burned off your back"? What kind of logic is that?

A man who says that the country has done all it ought to be asked to do, or all it can afford to do, stands on a different basis; but do not let us hear any more of the talk, "Your service was so glorious that it can not be paid fully in money, and hence we are not going to give you anything to compensate you for your actual financial loss."

Mr. President, we have been told of the wonderful benefits that came to these men, that they have glorious memories, and that we pay them the tribute of our love and of our tears. Fine! There some Senators propose to stop. "We will just cheer you a little and we will just weep a little, and then you can go and hunt a job, just as it suits you—if the public will give it to you."

There is an old story which has been a matter of laughter for years, covered with the dust of time, and sanctified by repeated telling, of the board of directors of a corporation who on New Year's eve had just divided up a large, juicy dividend melon among themselves, and one of them, a little charitably inclined, rose and said: "We have had a very prosperous year. We have declared an enormous dividend. We ought to do something for the poor," whereupon an enthusiastic director arose and seconded the motion and ended by saying, "I move, Mr. President, that we give the poor three cheers." [Laughter.] That is what they want to give these boys.

They talk of the glorious privilege of serving their country. Well, it is a privilege, but it is a privilege that no man coveted, except because the burning desire to defend his country was so great that he was willing to sink every personal consideration and sacrifice his life and limb. But he did not covet it; he did not want it for the pleasure that he would get in marching across shell-torn fields. You can not pay him in rhetoric. We might do a little in other ways.

Then somebody says, "They will spend it all." Well, in the name of the Lord God of Israel why should they not spend it if they want to? That is their business, not ours. We did not ask the war profiteer who made 100 per cent what he was going to do with his money when we paid him that profit. We did not say to him, "You must save that money." He was permitted to take it and buy yachts and ten-thousand-dollar automobiles and build palaces and enjoy himself. We did not criticize that. Well, the humblest buck private has a right to take his money and spend it, just the same as the great millionaire. It is none of our business. But it is an impugnment of the intelligence of these boys to say that they are going to go out and squander their money. Some of them will; but many of them, the vast majority of them, will make very good use of their money. Anyway, if they want to spend it, I repeat, that is their business.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a moment?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. A survey was made of the uses to which the veterans put the bonus given to them by the State of Ohio. In view of what the Senator has just been saying, he will be interested in the fact that this survey shows that only one-quarter of 1 per cent of the money was used for pleasure purposes and for the purchase of luxuries. The uses to which the money was put are enumerated under about 25 different heads. About 50 per cent of it was used to pay for the necessities of life and to pay debts—to be accurate, 23 per cent to pay debts and 25 per cent for clothing and fuel and other necessities of life—and only one-quarter of 1 per cent was used for the purchase of luxuries and for having a good time.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Somebody said here the other day—I have forgotten who it was; whoever said it has it duly registered in that great reservoir of dead things, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—that if we put on this tax it would drive the Ford employees to despair, and that they were already being put out of employment by virtue of high taxes.

Everybody knows that the Ford employees are to be turned out of employment by Henry Ford, and that the primary causes for turning them out which he ascribed are lack of transportation and lack of coal, and we all have a right to believe that when the coal strike is over and the railroad strike is over the factory will resume. But what has the discharge of the Ford employees to do with paying this bonus? The bonus has not been granted yet, and the Ford employees have been discharged or are to be laid off. Nobody proposes to pay a cent of this bonus for something like a year or two.

There was another argument put in, for what reason I do not know, that the taxes paid by the Ford employees will put them in despair. Yet the bill carries no revenue provision, except that we have voted to devote a part of the funds we hope to get out of the foreign countries to the payment of this debt. When we do bring forward a revenue measure, I promise the country that the Democratic Party, on this side of the Chamber—and I am sure I can speak for them in that respect—will be ready to put the taxes upon swollen fortunes and swollen incomes, not because we are the enemies of wealth but because the great fortunes and the great incomes of this country justly should pay the greater percentage of the tax burden. It is a rule, and a sound rule, in the levying of taxes, that he who has the ability to pay must bear a greater burden than he who has nothing with which to pay. Back of that lies the very sound reason that all the individual who has nothing to pay with gets from Government is the protection of his life and his liberty, whereas the man with an immense fortune obtains protection of his life and liberty, but he also has the constabulary, the Army, the Navy, the courts, all the machinery of the Government, employed constantly to guard and conserve his fortune.

The amount of money the Government expends, directly or indirectly, to protect a fortune like John D. Rockefeller's, is as much greater than the amount that it spends to protect the ordinary laboring man as the difference between Rockefeller's fortune and the laboring man's fortune. So it is just and right.

We have a Secretary of the Treasury—and I speak of him kindly, for I personally respect him—who belongs by instinct, by environment, by training, by desire, by interest to that great class of men who control the millions and billions of this country, and who want to escape every dollar of taxes they can escape. So he came here and demanded that the taxes be reduced upon great wealth, and demanded, in order that those taxes could be reduced, that we should not pay to the boys who stood upon the battle line and protected those fortunes a little compensation for their losses.

There is a statute providing that a man engaged in trade can not be Secretary of the Treasury, and I agree with the statement of the Senator from Georgia that the spirit of that statute has been violated every day Mr. Mellon has occupied that high position.

Mr. President, we are going to vote on this bill, and some people say the President will veto it. We know the influence of the administration has been constantly against it. Let the President veto it. He has certain constitutional prerogatives which he has the right to exercise, and if he believes the bill to be a bad bill it will be his duty to veto it. But if we believe it to be a good bill it is equally our duty to pass it, and if he vetoes it, it will be equally our duty to pass it over his veto. In any event let us do our duty as we see it. But whatever we do, if we are to vote against this bill, let us not hide behind the miserable subterfuge that the work was so good and so glorious that it can not be paid for in money, and hence, to use a slang expression, we will "welch" on the payment of the actual loss of money incident to the service.

Whatever we do, let us not put our action upon the basis that our Government is a pauper. We have heard the pauper cry. It seems to come forward only when we propose to pay something to the boys who saved the country. When the armistice was declared there lay some $200,000,000 over here in the Treasury of the United States, and it was nearly all turned over to foreign countries. It was said we had some kind of an implied obligation to them. It was turned over, although they had never given us their promissory notes or bonds, as they had agreed to. It was said that was all right. We were not so impoverished then that we could not do that.

Perhaps some of that money was used to pay the bonus to the English and French soldiers and other soldiers; I do not know. But how easily it went. Nobody then stood up and cried out that bankruptcy stared us in the face. That money was going to foreign countries, and the excuse was that it was going to be paid back to American contractors. I have always believed the greater part of it was turned over illegally, but I do not care to discuss that question to-day.

We have heard something about how hard it was for us to pay our debts incurred during the Civil War, and therefore that the present debt of the United States is a burden which we dare not increase.

Let us examine that a little.

At the opening of the Civil War there were approximately only 35,000,000 people in the United States. The country was divided into two warring factions. War was here on our own soil, and when it was over the fields of the South had been plowed and furrowed by cannon shot; the cities of the South and the homes of the South had been reduced to ashes. Yet the debt that was due from this Government at the close of that war was equal to 16.1 per cent of the total wealth of the United States in 1860, which antedated the destruction of the war. The total indebtedness of the United States, omitting interest calculations, amounts to-day, when compared with our estimated wealth, which is $350,000,000,000, to only 6.66 per cent of our present wealth.

To state the figures, the wealth of the United States in 1860 was only $16,159,616,000, and the war debt amounted to 16.1 per cent of that amount. To-day our estimated wealth is $350,000,000,000, and our war debt is only 6.66 per cent of that amount. But in that war debt is included the $10,500,000,000 owed to us from foreign countries. If all of that debt should be paid, then our national debt would be only $13,183,340,573.20, omitting interest, and that debt would bear to our total wealth the relation of 3.76 per cent.

It will be said that these debts will never be paid. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] called attention this morning to an article which seems to give hope that Great Britain is preparing to pay the interest on her debt. If Great Britain shall pay her debt, then the remainder of the debt which we will owe will be 5.47 per cent of our total wealth. If Great Britain and France shall pay their debts to us, that will so reduce our national indebtedness that it will be only 4.50 per cent of the total wealth. If Italy, France, and England shall all three pay their debts to us, then our total national indebtedness will be only a little over 4 per cent of our national wealth. That allows all the rest of the debt to go unpaid as a finality. I say it is entirely within reason to believe that England, France, and Italy will pay their debts if we can ever close the lips of that class of people who go around the country talking about it being the duty of the United States to cancel those debts, and thus playing directly into the hands of every foreign repudiationist on earth.

I would not want to characterize a person indulging in that kind of talk as disloyal, but it is so utterly at variance with the interests of our country and is so consistent with the desires of foreign nations that want to escape the payment of their liabilities that I can not regard it as a manifestation of any very high order of loyalty.

Mr. President, I have presented the figures. The estimated wealth of this country amounts to $350,000,000,000 and the total debt aggregates only a little over $23,000,000,000, omitting interest charges, which are nearly all of them on the credit side on account of the foreign debt. To say to our veterans, "We will not pay you what you lost," seems to me to be the height of absurdity. Let us treat this bill as it ought to be treated, as a part of the cost of the war, which ought to have been paid on the day the soldiers were discharged and which we did not pay then, but should pay at the earliest possible moment. Treating it that way, we will be treating the boys measurably as well as we treated the manufacturer who built a plant and lost money, the contractor who collected materials and lost money because the war came to an end. We will be treating human beings, for once at least in the contemporary history of our country, approximately as well in principle, if not in degree, as we treat wealth.

Mr. President, the country will respond generously in a sentiment of approval to every man who casts his vote for the pending bill, not because he did a political duty but because he did a human and a just thing for the men who sacrificed and suffered and endured for the great cause in which our country was engaged.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I had intended to speak briefly upon the pending bill, but I have come to the conclusion that I can promote its passage better by voting than by talking. I therefore content myself with expressing the hope that we may vote at once.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I am firm in the conviction that the people and the Government of the United States owe something more than a debt of gratitude to those who were enrolled in our armies during the recent World War. It is impossible to compute in figures just what this indebtedness is, or to arrange a basis of payment that will discharge this indebtedness in full. The adjusted compensation bill now under discussion offers a medium by which, in part, this obligation to our soldiers may be discharged. Those who are opposed to any form of adjusted compensation put forth the argument that to attempt in this way and by the means offered in the bill to recompense the soldiers to some extent for the economic loss suffered by them by reason of their service is putting a price upon patriotism. I do not believe that this argument is sound.

The volunteers in the service, both men and women, and those who were drafted, responded with equal readiness to the call of their country and patriotically served in the armies at the front or in camp in constant readiness to go to the front, but it does not appear to me that they should be so heavily penalized on account of their patriotism and of their services rendered to the whole country and to the whole people. We are not now attempting to pay them for their patriotic devotion to their country. We are only attempting a partial adjustment of the distinct economic loss which the vast majority of them suffered by reason of their service.

The opponents of the measure freely state that the utmost generosity on the part of the Government and the people should be directed toward the care of all those who were wounded or who suffered disability by reason of illness incident to the service, but that further than this it is not necessary or expedient to go. No one disputes the obligation of the Government to those who suffered these disabilities, and the Congress has generously provided for the care of these classes of our soldiers and is still on the alert to provide additional facilities in order that all disabled veterans may be treated with the tenderest care and solicitude. It must be borne in mind, however, first, that almost all of those who either volunteered or were drafted into the service suffered a distinct economic loss even though they were fortunate enough to escape any physical disability by reason of their service. Hundreds of thousands of young men were taken from their usual avocations through the operation of the draft law, or voluntarily left their usual avocations during the period of the war, and served for various periods of time upon a basis of compensation which, while liberal as compared with the compensation paid to the soldiers of some of the nations engaged in the war, was trifling and insignificant as compared with what they would have earned in wages or in business had they been permitted to remain at home.

Second, when they returned to their homes after this service many of them found their places filled. They found likewise that those who had remained safely in the homeland had been engaged in various occupations upon a basis of compensation hitherto unheard of, whereas those who were engaged in business almost without exception had made extraordinary profits. It is not just that the men who bore the brunt of the Great War for the benefit of the whole people and their Government should be allowed to stand entirely this economic loss. It should be distributed over the entire mass of the tax-paying public, including, of course, the veterans themselves, who as time elapses will pay an increasing amount of any tax burden occasioned by the passage of the bill.

An act of conscription is nothing more nor less than a tax. It is the most drastic form of taxation which the Government can exercise. There is no doubt but that it is the most equitable means of raising a large army for the national defense, but that fact does not relieve it of its harshness upon the class of citizens affected by it. The conscription act which it was deemed wise to enact during the recent war reached into the homes and took into the service of the Government the very flower of the young manhood of the country. It was a tax upon their very life and blood. Many of those who remained safely in the security of their homes and many of those who now violently oppose the passage of the bill are loud in their condemnation of class taxation of any kind, and yet they are willing to permit, through the operation of the act of conscription, the classes affected by it not only to be taken from their homes, often under the most drastic and harrowing circumstances, subjected to all the dangers of the camp and of the most horrible war that was ever waged, and are now willing to have this same class of citizens bear alone and unaided the entire economic loss which they undoubtedly have sustained.

It is frequently stated by the opponents of the legislation that it must not be enacted because the aggregate amount of money to be paid under its provisions is so large. If the people and the Government actually owe this as a part of their debt to our veterans, as I firmly believe to be true, then the size of the obligation can not be pleaded as an excuse for its nonpayment. Neither the Government of the United States nor its people are bankrupt. We all appreciate fully the great burden of taxation that has come upon us by reason of the war. We are all loath to increase those burdens except upon conditions which are entirely justifiable and defensible. It is my judgment that our debt to the soldiers is at this time just as distinctly a debt as though it had already been translated into terms of notes and bonds. If the extent of one's obligations can be pleaded as an excuse for their nonpayment it will be grateful news to large classes of our citizens. It is my conviction that the people of the United States fully recognize this obligation, not only as an actual debt but as a debt in the highest sense, a debt of honor, and that they will unhesitatingly ratify and approve the passage of the pending bill.

Another argument that is advanced by those opposing the legislation is that the benefits are so small to each beneficiary and that much of the money paid them would be wasted. Many of those who advance this argument can not possibly understand what a boon the benefits conferred by the bill will be to its beneficiaries. It would mean more to many of them at this time than ten or even a hundred fold larger sums would mean to them in later periods of their lives. It would enable many a brave young soldier to get a definite start toward a successful career.

I well remember the first $500 which came into my possession. Having married just at graduation from college, without a dollar in the world and even without a job, but with the confidence of youth in the possibilities of the future, we had been struggling along for many years in rather a precarious fashion. The $500 referred to enabled me to buy the furniture for a little cottage home into which I put my wife and two babies. Many of these boys are similarly situated, and to many of them it would give a basis of credit which would be a valuable factor in starting them upon careers of usefulness.

It is undoubtedly true that some of the money would be wasted by its recipients. Every means should be taken by private and governmental agencies to guard against such wastage, but I can not see that this fact is an argument for the nonpayment of this debt.

Mr. President, the pending bill may not be a perfect one; many of those who support it would have preferred it to be written in a different form. But it is believed that under the present circumstances it offers about the best and most equitable adjustment of the matter that can be made. It will prove to the soldier boys that this great Government and its people are willing, not because it is demanded, but because of their appreciation of a just and equitable obligation, to adjust to some extent the obligation to this splendid body of our citizenship which their patriotic service, at a large economic sacrifice, clearly places upon us.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I am not able, as I had hoped, to vote for this bill in the final form as presented by the majority party of the Senate with no means therein provided for payment. I should feel justified in voting for imposing taxes for the benefit of our young men to the extent required to cure or relieve them of injuries, to support them where disabled or incapable of self-support or in distress, to instruct them in self-support by vocational instruction, and to assist them in developing a home on the public domain. But to tax the American people by from $4,000,000,000 to $7,000,000,000 by the certificate plan, without any discrimination whatever, as set forth in the bill, and pay out huge sums for those not in want, not unemployed, and in fine health, does not seem to me wise or defensible. We should be provident with the family purse and use its resources for those in need and not spend our resources for those not in need, lest we then may be compelled to deny those in great need.

I do not feel justified as a temporary trustee of the people's legislative power to put this unnecessary tax on my countrymen without a mandate or instructions from them. My sympathies are with all of our young men desiring the bonus, and I should be glad to support their wishes if the people of Oklahoma through the legislature should express the wish of the State to that effect, but I can not consent to tax our impoverished and troubled people any more without knowing that they wish me to vote this unnecessary tax upon them. The organization of our veterans committed to this plan is said to consist of 25 per cent of our soldiers enlisted and to represent approximately 5 per cent of our people. The members of the Legion are divided in opinion as to its wisdom, and they have advised me both for and against the bill.

The leaders of the party in power have determined to pass the bill, and the passage of the bill is absolutely sure. My vote is not needed to pass it. The Republican Party has the mandate of the country. That party will take the credit for the act, and I prefer that the Republican Party shall take the undivided responsibility for the added taxes which will be required to pay the full liability assumed by the act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still in the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment, the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am anxious to reach a vote upon this measure. I merely wish to answer two or three suggestions that have been made to-day by those who oppose adjusted compensation for our soldiers.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] this morning paid a glowing tribute to the soldier who returned to this country from Europe sound in body and mind; he spoke of the great contribution which that soldier had made to civilization and to human liberty. I thought while he spoke of what the Master said on one occasion when he was upon the earth. He talked about the disabled, the sick, and the afflicted. He also had something to say of the able-bodied. The able-bodied get hungry; the better health one has the better his appetite usually is. The Master spoke of the disabled class when he said, "I was sick and ye visited me." He spoke of the other class when he said, "I was hungry and ye gave me to eat; I was naked and ye clothed me," and He had both in mind when He said, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me."

Now, I am going to show Senators how many different things the Republicans have done for others, although they have failed utterly to do anything for the soldier. Senators who have spoken against the pending adjusted compensation bill have gone into the Public Treasury and have taken money out in order to protect from insect pests vegetation of various kinds. They have voted to appropriate money to stamp out the foot-and-mouth disease in horses and cattle in the United States. Thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars have been devoted to that purpose and, indeed, the appropriations have gone into the millions. The same Senators have voted to appropriate money to eradicate cholera among hogs and to keep floods from overflowing crops, to keep fire from trees in our forests, but they refuse to vote a dollar in adjusted compensation to keep the wolf from the door of a needy soldier who offered his life for his country.

It is time, Mr. President, to indulge in some very plain talk. The first duty that we owe is to the soldier who saved the life of this Nation. As the Senators who are opposing this bill spoke I thought of occasions in which I participated during the World War when the soldiers were going off to a foreign land, some of them never to return. We had barbecues at farewell meetings and special tables were prepared; a throng numbering into the thousands were there; everybody stood back—they were compelled to stand back—until the soldiers came up and were served. Men and women delighted to honor the soldier; we were all expressing our pride in him and praising him then. The soldiers were first in our consideration—the hope of the Nation was in them. They went away to battle. We applauded as we saw them go, waving farewell from the deck of the ship moving out to sea; just as far as we could see Old Glory baring her beauty to the breeze we waved and wafted tender messages of good will and farewalls to them. We were thrilled with patriotic ardor and devotion to the brave boy who was going to the battle front to drive back the German Army.

When the soldier got over in France there were some other Americans there; profiteers were in the Old World looking around to see how and where they could make money. Not one of them wanted to get in front of the soldier over there; they all stood back and said, "After you, brave American soldier." The soldier went to the battle front; he was first in our consideration here; and when he arrived he was first on the battle front in France. When he came home, however, what place did he occupy?

Now I will bring up the procession and let Senators view them as they pass. Who was it that first gained admission through the door of a Republican Congress? The big income-tax payer, the man whose fortune was so swollen that he reveled in wealth and luxury; he came and demanded at the hands of Congress that he be excused from paying $90,000,000 that we had required him to pay into the Public Treasury to help win the war and discharge the war debt. A Republican Congress granted his request, and he went his way with $90,000,000.

Who next beat at the door of this Capitol? The excess-profit men, a group of greedy, avaricious profiteers, who took advantage of their Government in the hour of peril and speculated upon its misfortunes, who gouged the Government, took from it money to which they had no right, and enjoyed all sorts of profits for material which they knew the Government would never want, and the Republican Congress handed over to profiteers $450,000,000. That is the second group.

Who now stands at the door of Congress and knocks? Go look at and listen to them. They are certain war-material men; men in some instances who made a million articles when they knew the Government would not want more than 150,000; they are the men who took advantage of their Government and robbed it under the conditions which then prevailed. While the soldiers were camping on the battle fields of France they were camping near the United States Treasury. They went to the purse of the Government and they presented their bill and the Republican Congress paid them over $700,000,000 after the war was over. Then I said three groups have come and gone, and certainly the party in power will now consider the claims of the American soldier, but not so. They were first in our estimation and affections when they left, first on the battle front in France, but last in the consideration of the Republican Party at home. Three groups having come and been paid off and gone their way, I said, "now surely they will permit these boys to have a say and to have their claims adjusted," but they were shoved aside again.

Then I saw the deflationists come; I saw them controlling the money supply of the country; I saw the currency contracted, credits deflated; I saw Liberty bonds which had been bought by millions of people whose money to the extent of $10,000,000,000 went to help the Allies win the war sold for $80 on the $100. The deflationists feasted upon the people. Those who had bought Liberty bonds could not borrow money on them at the banks, and the Wall Street financiers again reveled on the profits which they made at the expense of the people. I saw the speculators and financiers of Wall Street depress the price of cotton in the South and feast upon the people whose boys had gone from that section, and rob those people of $1,250,000,000 on one cotton crop in 1920.

I saw the same men feast upon the grain producers and cattlemen of the West whence came many thousands of brave boys, and I saw them make billions more. When they had finished with that I said, "Surely now the cry of these long-neglected soldier boys will be heard"; but it was not yet to be.

Then I asked, "Who now beats at the door of the Republican Congress?" Again I saw the soldier boys standing there seeking a hearing, and again I saw them shoved aside by Republican leaders to make way for the tariff barons of the country. And now there has been written a tariff bill which will tax the American consumers $3,000,000,000, not a cent of which will go into the Public Treasury but will go into the pockets of the favored manufacturers of the country, the big tariff barons of the United States.

Mr. President, these five groups have been served by the Republican Congress. And at last, way down the list, comes the soldier; and yet Senators on the other side, some of whom represent great wealth, are saying that the soldier ought not now to be considered as we are about to consider him; that if we give him adjusted compensation, if we give him something with which to buy food, clothes, and something with which to provide shelter, it will take the halo from around his head. Well, Mr. President, the Master laid down another standard by which He judged the professions of men. When men came up to Him and said, "I love Thee, Master," He said something about lip service and mere talk, and He put this standard test to them: He said, "If you love me feed my sheep." Some Senators, who claim to honor the soldier, who delighted to see the halo around his head while he served, do not now want even to feed the soldier.

Mr. President, I can not understand the appreciation that some Senators have for the soldier who offered to die for his country. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] told us that the enactment of the pending bill would be setting a bad precedent; that we had never done such a thing before. Let me say to the Senator from South Dakota we never employed the selective draft system before to send soldiers out of this country to fight in a foreign land 3,000 miles away from home.

We have no precedent for that. The soldiers went—went without a murmur—and answered that call. They did not say: "Have you authority and precedent for this?" They said, "We will go," and they went; and now, when they come back and present you a little account showing that you owe them $1.25 a day for the time they were over there you do not want to pay it.

Mr. President, $30 a month is what they got for standing out there amid all that hell and horror of battle, and Senators refer to the fact that they got $30 a month. You could not pull some of the Senators who are opposing this adjusted compensation out on that battle front for $1,000,000 a minute. [Laughter in the galleries.] They say: "He got $30 a month." Yes; and what did you do with him as soon as he came home? Industry was paralyzed, business dead, and nothing for him to do. Did you keep him on the pay roll at $30 a month to buy food and clothes long enough to cover the amount he claims is now due him? No; you discharged him in a land ravaged and fed upon by the profiteering vultures of Wall Street. That is what you did to him. You left him to root, hog, or die; and many a one of them has killed himself, and left a note saying that he did it because he was hungry and could not find work to do. God pity such gratitude.

I recall another picture that I have referred to on this floor. When the Kaiser was back of his soldiers and they were driving that mighty destructive war machine toward Paris, and when the British Army was being beaten back and back nearer to the English Channel and the soldiers of France were being beaten back and back nearer to Paris, General Haig said to his men: "There is nothing to do but to die." What happened then? The Kaiser said: "I am going to win this war, and when I do I am going to assess against the United States Government $40,000,000,000 indemnity—$40,000,000,000 against the Government of the United States." And these boys of ours were sent over there just at that time. The French and British soldiers said: "Who is that coming in the distance?" Then an officer at the front said: "They are the American soldiers." "Thank God," they shouted. What happened when they got there? They drove against the German line, beat back the German Army, and saved our liberty and the liberty of the world. I am going to close this speech as I closed one here a few days ago. I voted to call these boys to the colors, and so help me God I will vote now to do simple justice to them.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, when the Senator from North Dakota was about to withdraw the bonus bill in July a year ago, I was one of those who protested and said that if the soldiers of this country had been as cowardly as were their friends in the Senate the victory would have been with the Germans and not with the Allies.

That is true. There has been a lack of resolution and a lack of courage on the part of those who went before the people, in press and on the hustings, proclaiming themselves to be the friends of the ex-soldier, saying that they wanted Congress to recognize their extraordinary services in some way fitting to the Republic and satisfactory to the soldiers.

For a year the tide of politics has run this way and that, has ebbed and flowed, and now at length we find this issue knocking at the door with such peremptory emphasis as takes no denial. It must be settled; it must be settled here; and it must be settled now, or the party in power will have to answer to the country for their failure to exercise their majority in the way that the soldiers and the people expect.

In an article in the New York Herald yesterday, which I am sure was meant to be friendly and not in any manner to misrepresent my position, I find this notice of the very brief talk which I made against the conversion of the soldier's recompense into a land speculation and other schemes which would pour millions and hundreds of millions of the tax money of the people into the channels of private speculation. Let me read. Quoting me, it says:

> The pending measure merely gives to them a promissory note. The plan of making loans on the certificates will prove a picnic to the strong banks. In this agitation over the land settlement of the option of the bonus bill I can see the specter of the land speculator and the fins of the land shark. I shall vote against this bonus bill.

Mr. President, nothing is more natural than that a reporter in the gallery hearing a speaker from the floor more or less distinctly, should run two subjects together and thereby unintentionally put the speaker in a position which he himself did not take. Here is the official RECORD, which represents me as having said:

> Another one of these bills proposes a sales tax on every article that can be mentioned, the tax to be repeated every time the article is sold. For no such bill could I vote.

I was referring to a bill providing for a sales tax, the scheme by which the soldier, his kindred and his friends, and the people at large were to be made to pay the bonus, which those who profited by the war should pay.

To show that the official record conforms exactly to what I stated, here are the original notes of the stenographer [exhibiting], showing exactly the same words.

My idea has been that while I favor a soldiers' bonus, and have done so from the first, and have cited from time to time the examples of the great men who had favored the principle of a bonus or recompense or reward to the soldier, I would not, even for a soldiers' bonus, burden the shoulders of the American taxpayer with an additional dollar of taxation for any purpose whatsoever. That has been my position heretofore. That is my position now.

Why do I take that position? Because, as everybody knows, the people are now taxed to the limit of endurance, taxed to the limit of toleration, taxed destructively, taxed until homes and farms are being sold by the hundreds and by the thousands all over this Union, East, West, and South. When a people is taxed to such an extent that the ordinary small farmer is sold out for his taxes, as was done in one county of a State like Georgia, and his family turned into the road, and that is done to the extent of 300 farms during the few months of this year which have already passed, then the man who will deny that our people are taxed to the limit of endurance shuts his eyes to the facts.

My colleagues will remember that when the sales tax proposition of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] came to a test vote upon the proposition of the eloquent Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], the Senator from Utah himself was one of the half dozen who voted for it.

I was one of those who voted against it, as I said in the RECORD I would, and I will vote against any measure which adds to the tax burdens of our people, no matter how disguised.

But, as my colleagues will remember, and the RECORD will show, I heartily supported the proposition of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to pay this bonus out of the interest due on the debt which foreign nations owe us, and to which, in turn, they owe their own existence. Had it not been for the help of the American dollar, as well as the American rifle, there might not now be a free country in Europe.

It is said here, and taken for granted, that England will pay and France will not, and when it is asked what we will do if France refuses to pay the answer is made, "We can not do anything." Why can we not? The time has been when we had a President who knew what to do to bring France to terms. If we had an Andrew Jackson in the White House, as I hope it may be revealed that we shall have, to meet such a crisis, he would say to France those words which would make her put on her thinking cap and find the wherewith with which to pay interest on her American debt. At this very moment she is maintaining in Palestine a larger army of conquest than the entire military forces of this Republic, and where she is making war upon an ally that gave her treasure and blood to rescue France during the World War, and it must cost France twice as much to maintain a soldier there as it costs us to maintain one here.

We are financing France's wars of conquest. Why not say to her in diplomatic language, "We can not further do that," and let it be understood that unless provisions are made to meet the interest on these past due debts which saved France from destruction, saved her from being trampled into the blood and mud of German conquest, we will seize every French ship within our waters, and if she chooses to make it a cause of war, dare her to the battle. That would bring her to her senses in short order.

Now, Mr. President, it is not altogether easy for a mere tyro like myself in senatorial service to say just how the bill does stand at the present time, but I thought it was due to myself, to my constituents, and perhaps to my colleagues to make my position perfectly clear. I am in favor of the principle of the bonus, and if the measure could be stripped of any feature which imposed additional taxation or transformed it into a private speculative affair, then I should vote for it, just as I said from the first I would do.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I have here an article written by Hugh K. Martin, adjutant of the American Legion, Department of Ohio, entitled "Adjusted compensation—Will it be wasted?" The article contains a survey made by Mr. Martin of the uses to which the soldiers of Ohio put the money which they received from the State when the State declared a bonus in favor of the soldiers. It is a very interesting article. It shows that the bulk of the money received was devoted to legitimate, useful, and helpful purposes. I ask to have the article inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION—WILL IT BE WASTED?

(By Hugh K. Martin, adjutant of the American Legion, Department of Ohio.)

Where are those "calamity howlers" now who have used the argument against national adjusted compensation that the money, if given, would be squandered by the ex-service men? Ohio veterans have furnished the answer in their use of State adjusted compensation.

For one motive or another many people have felt that the ex-service men lacked a sense of responsibility on financial matters. Some good folks with philanthropic pocketbooks have viewed the matter from the standpoint of the ex-service men and have feared that the placing of adjusted compensation into empty pockets would corrupt the ex-service men into riotous living. Some with misanthropic pocketbooks have viewed the matter from the standpoint of dollars and cents and have feared that the taking of adjusted compensation for the ex-service men out of the pockets of those who would have it to pay would be a waste of their money for the riotous living of the ex-service men. Others have combined these two motives. Some have been actuated by entirely different motives, but have covered them up by using this "riotous living" argument as a clever bit of sophistry.

They are all wrong, because the ex-service men, if they get their national adjusted compensation, will not squander it. The average ex-service man represents a crosscut of America. He is not a dependent in spirit but is independent. He is not a prodigal but is thrifty. If it were not so, our country would be doomed in the present generation, but America is safe. She is absolutely safe, because the 4,800,000 men and women who were in her service in the World War are absolutely dependable, industrious, and thrifty.

There is, of course, always the exceptional case. How many people attempt to use the exceptional case against the ex-service people as a class! You will find an employer occasionally who will not want to hire an ex-service man because an ex-service man whom he had previously employed turned out to be worthless on that particular job. You will occasionally find people on the street who will condemn the ex-service men as a class because they happened to encounter some ex-service man who was using his uniform to put across some fake proposition.

As frequently as possible some newspapers, in giving an account of some highway robbery, will have in their headlines that the crime was committed by an ex-service man. On one occasion a United States Senator told the writer that he was opposed to national adjusted compensation because from his experience he had observed that ex-service men of all wars needed guardians to take care of what little money came their way. When asked for proof he stated that he knew an ex-service man of a poor family who, upon his discharge from the Army, had used his final pay and his $60 bonus to purchase a second-hand Ford.

What an injustice has been done the ex-service men by such judgments! So many people are so quick to judge the ex-service men by such standards, and yet the same people would not think of judging other groups by the exception. How many times do you see in the headlines of the paper, "Republican arrested for highway robbery," or "Democrat tried for larceny"? How many people, when approached by a man with some fake scheme, find out what particular religious denomination he is a member of and then proceed to condemn every person of the same faith? When a man earns $2 a day at some menial labor and "shoots" his money on pay day in a crap game, how many people will say that all men should receive no wages for their labor?

No. Everyone knows better than that. Yet by some strange process of reasoning some people have singled out the ex-service men as the group of which the exception is the rule.

Fortunately facts and figures are now available which prove that the ex-service men as a class are dependable and thrifty. These figures were accumulated by a recent survey made through the 500 local posts of the American Legion in Ohio. This survey shows the uses to which the Ohio adjusted compensation is being put by Ohio ex-service men upon receipt of their $10 per month of service from the State of Ohio. The survey has been digested and reduced to percentages. Then the percentages have been used to determine the proportion of the original $25,000,000 authorized by Ohio, used by the ex-service men for each particular purpose. The percentages have also been used to determine the proportion of the 243,000 Ohio ex-service men who have used their Ohio adjusted compensation for each particular purpose. The following is the complete digest made on this basis:

Use.	Percentage.	Amount.	Number of ex-service people.
1. To purchase necessaries of life for self or dependents (including food, clothing, fuel, rent, medical service, insurance, etc.)	25.26	$6,315,000	61,382
2. To pay debts	23.65	5,912,500	57,470
3. To contribute to dependent members of family	3.76	940,000	9,137
4. To purchase household furniture and equipment	7.30	1,825,000	17,739
5. To purchase business or agricultural, office, or business equipment or live stock	3.35	837,500	8,141
6. To pay on mortgage	3.88	970,000	9,428
7. To make payment on real estate	6.95	1,737,500	16,889
8. To deposit in bank, building and loan, savings and trust company	15.64	3,910,000	38,005
9. To pay expense of education, including purchase of books	2.67	667,500	6,488
10. To invest in Government bonds or war savings certificates	1.28	320,000	3,110
11. To purchase motor vehicle for business use	.75	187,500	1,822
12. To purchase motor vehicle for pleasure purposes	.27	67,500	656
13. To pay expense of vacation required by poor health	.54	135,000	1,312
14. To pay expense of vacation not required by poor health, including several wedding trips	.15	37,500	364
15. To purchase recreational equipment	.16	40,000	389
16. To pay fee in fraternal order or club	1.32	330,000	3,208
17. To donate to organizations of ex-service people	1.07	267,500	2,600
18. To donate to a welfare organization or to charity	.89	222,500	2,163
19. To nvest in private corporation bonds	.26	65,000	632
20. To invest in preferred stock of private corporations	.27	67,500	656
21. To invest in common stock of private corporations for profit	.17	42,500	413
22. To invest in common stock of private corporations not for profit	.15	37,500	364
23. To purchase personal luxuries such as jewelry, etc., not included in above groups	.20	50,000	485
24. To spend for a good time	.06	15,000	146
Total	100	25,000,000	243,000

It will be noted from the above that the purchase of the necessaries of life leads with 25.26 per cent, with the payment of debts as second with 23.65 per cent. Deposits are third with 15.64 per cent. Contrast these with the six-hundredths of 1 per cent spent for a good time and it will be evident how much "riotous living" there has been. By adding the percentages for items Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 19, 20, and 21 it will be seen that 95.73 per cent of the Ohio ex-service men are using their adjusted compensation to meet necessary obligations or to make investments. Or to put it in another way, 95.73 per cent of the $25,000,000 is being used to meet necessary obligations or is being invested. Even then we are discarding the percentage which is being used for the expense of trips under item No. 14, many of which have been honeymoons, and we have also discarded the purchase of recreational equipment, the payment of fees in fraternal orders or clubs, the donations made to organizations of ex-service people which in many instances went to a fund for the building of American Legion homes in the community, and the investments not for profit in the building of fraternal homes which are included under item No. 22. Surely the purposes mentioned in this paragraph are commendable and would not indicate a lack of thrift, although they are not included in arriving at the 95.73 per cent which is being used for investments or to meet necessary obligations.

It is interesting to note that eighty-nine one-hundredths of 1 per cent, or $222,500, is being donated to welfare organizations or to charity. Such donations have come primarily from those ex-service people who drew the Ohio adjusted compensation but who felt that they did not need it. Contrast that with the fifty-three one-hundredths of 1 per cent used to purchase pleasure vehicles, personal luxuries, and to spend for a good time as covered by items Nos. 12, 23, and 24. It will be noted that about twice as much was used to help the other fellow who was in need of assistance as was spent for their own personal gratification in the purchase of pleasure cars, personal luxuries, and a good time. This certainly shows that the ex-service man is not the selfish individual as he has been sometimes pictured. Yet it can not be said that the ex-service men do not need adjusted compensation and would not use it to improve their conditions, because the total of those who gave it to welfare organizations or charity added to the total of those who purchased pleasure cars, personal luxuries, or for a good time makes the insignificant proportion of 1.42 per cent, leaving 98.58 per cent to use it for the other purposes.

The ex-service people of America have earned their national adjusted compensation; they have earned it by their toil and hardships in the service of their country. It is not right that they should be penalized by an economic handicap. The money is due them as an adjustment of their compensation which was inadequate. If the United States Government pays this just obligation every ex-service man will have as much right to do with it as he pleases as any other man has the right to do with his money on pay day. However, these statistics show that the American ex-service man is by nature a normal, thrifty American. Instead of dissipating the money on "riotous living" he will use it to purchase necessaries, to build homes, to make proper investments, and to put into circulation in legitimate trade. This would not only benefit the ex-service men but would benefit the country at large as well.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I know some Senators are anxious to have a vote so they can get away this afternoon on some mission which they have in contemplation. I further know the pending bill will be passed by the Senate by a large majority. Under these circumstances I will speak but briefly.

I feel, as a matter of justice and as a matter of expression of the gratitude of the Nation, that the Congress should enact some legislation giving substantial recognition for the services rendered by our loyal and patriotic soldiers. I have been among those who have since the close of the war stood for an adjusted compensation for our ex-service men. As has been stated in the course of the debate, the Government has pursued a policy since the war of making adjustments with all private interests, war contractors, munitions factories, railroads, and every concern that had business with the Government, saving them secure against all loss, even going to the extent of guaranteeing them profits in some instances. In taking over the railroads during the war the Government not only provided payment of expenses of operation with a reasonable rate of return but selected the three best years within the history of railroad operation and fixed the earning of the railroads at the rate of earnings which had been enjoyed by the railroads for the three years previous.

Following the war, when we came to turn back the railroads to private ownership, so solicitous for the interest of the transportation lines of the country was Congress that there was a guaranteed period of six months in which they were permitted to enjoy the same rate of return upon the stocks of the companies. Not only that, but we enacted a law authorizing them to increase rates and providing that they should have a guaranty of a certain rate of return. The whole policy of the Government in dealing with every interest except that of the soldier has been to make them secure in their finances.

So we find the condition confronting us where adjustment has been made with every interest—capital, contractors, and everyone who served the Government in any way during the war—except the soldier. The soldier alone is to suffer a sacrifice unless Congress sees fit to give him an adjusted compensation.

I think when we have already paid out about $3,000,000,000 in the way of adjusted compensation to those who were 3,000 miles from the zone of danger, that certainly if we are going to be actuated by any spirit of justice, if we are going to manifest a Nation's gratitude—and it should be a grateful Nation—with a proper spirit of gratefulness, we could do no less than try to adjust the compensation of the soldiers who served in the zone of danger, who represented the Nation upon the firing line instead of in the zone of safety, who served with a net income of only $7.50 to $10 per month, after deducting the allowances and charges which were made against their salary.

Believing in justice on the part of the Government, believing in the Nation expressing its gratitude not merely in empty platitudes and praise of the soldier but in a substantial way, I hope the bill will be passed. I had desired to speak more at length, but out of consideration for Senators desiring to vote immediately, and knowing we have the votes necessary to pass the bill, I refrain from speaking further.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. CURTIS demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ASHURST responded in the affirmative, Mr. BALL in the negative.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ASHURST. I withdraw my vote, if I may. Several Senators are on their feet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia will state the inquiry.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Will the Chair be good enough to state the exact status of the bill, and what is before us, whether it is the McCumber bill pure and simple, or whether it is the McCumber bill with amendments; and if so, what amendments, so that Senators may vote intelligently?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that under the rules of the Senate it is quite out of order for the Chair to attempt to analyze the bill or describe its provisions. The Secretary will proceed with the calling of the roll.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the roll call has begun. Two responses have been made and the suggestion of the absence of a quorum is not in order. The Secretary will proceed with the calling of the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded with the roll call.

Mr. BROUSSARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when Mr. CARAWAY's name was called). My colleague, the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] is necessarily absent. If he were present and not paired he would vote "yea."

Mr. BALL (when Mr. DU PONT's name was called). My colleague [Mr. DU PONT] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD]. If present, the Senator from Oklahoma would vote "yea" and my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. JOHNSON's name was called). I desire to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON]. The Senator from California, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts (when the name of Mr. JONES of New Mexico was called). I desire to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] is unavoidably absent. If present and not paired he would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. LADD's name was called). I was requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD]. Were he present and not paired he would vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who is out of the Chamber at present. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] who, were he present, would vote "yea." I vote "yea."

Mr. McCORMICK (when Mr. McKINLEY's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. McKINLEY], if present, would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY]. Both Senators are absent at the meeting of the International Parliamentary Union.

Mr. KEYES (when Mr. MOSES's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MOSES] is necessarily absent. If present and not paired he would vote "nay."

Mr. NEWBERRY (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], who, if present, would vote "yea." If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when Mr. NORBECK's name was called). I was requested to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK]. If present and not paired, that Senator would vote "yea." He is paired on this vote with my colleague [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. NORRIS's name was called). I was requested to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and that if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when Mr. OVERMAN's name was called). My colleague, the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], is detained from the Senate on account of illness. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If my colleague were present and not paired he would vote "yea."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when Mr. PEPPER's name was called). I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER]. If he were present and not paired, he would vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. That Senator if present would vote "yea." I have been unable to obtain a transfer of my pair and therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALDER. I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD]. Were he present and not paired, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. ELKINS] on account of illness. If he were present and not paired, he would vote "yea."

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the negative). May I inquire if the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. EDGE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma. I am informed that if he were present he would vote as I have voted, and therefore I permit my vote to stand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. HARRISON]. He is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. If both Senators were present, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay" and my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. If the Senator from California were present, he would vote "yea." I am unable to obtain a transfer of my pair with that Senator and therefore withdraw my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] is paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. If present, the junior Senator from Kentucky would vote "nay" and the senior Senator from Kentucky would vote "yea."

I was also requested to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. If present, the Senator from Maine would vote "nay" and the Senator from New Mexico would vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE]. If present and not paired, the Senator from Georgia would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 22, as follows:

YEAS—47.

Ashurst	Gooding	McKellar	Shortridge
Brandegee	Hale	McLean	Simmons
Broussard	Heflin	McNary	Smith
Bursum	Hitchcock	Nicholson	Stanfield
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Sutherland
Capper	Kellogg	Pittman	Townsend
Colt	Kendrick	Pomerene	Trammell
Culberson	La Follette	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Lenroot	Rawson	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Lodge	Reed, Mo.	Watson, Ind.
Fletcher	McCormick	Robinson	Willis
Gerry	McCumber	Sheppard

NAYS—22.

Ball	France	New	Swanson
Borah	Frelinghuysen	Phipps	Underwood
Calder	Glass	Reed, Pa.	Wadsworth
Dial	Keyes	Shields	Williams
Dillingham	Myers	Smoot
Edge	Nelson	Sterling

NOT VOTING—27.

Caraway	Harrison	Newberry	Poindexter
du Pont	Johnson	Norbeck	Spencer
Elkins	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Stanley
Ernst	King	Overman	Warren
Fernald	Ladd	Owen	Watson, Ga.
Harreld	McKinley	Page	Weller
Harris	Moses	Pepper

So the bill was passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and that the conferees be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. SIMMONS, and Mr. GERRY conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER subsequently said:

I have just been informed by the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] that he will be necessarily absent for some days, and I will therefore ask the Chair to substitute for the name of the Senator from Rhode Island the name of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] as one of the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to say that that is entirely satisfactory to the minority members of the committee.

UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12377.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Idaho that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12377.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the numerals used by the Senator from Idaho convey no information to me in regard to the subject matter of the bill for which he asks consideration. May I ask the Secretary to state the title of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill by title.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission to be known as the United States coal commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has just been reported.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

NATIONAL FORESTS IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask permission at this time to report from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 6750) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Wenatchee National Forest, State of Washington, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 900) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to receiving the report? The Chair hears none, and the report is received.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, that is a local bill, but it is rather important to the State of Washington. It permits the exchange, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, of certain lands that are definitely described in the bill. If the bill provokes any discussion at all, I shall not ask that it be considered, but otherwise I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Montana. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that this is purely a local bill in reference to the exchange of certain lands in the State of Washington?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It involves a local matter in the State of Washington. It provides for the exchange of some lands outside of the reserve and proposes to put other lands in the reserve, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LENROOT. I have no objection to the bill itself, but the proposed coal legislation is so important that I do not think it fair to permit the consideration of one local bill and then object to the consideration of other similar requests which may be made. Therefore, for the present, I shall object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

REGULATION OF ELECTION EXPENDITURES.

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. POMERENE and Mr. BRANDEGEE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BORAH. I will yield for a question.

Mr. POMERENE. I was going to ask the indulgence of the Senator from Idaho to the extent of permitting me to call up the bill (S. 3603) to regulate expenditures in connection with the nomination and election of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes. This is a measure about which I spoke to the Senator from Idaho the other day. I do not believe it will require a very long time to dispose of it, and I think the Senator from Idaho agrees with me that we ought to have some legislation upon the subject. In order that Senators may be advised, I wish to say that, as will be remembered, the Supreme Court held the provisions of the corrupt practices act so far as they applied to the primaries unconstitutional. The Attorney General later, some time perhaps in April, gave out an opinion to the effect that the law in so far as it applied to general elections would have no effect, because it was passed prior to the date of the amendment of the Constitution which authorized and required the election of Senators by popular vote. If he is correct in that view, then we have no Federal statute upon the subject.

After a number of conferences the subcommittee decided to eliminate everything from the bill except that part which applied to the general election of Senators, and the provisions of the bill now on the calendar in so far as they relate to the election of Senators are identically the same as those contained in the law now on the statute book. I feel that we would subject ourselves to criticism if there were not some legislation enacted at this time, just before the beginning of the campaign, and I hope the Senator from Idaho will see his way clear to yield for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there has been an objection made to the consideration of any other measure while the coal bill is pending. If I knew that the bill referred to by the Senator from Ohio could pass without debate, I would of course make no objection to it; but I do not presume it can.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, one member of the committee has suggested that he is going to offer an amendment. I do not think it is a matter that will require very much discussion; but of course I can give the Senator no assurance on that subject.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to go ahead for a time with the coal bill. I do not know of any reason why we should be very long with its consideration. Perhaps I can get it out of the Senator's way before the afternoon closes.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator from Idaho, the Senator referred to by the Senator from Ohio is myself. I have offered an amendment to the pending bill to regulate elections. That amendment I propose to discuss when the bill is brought before the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Then I will not yield at this time.

UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission to be known as the United States coal commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table and also incorporated in the RECORD. It need not be read at this time unless so desired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Amend the amendment reported by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] by inserting, after line 3, on page 12, the following:

"SEC. 2. All persons, firms, and corporations engaged in taking coal deposits from the ground or recovering coal from culm banks, slack piles, or other sources for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce shall be known as producers.

"All persons, firms, and corporations engaged in buying and selling in interstate or foreign commerce coal in carload or greater-than-carload lots shall be known as wholesalers.

"All producers shall on the 1st and 15th days of each calendar month transmit by mail to the Department of Commerce of the United States a sworn statement showing the following facts:

"First. The amount of coal by them produced for the 15 days preceding the issuance of said statement.

"Second. The price per ton for the various grades received by them at the mine.

"Third. The amount of such coal shipped direct to retail distributors and the amount to the wholesale dealers and the amount sold directly to consumers together with the prices in each instance received.

"Fourth. The percentage the production bears to the capacity production of the mine as rated by the carriers serving the mine.

"Fifth. The causes for failure to operate the mine at full production capacity and the percentage of reduction due to each of the several causes assigned.

"The wholesalers of coal shall on the 1st and 15th days of each calendar month transmit by mail to the Department of Commerce of the United States a sworn statement showing the following facts:

"First. The amount of coal by them purchased and the prices paid for the various grades; the amount of coal by them sold to retailers and the prices received for the various grades; the amount of coal by them sold directly to consumers and the prices received for the various grades.

"Second. The statement shall disclose whether the coal so shipped in interstate or foreign commerce was contract coal or spot coal, and, if contract coal, the date the contract was entered into.

"The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to require such statements to be made upon forms designated by him, and he may require such additional information as may be necessary to carry out fully the purposes of this section.

"The Secretary of Commerce shall give publicity to the facts disclosed by such statements in such form as will most adequately advise the public of the prices paid at the mine and the prices charged by the wholesalers. He shall furnish to any consumer upon request a copy of said statements or of any part thereof.

"Failure or refusal by any producer or wholesaler to prepare and transmit a true statement as herein required shall be unlawful. And such failure or refusal as the same applies to each semimonthly statement above described, shall be deemed a separate offense, and the person, firm, or corporation so failing or refusing shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $500 for each offense, to be recovered in civil action brought by the United States."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I desire to take a few moments of the Senate's time to discuss the pending bill.

The coal commission bill under consideration, introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], rouses in me a peculiar and vital interest. I am heartily in favor of this measure; but I can not allow this occasion to pass without referring to some other proposals which have been before this body in the last three years.

It may not be inappropriate at this time to remind the Senate that since 1919 legislation has been before this body designed to prevent the occurrence of the deplorable situation which now confronts the Nation, and against which eleventh-hour relief is now sought.

In the summer following the armistice my attention was drawn to an impending shortage of coal, with consequent exorbitant prices to the consumer. A subcommittee was appointed by the Interstate Commerce Committee to report upon the situation. After hearings, at which every interest among employers, mine workers, and the consuming public was allowed to present its case, the committee drafted two measures designed to stabilize the industry and to overcome the intermittent operation of the mines. I was not then in favor of regulation. I am not now in favor of regulation, except during the present emergency.

The two measures I proposed at that time contained no hint of regulation. The first was to create the office of coal commissioner, whose duty it should be to ascertain and to publish currently the facts about the industry. The second provided for seasonal freight rates on coal, designed to speed up the movement of coal during the slack summer months, and thereby to steady employment, relieve the burden on the railroads during the winter, and protect the consumer by encouraging storage against emergencies.

The Sixty-sixth Congress expired before action could be taken on these bills; but at the opening of the next Congress I again raised the subject before the Interstate Commerce Committee. The original bills were reconsidered, and certain changes made to meet the criticisms which an exhaustive hearing had developed. In the form reported to the Senate the bills provided for:

1. Seasonal freight rates on coal; and
2. A permanent fact-finding agency, under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce.

Neither of these measures involved the slightest hint of regulation. The fact finding bill was designed solely to ascertain and to publish for all the world to see the very facts about wages, employment, living costs, supply, demand, and prices that are covered at this belated hour by the bill before us.

Had these bills been passed at the time they were presented, I am convinced that the present crisis in the coal industry could have been averted. The application of the seasonal rates plan in the summer of 1921 would have mitigated the long siege of unemployment which left the miners in many districts with only starvation earnings in spite of the high union wage scale. More important, the passage of the fact finding bill would have provided a basis of fact upon which the merits of the controversy could have been settled by peaceful negotiations, instead of the welter of baseless claims and counterclaims that have been thrust upon the public.

I may be pardoned, Mr. President, for quoting from a speech I made before the Senate at that time. I then said (December 22, 1921, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 688):

Mr. President, the present wage contracts in the union fields expire on March 31, 1922. On that day the wages to be paid over half a million men come up for settlement. It is clear that we are approaching a big labor readjustment, an adjustment fraught with possibilities of prolonged industrial upheaval. Yet we are doing practically nothing to forestall a break. We have not taken one step to alleviate the condition of the miners. Instead, we have let the situation drift until the mine workers have endured the longest siege of unemployment since the panic of 1893. * * *

England liquidated her war-time miners' wage scale only after a three months' strike which paralyzed all her industries and dealt her export trade a staggering blow. Our liquidation remains ahead of us. I am not predicting a strike. I hope and trust that some honorable settlement may be worked out which will safeguard the interests of the workers, the operators, and the public. But I submit that with no real information about the issues at stake—about wages, about cost, about profits, about prices, about supply and demand—we, the public, are in the worst possible state to meet the issue. We are in the dark. No, more than that, we are being led around in a game of blindman's buff by some merry gentlemen who have picked our pockets before, but who now, through their Washington lobby, ask us to trust ourselves to them.

Those words, spoken last December, four months before the strike broke, are as true to-day as they were then. We are still facing a big labor readjustment. We have settled none of the issues raised by the last strike. We are drifting to-day, as we were drifting then. The legislation before us now is imperatively needed to meet the existing emergency, and to prepare for another crisis next spring.

The opposition to the very simple and practical legislation proposed more than a year ago came from a lobby of the coal interests. It was the lobby that has opposed all legislation in the House or Senate, the same lobby that will probably oppose these bills now. The organs of the producers and of the wholesale and retail trade attacked the proposals with a flood of propaganda. Senators will recall the daily bombardment from the American Wholesale Coal Association, the National Coal Association, the National Retail Coal Merchants' Association, and the Association of Anthracite Operators. These agencies had a consistent record for blocking all attempts of the Government to publish the facts about their industry. Their first move was the injunction against the Federal Trade Commission in the Maynard Coal case. By that injunction, the merits of which have never yet been passed on by the Supreme Court, the Government was prevented from ascertaining the cost of producing coal. By that injunction the coal lobby effectively tied the Government's hands and poked out its eyes.

The same lobby then came forward to defeat the bills proposed by the Interstate Commerce Committee in 1921. In defense of them, I said that they were intended to throw the light of publicity on a darkened industry, an industry that did not know itself, and could not keep its own house in order. I asked, not for regulation, but for light; but the coal lobby objected to the light. They wanted the people to continue to walk in darkness.

The coal industry drifted from a long siege of unemployment into a period of jockeying for position in a wage controversy and from that drifted into the strike. Concerning the issues in that strike, concerning the ability of the country to meet it, the Nation was in darkness. When the Senate asked the Secretary of Commerce last June for so simple a fact as the quantity of coal then in storage, he could answer only with a vague estimate. The administration has indeed handled the situation with great patience and forbearance, and the Secretary of Commerce has been ingenious and untiring in devising means to distribute coal with the slender powers the Government had at hand. But throughout all of these anxious months we have been walking in darkness. We do not to-day know the facts about nonunion wages and earnings. We are distributing coal, but we do not know what are the stocks of consumers, how low the reserve has fallen. We face privation for lack of anthracite, and the latest published information on the stocks of anthracite in the storage yards of the producers is dated November, 1921, nearly 10 months ago. To fix fair prices we have had to rely on the report of the Garfield engineers, made in 1918, for since then there have been no comprehensive studies of the cost of production except those obtained and issued by the operators themselves.

I have dwelt upon this history, not with any desire to say "I told you so," but to show that the coal lobby will fight these bills just as it has fought all the others. They will seek to emasculate what they can not openly defeat, and to postpone what they can not vote down.

The fact finding bill they dare not publicly oppose. The demand for an investigation will not be denied. It is imperative, to prevent a repetition of the strike next spring, that the Nation have the facts and all the facts. I shall support the bill, but it is not enough to do the job once. The information must be available currently and promptly. We must have a permanent agency responsible to a Cabinet officer whose findings shall be available not only in times of crises but at all times. I expect to see the commission give first place among its findings to a recommendation for such a continuing centralized compulsory fact-finding agency.

There is one feature of the coal commission bill (Senate bill No. 3865, introduced by the Senator from Idaho) which I think needs strengthening. The appropriation of $100,000 is entirely too small to insure that the facts demanded by the bill can be unearthed. The balance remaining after the salaries of the five commissioners have been paid is too small to cover the proposed investigation of cost profits, standards of living, and wages and earnings in so vast an industry as coal. The sum mentioned in the House bill—$300,000—is the minimum on which a worth-while investigation can be made. A safer figure would be $500,000. Nothing will so surely defeat the purpose of the administration as to cut the appropriation to the limit proposed. Nothing else would so play into the hands of the coal lobby.

Mr. BORAH. That is a proposition which can be taken care of at any time if the commission should be short of funds. One of the easiest things in the world to do is to grant more funds.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator; but I do not believe that this commission should be hampered. I am so anxious that all the facts should be ascertained in regard to this great question that I do not want the appropriation to be limited or their efforts to be limited.

I am informed the coal interests will directly oppose the administration's plan to distribute coal this winter. Their answer is that the "crisis is over and can never happen again." Mr. President, that answer has a strangely familiar sound. It is the same one made by the lobby before the Select Committee on Reconstruction and the Committee on Manufactures. It is the same one made before the Committee on Interstate Commerce last year, and it has been repeated on the floor of the Senate.

The gentlemen who are giving this advice are the same advisers who guaranteed last spring that the nonunion mines would produce 6,000,000 tons a week. As a matter of fact, after the strike had lasted 19 weeks the report of the Geological Survey showed that they were producing 4,500,000 tons a week. They are the same gentlemen who last May predicted, through the vice president of their national association, that the "coal strike would be smashed flat by July 1." They are the same gentlemen who promised us that if only given police protection the striking miners would go back to work. That promise also was vain. After a month's trial it was clear that the plan of mining under police protection was a failure. Why, Mr. President, the terms finally signed under the Cleveland agreement are an absolute reversal of all these boasts and promises. If final proof were needed that the coal operators can not deliver under their promises, it is the news in this morning's papers that the Pittsburgh Coal Co., which swore it would never again consent to the check off, has now signed the Cleveland agreement, check off and all.

Mr. President, the crisis is not over, notwithstanding the statements of the operators. True, the majority of the bituminous mines are now ready to produce, but the statistics of the Geological Survey show that the output is 30,000,000 tons behind even the year of depression, 1921. And it is 150,000,000 tons behind a normal year. To make up that handicap is a difficult task under the best of circumstances, but under the present condition of the railroads it is difficult indeed. I am informed that present weekly requirements for consumption of bituminous coal are 8,500,000 tons. Normal requirements of anthracite at this season are 1,500,000 tons. In addition, the urgent needs of the Northwest require a million tons weekly for shipment up the Lakes. Further, the production of anthracite is so far delayed that should the anthracite mines resume to-morrow it will be necessary to produce an extra million tons of bituminous coal weekly to meet the deficit in household fuel. But even that is not enough. Our industries, our public utilities, our railroads have such scanty stocks of coal as will never suffice to pass through the winter season. They require another million tons weekly to build up a reserve against the severities of winter. All told, Mr. President, we require from twelve to thirteen million tons of coal a week, and that is more than our railroads can be expected to handle in their present condition.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is probably more than they could handle if they were at normal peak conditions, is it not?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Undoubtedly.

Not until the roads have proved that they can transport an average of 12,000,000 tons of coal weekly, including anthracite, and keep it up for months at a time will the need of a control of distribution be past.

The Senate is proposing seizing the anthracite mines. I think the President should be authorized to seize them, but even such drastic action will not prevent a shortage of domestic fuel in the anthracite-consuming territory.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If the railroads are unable to haul the coal, what value would there be in seizing the mines? That would not give us any more cars.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The value in seizing the mines would be that the mines would then be under Government authority and control, and the coal could be properly distributed and allocated for the prior needs of public utilities and household. The distribution at the present time is in control of the operators.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But I am speaking about the proposition of the cars. It would not increase railroad facilities any.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not think the seizure of the mines would increase the railroad facilities. I think that is a problem that is very important.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It is quite a different one.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Senator speaks about seizing the mines. Does the Senator contemplate any seizure other than for purposes of the emergency?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Only for relief in the temporary emergency. I am opposed entirely to nationalization and Government ownership. But we are facing an emergency; the people may starve and freeze, and I think it is the duty of the Government to care for the people first. The coal year is nearly half gone and the production of anthracite is from thirty to forty million tons behind.

That deficit can never be made up by the anthracite mines because it requires steady operation of those mines the year round to meet the normal demands. There is no escaping the fact, Mr. President, that millions of American families in the New England, Middle Atlantic, and Northwestern States will have to burn run-of-mine bituminous coal this winter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, is the Senator from New Jersey of the opinion that the Government can handle the intricacies of coal mining better than those who have been in the business for a lifetime?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think that question ought to be changed. Could the Government do any worse than is being done now?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That is the answer I intended to make. They are not producing coal, and an emergency is facing us, and I know that something must be done to meet the emergency when the operators fail.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Some of the States have been producing a great deal of coal, among them my own, during this emergency, and my State is now producing a great deal of coal; and, the Senator from Michigan to the contrary notwithstanding, it is being done efficiently. They are constantly producing coal, and it is being done much more efficiently than the Government could produce coal. I ask the Senator from New Jersey whether he actually thinks that the Government could do this work more efficiently than private enterprise?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not think the operators, unless they allow the Government to know the facts, unless the operators work in conjunction with the Government, can produce coal sufficient for the country's needs. Twelve months ago it was said that there would never be a shortage of coal, that there would be an ample supply, and all over the eastern country to-day the bins are empty. The operators' predictions have never been verified by the facts.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to ask the Senator another question. Was it not stated, rather, that there would not be a shortage of coal provided the transportation problem were met properly?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, last summer there were a hundred thousand idle cars, and the Senator from West Virginia himself opposed the bills I brought up in the Senate providing for seasonal freight rates to induce the purchase of coal in the summertime, to induce the buying of coal.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The low prices which prevailed during the past spring did not induce the purchase of coal.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; because the high freight rates prevented it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The freight rates are high upon all classes of commodities, and the matter suggested by the Senator as to the regional seasonal rate of freight would not have affected the matter at all. The prices of coal went down at the mines to $1.50 or less per ton, and yet those who are now clamoring for coal would not buy coal. You can not compel people to buy something when they do not want it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, that is perfectly true——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And the Government can not.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The freight rates were so high that the people were waiting for a reduction in freight rates before buying their coal, and I proposed a reduction of 75 cents a ton in the freight rates in order to stimulate the purchasing of coal. I know of one concern in the West that was ready immediately to order 15,000 tons of coal if they could get a reduction in freight rates, and there were others throughout the country. It is the opinion of those who have studied this question that that would have stimulated the buying of coal, it would have stimulated the storage of coal, and, in a large measure, would have prevented the shortage of coal stocks which exists at the present time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I have a couple of letters here which throw some light upon this proposition which I would like to read. One is dated July 18, 1922, a letter addressed to the Kanawha Valley Coal Co., Charleston, W. Va., and reads:

GENTLEMEN: We have your telegram of July 17 offering mine run on the basis of $6.50, mines.

The only comment we have to make is that it is profiteering like this that will be responsible, if anything ever does do it, for the Government taking over the coal mines. There is no real reason why coal should sell at $6.50 to-day, when it was selling for somewhere about one-third that price a few months ago. I had thought that the country had had enough of Government ownership during the operation of the railroads; I was sure that I had had. But if coal mining is a wildcat industry in the hands of people whose only object is to get all they can, or if there are enough of this class in the business so that the real business men can not control it, the sooner the Government takes it over the better. Thank God we have coal enough to last us some months yet.

That was signed by the secretary of one of the great educational institutions of the country. To that this response was made, addressed to the secretary of this institution, as follows:

KANAWHA VALLEY COAL CO.,
Charleston, W. V., August 9, 1922.

DEAR SIR: Referring further to your letter of July 18 in connection with our telegram of the 17th.

We note with interest your comments on the coal situation. Possibly you do not understand the game. Folks usually "make hay while the sun shines."

When again in the market, we shall be glad to hear from you.

Yours very truly,

KANAWHA VALLEY COAL CO.,
By O. J. COX, President.

Coal is cash.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, when Mr. Hoover, in cooperation with the operators of the country generally, fixed a price of $3.50, as I recall, the Senator from Idaho made the point that that was an exorbitant price.

Mr. BORAH. That was exorbitant and this is outrageous and unconscionable.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Why is it that they have broken that gentlemen's agreement and to-day refuse to furnish coal at this price? Because they want to take advantage of a scarcity in the market and mulct the public; that is the reason.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator that one of the reasons is that many of the coal operators have actually been losing money, and they, like other men, desire to get on the right side of the ledger some time.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Losing money at $3.50 a ton, when they claimed to be making money at $2.10?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Some of these mines have been idle for months at a time, even when they were supposedly running. They could not get cars to ship their product; but the overhead expense goes on. A great deal of the criticism from this Chamber and elsewhere in the country arises from a misunderstanding in regard to the fundamental questions affecting this industry.

I know that the Senator from New Jersey and other Senators have no desire to be unfair to the coal operators or to any other industry, but it is a fact that the men who operate the mines are subjected to heavy drains upon their resources. There is no guaranty made to them that when prices are low they shall be protected from loss, and yet when they have an opportunity to get sufficient to pay back some of their losses there is at once a cry on the part of those who are purchasing the coal that the price should be regulated.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia whether he believes that the coal operators should make the public pay this fall all the loss occasioned to them by the strike?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator answer the question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the coal operators are entitled to a fair return upon their investment——

Mr. LENROOT. From when?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And the industry must bear its losses, but they should be permitted to get a fair price for their coal and they must at some time—I will not say within what limit of time—be allowed to recoup themselves for the losses they have sustained.

Mr. LENROOT. Losses occasioned by the strike?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That opens up a very wide question as to who is responsible for the strike and whether that loss is a fair charge upon the industry or not. It opens up a great question. Those who have their money in the business and suffer serious losses either have to get it back or go broke and that is all there is to it. If the Senator from Wisconsin were in that business he would feel that he ought to be permitted to get back those losses.

Mr. LENROOT. If the operators are to be permitted to make the public pay all the losses of the strike, there is no incentive whatever upon the operators to keep continuous production, but they can to the fullest extent attempt to break all the labor unions; and if they fail or if they succeed, under the Senator's idea the public would pay the bill.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to my colleague, but I do not want to lose the floor.

Mr. EDGE. If the situation is so misunderstood as the Senator from West Virginia would imply, and the coal operators are in such dire circumstances, then why the Senator's opposition to a fact-finding commission? It seems to me it would be the very best thing that could happen to have such a commission.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say for the Senator's information that I am making no opposition to a fact-finding commission. I am perfectly willing to have the bill passed and I expect to vote for it. Nor do I know of a single coal operator anywhere who is opposed to it. I think there are a great many things in the bill that are pure bunk, so far as any definite results are concerned that may be obtained later on, but I am willing to have it tried out.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Then the Senator from West Virginia has changed his mind, because 13 months ago he opposed a similar bill which I introduced providing for the ascertainment by the Secretary of Commerce of these very facts, which would have assisted greatly in settling the strike and in continuing the production of coal had it been enacted into law at that time.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. In reply to the Senator from West Virginia, it is true that Mr. Hoover testified that he got a voluntary agreement out of the coal operators in the so-called nonunion field of a price varying from $2.50 to $3.50 a ton; but at the same time he testified that there were fully 30 per cent of the operators in those districts who did not agree to it and never would agree to it, and have been selling coal at from $10 to $12 or $15 a ton.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, it remains to be seen whether the roads can transport that added burden. To produce the 20,000,000 tons of bituminous which must be substituted, move it to the point of consumption, distribute it to the householders, and teach them how to use a fuel they have never tried before in furnaces designed for an entirely different coal will tax the resources of the Government to the utmost.

The people of the South and the far West do not know what we are facing in the Northeast and in the lake dock States. The South and the far West do not know there has been a coal strike.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. The Senator is quite wrong about the South not knowing about the coal-strike situation. Just a day or two ago I received a telegram from the president of the largest mill under one roof in the world, down in my State, which was compelled to shut down for lack of coal and 4,000 people were thrown out of employment. Other mills have shut down in the last day or two. We can not get coal even for our cotton-seed-oil mills. They have a tremendous complaint against the Government for interfering and taking our coal off to other sections of the country.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Then this catastrophe has been more widespread than I thought, but in the South the climate is mild and they do not need as much coal. Their mines have been at work. But to the people of Minnesota, Wisconsin, and the Dakotas this winter may be one of tragic suffering. According to the Geological Survey the movement of bituminous coal up the Lakes is already 5,500,000 tons behind the year 1920, when a drastic priority order had to be invoked to help them.

No anthracite at all has gone up the Lakes. Stocks of soft coal on the Lake Superior docks to-day are only 300,000 tons, against 5,500,000 a year ago.

The representative of the Northwest governors now in this city appealing for relief is simply speaking the truth when he says that unless something is done to get them coal conditions in the Northwest this winter will resemble Soviet Russia.

Neither do the people of the South and far West have any conception of what a shortage of anthracite means in our large cities of the Atlantic seaboard. After the great anthracite strike of 1902 we had acute inconvenience and even suffering. The price of substitutes rose to unjust and oppressive levels. Connellsville coke sold for a time at $10 and $15 per ton f. o. b. ovens, equivalent to $20 or $30 nowadays. Individual consumers in New York City paid $32 per ton for anthracite.

But the shortage created by the present strike is more acute than it was in 1902, for then the mines could supply the year's demand by working 200 days. Now they have to work 270 days. The production in 1902 was only 40 per cent below the normal for those times. The shortage this year will be 50 per cent below normal. Moreover, at that time there was no strike in the bituminous mines and soft coal and coke were available in abundance. To-day we are short 40,000,000 tons of bituminous alone.

In 1902 the railroads were in good condition, yet they had trouble in handling the extra tonnage of bituminous coal. To-day our railroads are in deplorable condition and getting worse every day.

The people of New England, New York, and New Jersey are the ones who will suffer the most from the shortage of anthracite. If they thought the high prices charged them were just and fair, they might accept the situation cheerfully. But the people of these States have a suspicion that the prices are not just and fair. They are not satisfied with the operators' explanation that the only way to bring down the price of anthracite is to cut wages. They believe there is room for a cut in the profits of the anthracite combination.

A year ago, in a speech before the Senate, I quoted some of the extraordinary dividends paid by the anthracite companies. The statements I then made have never been denied. I am going to repeat them now (December 22, 1921, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 689):

> We do know that the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. made profits of $6,672,000 in 1920 against $2,464,000 in 1916, an increase of 170 per cent. We know that the Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Co., having for the last 10 years or more paid 13 per cent regularly, on March 5, 1921, paid a cash dividend of 150 per cent. We know that not long after the same company paid another cash dividend of $35 on its stock of $50, or 70 per cent. In other words, this company in one year has paid 220 per cent. We know that the Lehigh Valley Coal Sales Co. paid 10 per cent each year from 1913 to 1916. In addition, it (the Lehigh Valley Coal Sales Co.) issued a stock allotment of 25 per cent in 1914. In 1917 it paid a dividend of 13 per cent and issued a stock allotment of 30 per cent. In 1916 it paid 16 per cent and an extra dividend of 10 per cent in Liberty bonds. In 1919 it paid 16 per cent and an extra dividend of 5 per cent in Liberty bonds. In 1920 it paid 16 per cent.
>
> The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Coal Co. paid 10 per cent annually from its inauguration in 1909 until 1912. In 1913 it paid 30 per cent, and in 1914, 20 per cent. In 1915 it paid 60 per cent. In 1916 it paid 20 per cent. In 1917 it paid 100 per cent, 60 per cent in cash and 40 per cent in Liberty bonds and notes of Great Britain. In 1918 it paid 40 per cent, the 30 per cent extra being in Liberty bonds. In 1919 it paid 10 per cent and in 1920 10 per cent cash and a stock dividend of 75 per cent.
>
> Now, these fabulous dividends paid by the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Coal Co. represented profits on only one branch of the business, the selling of the coal. During the same years the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. was making another enormous profit out of the mining and transportation of the coal. These figures are taken from Poor's Manual of Railroads for 1921, page 426. Now, listen: This anthracite carrier paid 20 per cent in 1908. In 1909 it paid 85 per cent. In 1910 it paid 20 per cent. In 1911 it paid 55 per cent. From 1912 to 1916 it paid each year 20 per cent. In 1917 it paid 22½ per cent. In 1918 it paid 20 per cent, and the same in 1919 and 1920. In 1921 it has already paid 15 per cent, and on August 20, 1921, the shareholders received a stock dividend of 100 per cent.

Considering these dividends, we need not be alarmed as to the ability of the anthracite producers and carriers to look out for themselves. For five months we have waited for them to compose their differences with their men. We have been patient to the point where the public health is in danger. It is time now to think of the needs of the people who use the coal, the people who will be lucky if they get half their usual supply at twice the usual price. If keeping people from freezing means taking the mines, then take the mines. If it means seizing and operating railroads, then we will have to take the railroads.

The very least we can do is to set up machinery to distribute the coal produced and to restrain profiteering. Under the circumstances, with distress and suffering in the Northwest and the Northeast almost a certainty, not to make such provision is criminal negligence.

We have before us workable plans for producing coal, for controlling the movement of coal, and preventing a runaway market. If the coal lobby succeeds in defeating these bills, as it has all others presented since the armistice, the suffering of the people next winter will raise a cry for regulation so strong as to shake their industry to the foundations and to bring about permanent supervision by the Federal Government.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I do not desire to make a reply to what the Senator from New Jersey has said, because I am for his bill. I think that I can not with propriety remain silent in my place, however, in view of the statement that he last made, or, at any rate, the implication contained therein. We produce some coal in the State of Ohio, and, so far as I know, there is not any coal lobby that is opposing the pending bill. I think I should have heard about it if there had been such a lobby, because I know some of the coal people. I know the coal miners and the coal operators of the State of Ohio. Incidentally I wish to say that it was the miners and operators of the State of Ohio who met at Cleveland and took the lead in bringing to an end the disastrous coal strike, and they are the same people who settled the strike in 1915.

What I wish to get to the Senator from New Jersey is this: I have in my office telegrams—not 1 nor 5, but at least 25—from producers of coal in the State of Ohio. They do not need to be threatened by the Senator from New Jersey or by any officer of the Government. They are at work; they are producing coal; the coal is piled at the mouth of the mines; but the trouble is they can not get it hauled.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to get this to the Senator from Ohio: Fourteen months ago when a bill containing the very provisions which are embraced in the pending bill was before the Senate, those same coal operators were down here opposing that bill through the National Coal Association and their hired officers.

I wish to ask further, Does the Senator assure the Senate that they will not oppose legislation authorizing an embargo against those who profiteer, so that the people in my section of the country who consume coal but who do not produce it will be protected against profiteering?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from New Jersey assumes a good many things in what he imputes to the coal miners and the coal operators of the State of Ohio. In the first place, they were not down here 14 months ago. I have some recollection of the Senator's bills. One of them I opposed, and my reasons for doing so are a matter of record. I stand by those reasons, because, as the Senator's bill was then framed, I think it would have defeated the very purposes he desired to accomplish. It would have made it possible for those who bought coal in large quantities in the summer time to secure better and reduced rates, but the small householder who desired to buy two or three bushels in the wintertime would have had to pay an increased rate, thus defeating the very purpose which the Senator then had in view and which he now has in view. That is why I then voted against the Senator's bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIS. I wish to finish this statement. I am not the spokesman here for the miners or for the operators, but I will say to the Senator from New Jersey—and I am saying it in perfect good faith and as a friend of his bill—that the difficulty with the coal situation is not that we are not producing coal in Ohio, for, as I said a moment ago, our miners and operators took the lead in resuming the production of coal and have been at work for days; but my office is swamped with telegrams from miners and operators who are begging for means of transportation. It is not necessary to hold a club over those men in order to get them to work. They are working and mining coal; and they are trying to get means to haul it to market. Transportation facilities are what we now need.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the junior Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me remind my colleague that one of the serious objections to the proposed legislation to which he has referred was this: It provided for seasonal coal rates; it would have given a lower rate to the operators during the summer months when nearly all of the coal would go up the Great Lakes to the Northwest. We, of course, are glad to have the people of the Northwest secure the best rates they can get, but if there were to be lower rates during the summer months there would have to be correspondingly higher rates during the winter months, and the Ohio people would have had to pay those increased rates.

Mr. WILLIS. My colleague is exactly accurate in that statement; that is the exact situation. That is why we opposed the bill of the Senator from New Jersey 14 months ago.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio is referring to an entirely different bill from the one which I mentioned. He is referring to the seasonal freight-rate bill. That could have been adjusted so as to have taken care of Ohio's needs and would have greatly relieved the situation. I spoke of the fact-finding commission bill, placing in the Department of Commerce certain powers to ascertain facts, such as the cost of distribution, the cost of production and supplying consumers' needs, and other matters which it is necessary to ascertain in order to enable the Government to act. The Senator opposed that measure and the Senator's constituents, the coal operators of Ohio, who are members of the National Coal Association, opposed it. I simply called attention to the fact that now he and the operators in his State are favoring a bill which was proposed by me 14 months ago.

I wish further to ask the Senator if the operators in his State—and he seems to speak for them—are in favor of legislation empowering the Interstate Commerce Commission to embargo coal in cases where the operators or the retailers or the wholesalers are profiteering? Is he in favor of such legislation?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, no miner and no operator in Ohio has communicated with me upon that point. While I am on my feet I wish to say touching the Senator's fact-finding bill that our view in Ohio is not that we need information as to the number of bushels of coal that may have been dug out in a certain township, but the point I am making is that the mines having opened—and they are open and are now at work and the operators are ready to deliver coal; it is piled up at the mouth of the mines—the need is transportation. We are not going to benefit the situation any by holding up these people to execration and abuse. I speak not for the miners or the operators or anybody else, but in the name of fairness. We are producing coal in Ohio, and we welcome any opportunity to haul it out and sell it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator is aware of the fact that except in the nonunion districts practically no bituminous coal has been produced since the 1st of April?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. And the nonunion districts have not been able to produce within three or four million tons a month, or perhaps five million tons a month, of the normal needs of the country. The coal stocks of the country are exhausted. The coal docks of Lake Superior are swept clean; there is practically no coal there, and there are only three months left in which to move it. In many other sections of the country the conditions are similar. If the railroads could carry coal at peak capacity they could not relieve the entire situation between now and the close of navigation; it would not be possible. The Senator says the need is for transportation, but we have not railroad facilities to transport in three months what it is customary to transport in six months.

Mr. WILLIS. What is the Senator's question, then?

Mr. KELLOGG. The question is, Will not the price run away just as much if there is want of transportation as if there is want of coal?

Mr. WILLIS. Possibly so; but the Senator should not understand me as defending the lack of transportation any more than I defend the lack of coal. I realize the difficulties of the situation and deplore the strike. I rose, however, merely to put the shoe on the right foot. There is in the country too much discussion aimed at the coal miners and the coal operators. What I am trying to say is that in Ohio at least they are now producing coal, and the trouble is the lack of means of transportation. I am not opposing the Senator's bill, nor opposing the program which has been mapped out, but, in the name of fairness, I want justice done; that is all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should like also to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that in West Virginia the mine operators are actually repairing the engines of the coal-carrying roads in order to secure transportation facilities for their coal now being mined. The entire trouble practically is one of transportation. We have in West Virginia a partially regulated industry, the rates and wages all being regulated by a Government board. The cry is "Let us have a regulated coal industry." We have before us a fine example of a Government-regulated industry, that of transportation. Is it functioning normally or even partially normally? If it were there would be coal in ample abundance in most sections of the country to provide for the actual needs of the people. There is now no trouble in Ohio, and that is true largely of Pennsylvania, and there has not been at any time in a great portion of West Virginia except so far as transportation facilities are concerned. My judgment is that if we can solve the railroad problem and provide transportation for the coal that is now being mined, so far as the soft-coal industry is concerned, it will largely take care of itself.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator says the entire trouble is now one of transportation, but the roads have been in a position from April 1 to July 1 to handle the maximum of coal, and they did not have it to handle, did they?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator knows that the railroads were getting into worse and worse condition, and about at the same time the coal strike was going on the railroad strike was going on.

Mr. KELLOGG. I beg the Senator's pardon. The railroad strike did not commence until July 1 and the railroads were getting in better and better position from April 1 to July 1, but they did not have the coal to haul because the mines were closed down, except in the nonunion districts.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is quite true as to many sections.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is true the railroads are crippled, but if they were not crippled they could not haul coal enough between now and the close of nagivation to supply fully the needs of this country.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the Senator think that situation would be improved if we empowered the Government to take over and operate the coal mines that are now operating and producing? Would that help any?

Mr. KELLOGG. I have not made any suggestion at all about the Government taking over coal mines—not at all.

Mr. WILLIS. I was interested to have the Senator's statement on that subject.

Mr. KELLOGG. When the bill which was introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] comes before the Senate I shall express my opinion on the necessity of some regulation, and regulation of transportation, because there is a demand for coal over the country which can not be met.

Mr. WILLIS. That is absolutely true—that is, if the Senator means that it can not be met now because of the lack of transportation. The Senator knows that the facilities for producing bituminous coal in this country are vastly greater than the possibilities of consumption. That is one of the troubles. There are too many men at work in the production of coal. The industry is overmanned.

Mr. KELLOGG. But it is impossible to produce and transport in three months all the coal which should be produced and transported in six months.

Mr. WILLIS. Absolutely.

Mr. KELLOGG. Therefore I am in favor of the bill of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], to have a big commission inquire into this subject, so that we are not going to be confronted every two years with a coal shortage and a coal panic and a necessity for prices to soar to unreasonable heights. Let us have an inquiry on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to have the Secretary state the pending question.

The READING CLERK. The pending question is the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], to insert after the words "United States," in line 22, page 6, of the committee substitute, the following words:

Or any person in any wise interested as mine owner, operator, or miner in the coal industry.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I should like to have some one inform me, if he can, by what authority Mr. Hoover changed the price of coal. In my State I have constituents who are users of large quantities of coal. They have contracts by the year with the mines, and my information from the mine operators is that they are willing to deliver the coal at the contract price, which is, for these large quantities, $1.90 a ton. Some time ago, I understand, Mr. Hoover fixed a price of $3.50 a ton at the mines as a reasonable price. Therefore, of course, the mine operators were very glad to sell the coal at the higher price. Hence, the coal has been diverted from the people who contracted for it to other people, and our industries have been shut down and are being shut down daily.

Some 10 days or two weeks ago I wrote Mr. Hoover a letter and told him of the situation which was then approaching rapidly down there and asked him for his authority for interfering with these people carrying out their contracts. I received an evasive reply. I concluded from that, as I thought I already knew, that he had no authority to change the price and no authority to set up this coal distribution which is now in operation all over the country. I think it is very unwise on the part of the Government to undertake to tamper with private business and interfere with our carrying on our industries in the usual way.

Our good friend from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] says that we have a good climate down South, and we are very proud of that. It is a good climate; but we can not eat the climate, Mr. President.

Mr. POMERENE. You have good men, too.

Mr. DIAL. We have both. I receive telegrams almost hourly from these people. The other day one of the largest mills in the South and perhaps in the world under one roof shut down, and over 4,000 people were thrown out of employment. They have a contract with coal mines near by, and the mines are willing to ship, but they are interfered with by these so-called priority orders. I took up the question with Mr. Spencer, who is the fuel administrator, and I was referred back, I believe, to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Then I went around to the usual governmental functionaries in Washington and tried to find some one who had responsibility and authority to act, and I am still in that circuit going around. I have not gotten it straightened out yet, and we have not gotten any coal. Only seven carloads of coal, I believe, have been shipped to my State for general use in the last two weeks.

The Interstate Commerce Commission claim that they do not interfere with these mine operators carrying out their contracts. The mine operators are here to-day, and a representative of several hundred cotton mills in my State is here to-day, but we can not get coal. We have the money to pay for it, we have the use for it, we have the labor, we have the orders for our goods, and we are suffering untold damage every hour our mills are shut down.

Mr. President, I think that if the Government is going to come in, by its officers and agents, and interfere with the private rights of the people, the Government ought to make whole the people who suffer. While perhaps it would be going a good, long way to introduce a bill to that effect, I believe that damages should be paid to our people who made contracts and who can not get coal by reason of Government interference.

This bill looks quite innocent, but I am totally and teetotally and unalterably opposed to the Government going into business or interfering with business in any manner except what was intended by the Constitution of the United States.

This bill proposes to have an investigation. I have been a Member of this body some three or four years, and a good part of our time has been spent in investigating people. If we were functioning here as we were intended to function, and attending to matters that we were intended to legislate upon, and stopped trying to cover the earth with legislation and interfering with people's business, and let them go home and go to work, and quit encouraging them to look to Washington, this country would be much better off. There is no such thing as building a country or a republic from the top down. It has to be built from the bottom up, and this is a good illustration of that.

Down in my section we have plenty of people who are willing to work in the mines. There is no question about production. We have all the production that is necessary—more production than we can handle. Those people are willing to work and anxious to work, and yet the Government comes in here now and takes this coal and sends it off to the Great Lakes, or sends it off to some of these centralized places, thereby taking bread out of the mouths of our people. There is no inducement for the people in the mines in those States to work if they can come down and get our coal at their pleasure, and that is what I object to.

Take this very coal. They shut down our mills and our other industries, and they take that coal off to warm these people who are Bolsheviks in a great measure, who bring on strikes and turmoil, trying to overturn this Government. So far as I am concerned, if some of these people should get a little chilly this winter I would not cry. I think about the best thing for this Government to do, instead of investigating business and industry so much, would be to investigate some of these infernal Bolsheviks, this I. W. W. crowd, and put them on ships and send them to the places from whence they came. Then we would begin to have a decent country in which to live.

I hate to criticize the pending bill, because I think the author of it is one of the ablest men in the United States—fair, bold, just, and able; but this bill gives a little bit of hope, I am afraid, to those who advocate a bad principle. It speaks about nationalizing the coal mines. It speaks about the feasibility or necessity of Government regulation and control of the coal industry. I do not know that I know much about constitutional law as it applies to regulating the coal industry. I used to study law and I practiced law a long time, but I sort of quit reading law. I am a sort of guerrilla lawyer now; but that does not sound very constitutional to me. They stretch the Constitution, I believe. If they can not get a provision under the welfare clause, they try to get it under the interstate commerce clause. The framers of the Constitution never dreamed that they were going to try to stretch the interstate commerce clause to any such extent as this.

As soon as the news goes out that Congress favors investigating the "feasibility"—that is a pretty big word, you know, and it covers a great many things—the "feasibility" of Government regulation it will be encouraging to these striking elements and a heap of these people that want to tear up our Government. The bill speaks about the wisdom of "nationalizing" this industry. That is a high-sounding sentiment that will please them wonderfully. They will have several meetings and talk about that, and then they will decide to quit mining coal and let business alone. After a while the people will be so accustomed to running to Washington that they will think there is no use in cutting any cordwood in the summer time, but that when the snow comes on the ground they can go to Washington and get a few cords of wood. I am a little afraid that after a while they will not cook their meals, because they will think they can come to Washington and there will be some governmental agency to attend to that.

I am teetotally disgusted—and I do not say it in a facetious manner—with the centralization of power in Washington. The best thing in the world this Congress could do would be to pass some appropriation bills and adjourn. If it were in my power, I would pass a constitutional amendment next week that Congress could not sit here more than three or four months in the year. That would strike out a good deal of eloquence, but I think this country would be better off. Then people, instead of sitting down and looking to Washington, and reading in the paper every morning what was done here, would get out and go to work. They think they can get some agency in Washington, as I said, if they get out of coal to furnish it to them if they just send a delegation up here instead of letting them do it down home. I think there were five men here to-day to see me about it.

I do not know where we are going to come to. Mr. Hoover has increased the price from $1.90 to $3.50, and I think quite recently in some States to $4.50. I am not intimate with Mr. Hoover. I do not know that I am any particular friend of Mr. Hoover. I know him pleasantly, but I should like somebody to tell me where he gets any right to do that.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; I am glad to yield. I want information.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. Hoover has not fixed any price. In May when the prices of coal began to soar and go away above reasonable prices, and when it was perfectly evident that there was going to be a tremendous shortage, Mr. Hoover asked the operators in the nonunion districts—the only districts that were running—to get together with him and have a general understanding that they should not go above a certain price; and the highest price that they agreed not to go above was $3.50. They could sell coal just as cheaply as they pleased. If it had not been for that, coal would have been selling at the mines by those operators for $8 and $10 a ton. Thirty per cent of the operators in those districts refused to obey it and they have been selling coal all the way from $6 to $10 and $12 a ton during this time; but I will say for the operators that the great majority of them are honorable and stood by their word and have refused to accept the higher prices. That is the only price fixing there is. The Senator talks about the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission. When only 4,000,000 tons of coal are being produced in the country per week and a necessity of practically 4,000,000 for public uilities and public institutions, there has to be some power to see that they get it, even if some people have to suffer. You can not stop the public utilities of this country.

Mr. DIAL. You might; I think you might as well stop the public utilities as turn our labor out of employment and let them perish. I reckon there is no particular provision as to which section of the country shall go a little cool or go hungry. We made contracts and we have the coal, but we can not get it delivered.

If I may be excused for a little personal illusion, I think I know what I am talking about. I am president of an enterprise which uses a lot of coal, and we can not get it delivered, although we have contracts at $1.90 a ton. Recently I started up a public utility plant. I am president of a hydroelectric plant, and I built a steam plant to supplement it. I made a verbal contract with the coal people at $1.90 a ton, as I thought, and they shipped me some coal, but notified me that the Government said $3.50 was a fair price. I raised no row about it, because I did not have a written contract, and told them I was willing to pay $3.50 or pay any other price at which I could get their coal, until I could get the matter straightened out.

Our coal operators are honorable people. They are willing to carry out their contracts. But they tell me, and have told me since 12 o'clock to-day in person, that they could not get cars to ship the coal; that the Interstate Commerce Commission would not let them have the cars to ship the coal under their contracts; that they took it under priority orders and sent it to different sections of the country. The chairman of the railroad commission of South Carolina told me, since 12 o'clock to-day, that it took at least four times as long to get one of those cars back as it did if they supplied the people with whom the mines had contracts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me for an interruption, what he says is not only true as regards coal but I received a letter this morning from a gentleman in Mississippi who is engaged in the lumber business, and he tells me that for practically seven weeks the Southern Railway has not been functioning in carrying to the market lumber that was sold for delivery seven or eight weeks ago. They have not moved a car where he is.

Mr. DIAL. Those people may have their orders canceled. Those are questions of detail, however. Coming down to the larger question, I am very much afraid that the people of this country will be taught to rely upon the Government, and we will have the same thing to go over next year, and forever hereafter, until we let them know that they must look out for themselves.

I did not go into all the merits of the bill of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], but I think it is along the right lines. We should use a little forethought and lay up our supplies in the spring time and the summer time, and then there would not be such a rush in the fall. We get the example from the ants, I believe, which we see running around on the ground.

So I am opposed to the pending bill. I do not see any necessity for its passage. It is not going to do any good; it is going to do harm. It is going to encourage the people to believe that this Government will buy the coal mines and operate the coal mines. Since we went through with a little experience in Government railroad operation during the war and a little after the war, that ought to be enough to satisfy any Senator who thinks a little as to what conditions in this country would be under Government ownership of the necessities of life, like coal. But I can not see any good to come from it. I think the best thing to do would be to say that we would not consider it; that we are not going to nationalize the mines. We do not care anything about any more rules. We know as much about the rules now as we would know if we had this investigation, and I can not see any good to come from it whatever.

I do not know what our people are going to do this winter if the Government comes down and arbitrarily takes the coal away from us. We have it right there to go to work. It is a very serious matter. Our orders were good. Our mills sell their goods ahead and promise delivery, and the orders will be canceled. Our people will be unable to get their cotton ginned if they can not get coal to run the oil mills. The oil mills in my country gin practically all the cotton. They have gins connected with them, and if they can not get coal they can not operate, and the people will not be able to get the cotton ginned, and their cotton will be likely to get burned up in the houses. There is a large quantity on hand. So it is a very serious situation with us. All we want and all we ask is to be let alone by the Government in its pernicious interference with business.

You can not take care of people who will not take care of themselves if they just sit down and will not buy coal. Not that I think I showed very great forethought, but last spring, after I burned up what coal I had and shut down the furnace, I had the bins replenished. Our people will have to follow examples of thrift and forethought. You can buy coal cheaper in the spring. It is beneficial to do that, because you relieve the railroads of great congestion.

I hope no such bill as this will pass. It is a bad precedent. It is a step in the direction of communism, of socialism, of Government ownership, of Government guardianship. It is taking away from the people the desire to excel and the desire to take care of themselves. You are making a helpless people out of them. You are making a dependent population instead of an independent race, which we ought to have, and we are centralizing the Government here at tremendous cost. The cost of coal will be much more if the people have to come to Washington to get their coal, and hence the cost of living will be increased. I see nothing good to be accomplished by it.

As for information, we ought to know enough about the business. There are large mines in several States, and the Senators from those States already know enough to draw any kind of a law they would want to draw without having a great commission take years to investigate, at considerable expense. The people of this country are tired of commissions. They are tired of investigations. They want to be let alone, and as soon as it can be made known that we are not going to tamper with their business and are not going to encourage people to do things that are not governmental, and try to encourage them to break down the enterprises of this country, the better this Government will be.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator to misunderstand me. I am no more in favor of the nationalization of mines or Government ownership of mines or Government operation of mines than he is.

Mr. DIAL. I am glad to know it. Therefore I hope the Senator will vote with me against the bill.

Mr BURSUM. Mr. President, I do not see that much harm could come from this investigation. It is to be an inquiry. I doubt whether there will be so very much good come from it; but there is a question in the public mind, and the solution of that question might be facilitated by the Government obtaining information with reference to the coal industry. The investigation will last only a year, as I understand it, and the expense should not be so very great.

In my State we have had no trouble about producing coal. We have been getting a hundred per cent of the normal production and more. Coal has been supplied from New Mexico for the States of Arizona, California, Nebraska, and as far east as Illinois. The reason why we have been enabled to do so is that we have been fortunate in having a State government which has had the ability to preserve the peace. The trouble in this country has been that in place of mining coal people have been engaged in warfare, in fighting. There has been a lack of ability on the part of the State governments to make it safe to mine coal, a lack of ability to preserve the peace. No industrial controversy can be settled on the basis of reason if you are unable to preserve the peace.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, what State has been unable to maintain the peace?

Mr. BURSUM. Illinois is one.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Has it been unable or has it been unwilling?

Mr. BURSUM. It has failed.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is a different proposition.

Mr. BURSUM. It has failed. I probably should have used the word "failed" in place of saying that it was unable.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator refers, I presume, to the frightful occurrence at Herrin?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; at Herrin.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But the Senator would not say on that ground that the whole State of Illinois had failed?

Mr. BURSUM. I say that the State government of Illinois has failed to preserve the peace.

Mr. REED of Missouri. At that one place. But the Senator does not mean to say that the State governments have broken down and are unable—I am using that term in contradistinction to "unwilling"—to preserve the peace and protect life and property?

Mr. BURSUM. They have been in some instances. The State of West Virginia was in a continuous state of warfare for more than a year and dozens and dozens of men were killed.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is true, but——

Mr. BURSUM. There was no security and no man could go to work without a fear that some one would ambush him—hit him on the head with a rock or shoot him in the back. There was no security for operators or property owners. Their property was liable to destruction at any time.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am trying to distinguish between a failure of the State government to do what it ought to do and the inability of the State government. The Senator does not mean to say there is a single State in the Union where, if the governor of the State had seen fit to apply the powers of the State, he could not have protected life and property in every part of his Commonwealth?

Mr. BURSUM. If the Senator means by his question that I would convey the idea that a State government as a form of government is a failure, he misunderstood me. That is not what I desired to convey; but I do say that the governmental authorities of some of the States have failed to do their duty in protecting lives and property and preserving the peace.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Now, if that is true, then is there any remedy which the Federal Government can properly apply simply because a governor has not done what he ought to do under the law?

Mr. BURSUM. There is no remedy that I know of which would be effective so far as legislation is concerned. The bill which is pending, as I understand it, provides merely for an inquiry.

Mr. REED of Missouri. What the bill does is another question. I am speaking of the other matter.

Mr. BURSUM. I do not advocate any Government ownership or nationalization or any national control or operation of coal mines. What I do say is that the reason for the nonproduction of coal is because of the failure of State governments to protect property and life and preserve the peace and to create such conditions as would under ordinary circumstances permit men engaged in industrial controversies to reason and agree upon the basis of reason, and that whenever violence is permitted there is no chance for reason to function. Those conditions have been notorious in West Virginia and in Illinois and in some other places.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator believe, therefore, that we have arrived at a point where he would say that State governments are failures?

Mr. BURSUM. Not at all. I am simply trying to place the blame where it belongs.

Mr. REED of Missouri. We can all place the blame where we think it belongs, but now, dealing with the question of legislation by which the Federal Government proposes to do something, does the Senator believe we have arrived at a point of time where we should disregard the rights and duties of the several States, and that the Federal Government should say that the States have failed and therefore the Federal Government will now step in?

Mr. BURSUM. I do not. I would not favor national control. I would not favor the nationalization of coal mines. I do not object to an inquiry to ascertain what the conditions are and to having a report. I think it would be a sad day for this country if we were to undertake to nationalize the coal mines. That would carry with it naturally the nationalization of every other industry which is closely related to it, and in the last analysis we would have a soviet government. That would be the end.

Mr. SUTHERLAND and Mr. DIAL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BURSUM. I yield first to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that it was true for a time that the outbreaks in West Virginia were beyond the power of the State government to control absolutely and immediately. That was due to the fact that it had not at that time organized the State militia. It only had a small force of State constabulary, which was insufficient to cover the large territory involved. The State government of West Virginia was functioning then and functions now most creditably, and is able to and does keep the peace. For a short time it was compelled to call upon the General Government, as other States have been compelled to do under similar circumstances, because the trouble was quite widespread and the State forces were unable to cover that large territory.

Mr. BURSUM. I would say to the Senator from West Virginia that if the means had been available to preserve the peace from the inception of the trouble in West Virginia hundreds of thousands of dollars or millions of dollars' worth of property might have been saved and many lives would have been saved, and perhaps it would have aided in preventing the present shortage of coal.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BURSUM. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I suggest to the Senator that we had intended to lay aside the unfinished business at 5 o'clock, if it would not inconvenience the Senator to continue his discussion in the morning.

Mr. BURSUM. I had not intended to occupy any considerable length of time on the matter.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to the Senator proceeding, but I thought he would just as soon go ahead in the morning instead of this evening.

Mr. BURSUM. Oh, yes. I was about through anyway. I am ready to vote.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

RIVER AND HARBOR PROJECTS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, as the Senate knows, we have disposed of nearly all of the amendments to House bill 10766, the legislative river and harbor bill. It is quite important that that measure should go to conference so we can have it adjusted, and it is also important from the standpoint of getting estimates to Congress. I think it can be disposed of without any debate in a very few minutes. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of that measure.

Mr. SMITH. If it is not delaying the matter too much, I would like to have the bill go over until to-morrow, because there are certain features of it to which my attention has been called and I would be very glad to look into them before the bill reaches a final vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, if the Senator objects I can not take it up to-night. I understand there is another very important bill to be taken up in the morning hour to-morrow, and I had hoped that we might get through with House bill 10766 to-night.

Mr. SMITH. The possibilities are that there will not be any great delay. There are some matters in connection with it that I desire to look into.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is objection to the request of the Senator from Washington.

NATIONAL FORESTS IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, a little while ago from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys there was reported back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 6750) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Wenatchee National Forest, State of Washington, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first amendment of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys was to strike out all on page 1 after the enacting clause down to and including the word "namely" and the colon in line 19 and in lieu thereof to insert:

That within the following-described areas any lands not in Government ownership which are found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for national forest purposes may be offered in exchange under the provisions of the act of March 20, 1922 (Public 173), upon notice as therein provided, and upon acceptance of title shall become parts of the Wenatchee National Forest, the Olympic National Forest, and the Snoqualmie National Forest, respectively, and any of such described areas in Government ownership chiefly valuable for national forest purposes and not now parts of any national forest may be added to said national forests as herein provided by proclamation of the President, subject to all valid existing entries: To the Wenatchee National Forest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, at the end of line 21, to change the period to a semicolon and to add:

To the Olympic National Forest, all of section 1, township 24 north, range 3 west, except lot 1; the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter, the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter, and lot 1, section 6, township 24 north, range 2 west, and a permanent right of way for a logging road 25 feet wide across lot 1, section 1, in township 24 north, range 3 west.

To the Snoqualmie National Forest, sections 25, 26, 27, 28, 33, 34, 35, and 36, township 23 north, range 9 east, Willamette principal meridian.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That within the following-described areas any lands not in Government ownership which are found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for national-forest purposes may be offered in exchange under the provisions of the act of March 20, 1922 (Public 173), upon notice as therein provided, and upon acceptance of title shall become parts of the Wenatchee National Forest, the Olympic National Forest, and the Snoqualmie National Forest, respectively, and any of such described areas in Government ownership chiefly valuable for national-forest purposes and not now parts of any national forest may be added to said national forests as herein provided by proclamation of the President, subject to all valid existing entries: To the Wenatchee National Forest, township 20 north, range 13 east, west half of township and sections 1, 3, 10, south half of 14, 15, 22, 23, 25, 26, 27, 34, 35, and 36; township 20 north, range 14 east, sections 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 15, 16, south half of section 29, south half of section 30, sections 31, 32, and 33; township 20 north, range 15 east, sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15; township 21 north, range 15 east, sections 12, 13, 14, 15, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, north half of 26, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, and 45; township 20 north, range 16 east, sections 1, 2, 3, 7, south half of section 8, north half of sections 11, 12, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, north half of section 22; township 21 north, range 16 east, sections 4, 7, 9, 10, 15, 18, 19, east half of section 21, 22, 27, east half of section 28, 30, east half of section 33, and 34; township 20 north, range 17 east, sections 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, north half of section 18, 25, 26, 35, and 36; township 23 north, range 18 east, sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 17, 18, 20, 23, 24, 25, 26, 35, and 36; township 24 north, range 18 east, sections 30, 31, 33, and south half of section 34; township 20 north, range 19 east; township 22 north, range 19 east, sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and south half of township; township 23 north, range 19 east, sections 19, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, and 35; township 25 north, range 19 east; township 26 north, range 19 east; township 27 north, range 19 east; township 20 north, range 20 east; township 21 north, range 20 east, sections 6, 7, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36; township 25 north, range 20 east, sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21; township 26 north, range 20 east, sections 1 to 16, inclusive, 21 to 27, inclusive, 30, 31, 32, 35, and 36; township 27 north, range 20 east; all Willamette principal meridian; to the Olympic National Forest, all of section 1, township 24 north, range 3 west, except lot 1; the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter, the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter, and lot 1, section 6, township 24 north, range 2 west; and a permanent right of way for a logging road, 25 feet wide, across lot 1, section 1, in township 24 north, range 3 west; to the Snoqualmie National Forest, sections 25, 26, 27, 28, 33, 34, 35, and 36, township 23 north, range 9 east, Willamette principal meridian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act for the inclusion of certain lands in the Wenatchee National Forest, the Olympic National Forest, and the Snoqualmie National Forest, all in the State of Washington, and for other purposes."

AMENDMENT OF ORGANIC ACT OF HAWAII.

Mr. NEW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11590) to amend sections 34 and 40 of the organic act of the Territory of Hawaii. If I may be permitted a moment, I would like to say that the bill provides for the deletion of the word "male" from the two sections of the organic act of Hawaii, and the reason for asking for its present consideration is that the last day for filing in Hawaii is September 6.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 34 and 40 of the organic act of the Territory of Hawaii, being an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, be amended by deleting therefrom the word "male," so that said sections when amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 34. That in order to be eligible to election as a senator a person shall—

"Be a citizen of the United States;

"Have attained the age of 30 years;

"Have resided in the Hawaiian Islands not less than three years and be qualified to vote for senators in the district from which he or she is elected."

"SEC. 40. That in order to be eligible to be a member of the house of representatives the person shall, at the time of election—

"Have attained the age of 25 years;

"Be a citizen of the United States;

"Have resided in the Hawaiian Islands not less than three years and shall be qualified to vote for representatives in the district from which he or she is elected."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION OF CROP INSURANCE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably Senate Resolution 341, submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] on August 23, 1922, authorizing the appointment of a special committee of three Senators to investigate the subject of crop insurance. There is no appropriation and no expense involved in the investigation, except for the employment of a stenographer. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, how can an investigation be made without some expense, and will not the committee come in and ask for additional authority?

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the resolution carries the usual and customary form of authorization for the employment of a stenographer and payment thereof. There is no expense to be incurred out of the city, except that the subpœnaing of witnesses might occasion a little expense, but which I do not anticipate. For that reason it was not necessary to provide for more than the usual expenses to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is this to be a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. MCNARY. It it not. It is a special committee of three Senators.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Why can not the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry make the investigation under the authority it now has?

Mr. MCNARY. For the reason that I thought the work would go forward during the holiday, and upon investigation I found that most of the members of that committee would be away. I wanted to have the work done so that a report could be made to the Agricultural Department before the next session of the Congress.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think I shall ask that the resolution go over until I have an opportunity to confer with the Senator about it.

Mr. MCNARY. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go to the calendar.

MIRIAM KINSEY STEWART.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably with an amendment the resolution (S. Res. 337) to make a payment to the heirs of William B. Stewart, late assistant clerk of the Finance Committee. The resolution was submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], and provided for the payment of one year's salary, but the committee amended it, reducing it to six months' salary. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution. The amendment was, on page 1, line 6, after the word "one," to insert the world "half," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Miriam Kinsey Stewart, widow of William B. Stewart, late assistant clerk of the Committee on Finance, United States Senate, a sum equal to one-half year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

LANDS IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2866) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent to parties named herein certain lands in Louisiana. The bill has passed the House and is unanimously reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the payment of $1.25 per acre, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell and issue patent to the parties named and for the lands described as follows:

To R. E. Barham the northwest quarter of southwest quarter section 25, township 19 north, range 6 east, Louisiana meridian.

To H. O. Blanks the north half of northeast quarter section 24, township 23 north, range 8 east, Louisiana meridian.

To Mrs. Sallie Loyd and Mrs. Jemmie D. Scott the southwest quarter of southeast quarter section 35, township 23 north, range 7 east, Louisiana meridian.

To B. B. Williams the southeast quarter of northwest quarter section 25, township 19 north, range 6 east, Louisiana meridian.

To J. P. Madison the northeast quarter of southwest quarter section 25, township 19 north, range 6 east, Louisiana meridian.

To T. J. Haynes the south half of northeast quarter section 19, township 23 north, range 8 east, Louisiana meridian.

To G. E. Mott the northeast quarter of southeast quarter section 1, township 18 north, range 6 east, Louisiana meridian.

To Mrs. E. L. Hadley the southeast quarter of northeast quarter section 29, township 23 north, range 8 east, Louisiana meridian.

To Gabe Moss and Morehouse Planting Co. (Ltd.), the northeast quarter of northeast quarter and the southwest quarter of southwest quarter section 7, township 19 north, range 8 east, Louisiana meridian.

To Mrs. Alice Felton the southeast quarter of northeast quarter section 29, township 22 north, range 7 east, Louisiana meridian.

To E. M. Clark and W. P. Kirkpatrick the west half of southwest quarter section 30, township 21 north, range 8 east, Louisiana meridian.

Provided, That proper application and payment for purchase of said lands be filed hereunder in the district land office within six months after the approval of this act, and that no adverse claim thereto be officially of record as pending when the application is allowed and the sale consummated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISCHARGE OF OIL IN NAVIGABLE STREAMS.

Mr. WILLIS. Out of order, from the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3968) to improve the navigability of waters of the United States by preventing oil pollution thereof, and I submit a report (No. 901) thereon. If I may have permission to present the report, then I shall ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to receiving the report? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the bill may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "oil pollution act, 1922."

SEC. 2. When used in this title—

(a) The term "oil" means oil of any kind or in any form, including fuel oil, oil sludge, and oil refuse;

(b) The term "United States" means the several States, Territories and possessions, the District of Columbia, and the Canal Zone;

(c) The term "person" means an individual, partnership, corporation, or association, and includes any officer, agent, and employee of the United States;

(d) The term "navigable waters of the United States" means all waters within the boundary of the United States navigable in their natural or improved condition, including all nonnavigable waters connecting any such navigable waters, but not including nonnavigable waters flowing into but not connecting any such navigable waters; and

(e) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. That except for the purpose of smoothing the sea or quelling the force of the waves in case of emergency and except as otherwise permitted by regulations prescribed by the Secretary, which he is hereby authorized to make, no person and no vessel, barge, or other floating craft shall empty, discharge, throw, or deposit oil, or suffer or permit oil to run or flow upon or into the navigable waters of the United States.

SEC. 4. That any person who violates section 3 or any regulation prescribed thereunder, and any officer, employee, or agent of the United States in charge of any vessel owned or operated by the United States which violates such section or any such regulation, shall, upon conviction for such violation, be fined not more than $2,500 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 5. (a) That any vessel other than a vessel owned or operated by the United States, which violates section 3 or any regulation prescribed thereunder shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $2,500. Clearance of the vessel from a port of the United States may be withheld until the penalty is paid. The amount of such penalty shall constitute a lien upon the vessel which may be recovered in proceedings by libel in rem.

(b) A board of local inspectors of vessels may, subject to the provisions of section 4450 of the Revised Statutes and of the act entitled "An act to provide for appeals from decisions of boards of local inspectors of vessels, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1918, suspend or revoke a license issued by any such board to the master of any vessel which violates any provision of section 3 or any regulation prescribed thereunder.

SEC. 6. That no fine, imprisonment, withholding of clearance, suspension or revocation of a master's license, or other penalty shall be enforced for any violation of this act or any regulation prescribed thereunder, occurring within three months after its passage.

SEC. 7. That section 13 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1899, as amended, and the act entitled "An act to prevent obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent water of New York City, by dumping or otherwise, and to punish and prevent such offenses," approved June 29, 1888, as amended, and the act entitled "An act to prevent the dumping of refuse material in Lake Michigan at or near Chicago," approved June 23, 1910, to the extent the same may apply to oil, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 8. That the President may at any time when the United States is at war suspend for the period of the war as determined by proclamation of the President, the provisions of this act with respect to violations by vessels owned or operated by the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, there has been great complaint about the effect of the discharge of oil into the navigable waters of the United States. It has very greatly increased the fire hazard in a number of localities, particularly in the cities of New York and Brooklyn. It has caused great damage to marine life, and has also caused great damage along bathing beaches, and so forth.

I think, however, that the chief reason why the bill should be enacted into law is to minimize, so far as possible, the tremendous fire hazard.

The committee have considered the measure very carefully, and I think every objection has been met save one. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] will offer an amendment to cover that point.

Mr. LENROOT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. In section 3, page 2, after the word "make," at the end of line 12, it is proposed to insert:

under which such quantities as shall not be deleterious to health or fish or dangerous to property may be permitted to be discharged or deposited.

Mr. LENROOT. I greatly fear that in the form reported the bill would be invalid as giving a discretion to the Secretary which could not be delegated without some rule laid down. The amendment is designed to supply that defect. That is its only purpose.

Mr. WILLIS. I concur in the view, and accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILLIS. In order that the record may be kept straight, I ask unanimous consent that the report, which is very brief may be printed in the RECORD. It gives a full statement of the reasons.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report (No. 901) submitted by Mr. WILLIS on this day is as follows:

Mr. WILLIS, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted the following report to accompany S. 3968:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3968) to improve the navigability of waters of the United States by preventing oil pollution thereof, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

In the hearings before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, page 102, Maj. Gen. Lansing H. Beach, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, gave reasons why the present law is insufficient to meet the needs when he testified as follows:

"With regard to the existing law, we do not feel that the act of March 3, 1899, is sufficient to meet the present conditions. That law states that parties shall not discharge or permit to be discharged, etc., materials which will impede or obstruct navigation. Those terms 'impede' and 'obstruct' are ordinarily considered as physical impediments to navigation, neither of which oil or acid is."

That there is urgent need for this legislation is shown by the following correspondence with General Beach relative to S. 3311, a bill similar to S. 3968. This makes it clear that under existing law the War Department is without authority to prevent oil pollution of navigable waters of the United States.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, D. C., August 18, 1922.

Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of July 28, 1922, on the subject of Senate bill No. 3311, to prevent the oil pollution of navigable waters, has received most careful consideration.

Section 13 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, is not applicable to prevent the discharge of oil upon navigable waters, for the prohibition in that paragraph states:

"It shall not be lawful to throw, discharge, or deposit, or cause, suffer, or procure to be thrown, discharged, or deposited * * * whereby navigation shall or may be impeded or obstructed."

This legislation was enacted at a time before the serious pollution of navigable waterways by oil had occurred or was anticipated. Its essential purpose was to prevent the introduction into navigable channels of the only kind of material which had given trouble to navigation up to that time, that is, such material as would form an actual physical obstruction to navigation. The use of the words "impeded or obstructed" imply a physical hindrance to navigation, which does not occur in the case of oil. It is, therefore, not at all likely that the courts would hold that oil, which is a fire menace and a source of destruction of animal and vegetable life in water rather than an impediment or obstruction to navigation, is refuse matter coming within the scope of the prohibition contained in the law.

It is therefore regarded as highly desirable that legislation be so drawn as to be distinctly and clearly applicable as to the discharge of oil. As the Secretary of War pointed out in his letter of March 30 to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, the particular form that the legislation should take is regarded by the department as a matter for Congress in its wisdom to decide.

Very respectfully,

LANSING H. BEACH,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

P. S.—Since writing the above letter I am in receipt of a report of the United States district attorney for the eastern district of Virginia, and append copy of it hereto for your information.

L. H. B.

OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
EASTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA,
Norfolk, August 14, 1922.

DISTRICT ENGINEER,
United States Engineer's Office, Norfolk, Va.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your favor of August 12, 1922, advise that in the case of United States v. W. F. Crouch and Harry Welliford, decided on February 3, 1922, by Hon. D. Lawrence Groner, judge United States court for this district, it was held that the discharge of oil from vessels into navigable waters does not fall within the provisions of section 13 of the rivers and harbors act of March 3, 1899.

It was contended by counsel for the defendants that section 13 only dealt with those things that impeded or obstructed navigation and did not come within the terms of the statute.

Judge Groner, in deciding this case, after stating that the statute did not cover oil, said: "While it seems to me that Congress would have power to provide against the pollution of navigable waters by depositing oil on them, it has not done so." In this particular case the defendants were engaged in taking oil from the ship by means of a barge. The barge was not so arranged as to confine the oil and great quantities were allowed to escape into navigable waters. It was not denied that the defendants were guilty of allowing oil to be discharged from the barge, and the sole question was whether or not such discharge constituted a violation of law.

We have had several other cases involving the discharge of oil, but in those cases the proof was not sufficient to send them on to the court. However, under the decision in the Crouch case, there can be no further criminal prosecutions for discharge of oil in this district until Congress has passed a law covering this subject.

Yours very truly,

PAUL W. KEAR,
United States Attorney.

There are several bills and resolutions pending in both Houses of Congress to correct the evils mentioned in the bill, and hearings have been held and, as bearing on the subject, we beg to quote a portion of a report recently submitted relative to House Joint Resolution 297:

"The negligent casting of refuse oil into the sea by oil-burning and oil-carrying steamers has become a serious menace to the maritime and fishing industries of the United States; the fire hazard created by the accumulation of floating oil on the piles, piers, and bulkheads in our harbors is increasing to an alarming exent; the destruction of ocean fisheries resulting from the discharge into the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans and the Gulf of Mexico of the waste products of the oil used for fuel and lubrication is destroying in great numbers the fish, oysters, clams, crabs, and lobsters, which are a material part of our national food supply; and is causing serious injury to bathing beaches as well as depreciating the value of property fronting on the seashore and used for residential or hotel purposes."

This states clearly and briefly the need for the legislation your committee recommends.

The bill is not objectionable to the War Department, as will appear by the annexed letter from the Secretary of War under date of March 30, 1922:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 30, 1922.

Hon. W. L. JONES,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I desire to acknowledge your reference, for the views of this department, of Senate bill No. 3311, "To improve the navigability of waters of the United States by preventing oil pollution thereof."

During the present session of Congress a variety of legislation on the subject of oil pollution and discharge has been proposed. On May 5, 1921, this department made a favorable report on Senate bill No. 1320, and on September 27, 1921, similar report was made on Senate bill No. 2414. Both of those measures proposed the amendment of the existing law, section 13 of the act of March 3, 1899, so as to specifically include "oil in any form" within its provisions. It is believed that the enactment of either would provide adequately for dealing with the oil menace.

The bill now under consideration proposes a specific code on the subject, which, though more elaborate and possibly more expensive to administer, would probably prove no more effective than legislation in the form of the bills above mentioned. However, some legislation is urgently necessary, and the particular form it is to take is a matter for Congress in its wisdom to decide. While I do not commend Senate bill No. 3311 for favorable consideration, I see no reason, from the viewpoint of this department, for objecting to its enactment.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN W. WEEKS,
Secretary of War.

LANDS IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 10361) authorizing the sale and patent of certain alleged public lands in Louisiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell and patent to Thomas Glynn, William Glynn, Alphonse Glynn, Charles Glynn, Aloysius Glynn, Alexander Glynn, Emma Glynn, Josephine Glynn, and Belle Glynn, of Pointe Coupee, La., lot or section 39, lots 5, 6, 7, 12, and 13, section 27, and lots 1 and 2, of section 26, township 5 south, range 11 east, Louisiana meridian west of the Mississippi River, situated in West Baton Rouge Parish, La., at $1.25 per acre, lands which they and their grantors have occupied, under claim and color of title from the State of Louisiana, ever since May 3, 1854: Provided, That application for the purchase of the described tracts under this authorization be filed at the United States land office in Baton Rouge, La., within 60 days from the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 1965) for the relief of Mrs. D. Montgomery (Rept. No. 898); and

A bill (H. R. 5791) for the relief of Robert Russell (Rept. No. 899).

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FRANCE:

A bill (S. 3969) providing for a site and building at Pocomoke City, Worcester County, Md.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 3970) amending the act of June 30, 1922, making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRANDEGEE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 240) authorizing the erection, on public grounds, of a memorial to the late Joseph J. Darlington; to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. McNARY (for Mr. SPENCER):

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 241) providing payment of judgment in favor of Robert L. Owen and associates in the case known as the Mississippi Choctaws case No. 29821, Court of Claims; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENT OF COTTON FUTURES ACT.

Mr. DIAL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3146) to amend section 5 of the United States cotton futures act, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, September 1, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION.

Executive nomination received by the Senate August 31 (legislative day of August 25), 1922.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

John D. Wallingford, of Iowa, to be United States district judge, Canal Zone, vice Charles Kerr, resigned.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate August 31 (legislative day of August 25), 1922.

POSTMASTERS.

KANSAS.

Guy W. Bryan, Delia.
John W. Liggett, Rosalia.

MAINE.

Velorus T. Shaw, Prouts Neck.

MICHIGAN.

William L. Shulters, Hastings.

NEW JERSEY.

Daniel A. DeVries, Carlton Hill.
Richard V. Iderstine, Wyckoff.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Nollie M. Patton, Morganton.
Ross Matheson, Taylorsville.

OHIO.

Ida C. Steinman, Logan.
Bert E. Woodward, Stryker.

OKLAHOMA.

Robert B. Hill, Alex.
Sam A. Snyder, Hennessey.

TEXAS.

Leo W. Cox, Buda.
Clark A. Fortner, Crosby.
William T. Henderson, Odessa.
Bessie E. Fairless, Palo Pinto.

VERMONT.

Lewis S. Richardson, Chester Depot.

VIRGINIA.

Lela O'N. Scott, Amelia Court House.
John W. Rodgers, Hampden Sidney.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, August 31, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, O God, that there are none who may not look up and say: "Our Father," Thou art all in all, without beginning and without end, whose law is perfect and whose testimony is love. More than we know, far more than we can comprehend, Thou art full of compassion. Since we are weak in all that is perfect, give us encouragement that we may bear up under the consciousness of our limitations. May we not look for the reward of our work, but for the success of our task. O may our country not only be great in material wealth, but in righteousness, in intelligence, and in all the higher excellencies which the Son of man taught when here upon earth. In His holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3794. An act to amend section 35 of an act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3794. An act to amend section 35 of an act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2597. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, and safety, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in the alleys of the District of Columbia," approved September 25, 1914; and

S. 813. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close upper Water Street between Twenty-first and Twenty-second Streets NW.

FEDERAL FUEL DISTRIBUTER.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributer, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12472, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

At any time hereafter, when the President shall determine that an emergency exists, caused by shortage of supply or inequitable distribution of coal or other fuel, which endangers the public health and general welfare of the people of the United States, or injures industry and business generally throughout the United States, or causes extortion, or limits the supply of heat, light, and power, or threatens to obstruct and hamper the operation of the Government of the United States and of its several departments, or the transportation of the mails, or the operation and efficiency of the Army and the Navy, or the operation of carriers engaged in commerce among the several States, or with foreign countries, the President may proclaim that an emergency so exists and thereupon the powers conferred by this act shall be revived and in full force and effect.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 6, line 1, insert "Sec. 9."

Page 6, lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "endangers the public health and general welfare of the people of the United States, or."

Page 6, line 6, strike out the word "or."

Page 6, line 7, strike out the word "or," before the word "limits," and the word "or" after the word "power."

Page 6, line 11, strike out the word "or" and insert the word "and."

The foregoing amendments were severally reported and severally agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 13, after the word "countries" insert the words "or otherwise endangers the public health and general welfare of the people of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This legislation as it is drawn in this paragraph is permanent. I shall offer an amendment later to limit it to a period of one year, and I hope the committee will notice just what this section does. We are supposed to be legislating for a great emergency. This section makes it a permanent law. I wonder if the members of the committee know that that is the force and effect of the section. After providing in other sections that the President may end the operation of the act, and assuming that the President has ended it, this section provides that at any time hereafter—and that means a century just as much as it means a year—the President may revive the act. The particular amendment to which I am addressing my remarks is the committee amendment in line 13. After reciting the emergency that has heretofore been described and the facts that are supposed to create that emergency, the bill provides that if those things exist, or, in the alternative, otherwise endangers the public health and the welfare of the people of the United States, the President may proclaim an emergency. That is a sweeping proposition which gives any future President the right to revive this act and make it effective and control the price of this commodity in this remarkable way at any time. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment proposed by the committee ought not to be adopted, and I shall later offer an amendment which will limit the period during which this may be resurrected to one year.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I supported the gentleman's motions yesterday. Has the gentleman any reasonable assurance at this time that we will have an opportunity to vote on that under a motion to recommit?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I, of course, can not say what the situation will be when the time comes to move to recommit.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, the words which are printed in italics in lines 13 and 14 are put there to make this part of the act conform to the rest of it, and of course the suggestion of dangers to public health and general welfare revert back to the consideration of a coal famine, or an emergency existing by virtue of such. It is not a wide-open declaration that the President can do this, that, or the other affecting public health but as affecting a coal famine, and I think that the House will agree that either the public health or the general welfare are reasons enough why the limitations which this section provides should be adopted.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Is it the purpose of the gentleman and the purpose of those who are supporting the bill to leave this legislation in such shape that it can be revived at any time in the future, which means at all times in the future, by act of the President alone?

Mr. WINSLOW. I was just about to speak on that point. This particular section probably interests more Members than any other in the bill. According to the provisions of the section the power to determine an emergency and to proclaim one is left in the hands of the President. The debate on the bill yesterday and the day before, together with a good many expressions of opinion on the part of Members of the House, have resulted in a most careful consideration of the points in this particular section. Our committee apparently, and I believe quite by accident more than otherwise, in adopting the language did not go as far through with the possibilities that might arise under the provisions of the section as was possible. At no time, so far as I remember, has there been particular or extreme emphasis put forward on the importance of having the President given the sole right to declare or proclaim an emergency. To boil it all down, it has seemed best to me at all events, and to Members with whom I have talked, in the committee and out of it, that that section should be modified, and as a matter of information, although not in order at the moment, I beg to advise members of this committee that I propose to offer amendments in such form and shape as to throw the responsibility for the determination and declaration of a fuel crisis hereafter, after this one may have ended, into the hands of Congress and not into the hands of the President.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. May I inquire whether there was any final limitation put upon it? As I recall, the amendment of Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois was voted down.

Mr. WINSLOW. I believe there was nothing done, and, of course, if the suggestion of the committee should be adopted, it means that when this emergency terminates Congress hereafter will have the sole power to declare a future emergency.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. May I inquire, then, if the section as it reads now——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] has expired.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I would like to have one minute.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may have five additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I should like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if the bill as it is now proposed to be left, because we have passed section 8, is to leave it within the discretion of the Congress of the United States to make this permanent law?

Mr. WINSLOW. So far as I have any knowledge.

Mr. SNELL. As I understood the gentleman, he proposes to offer an amendment that will practically take away the power that is granted the President by section 9, and leave it up to Congress to declare when such situation or emergency exists.

Mr. WINSLOW. So far as the declaration of an emergency is concerned.

Mr. SNELL. If we are going to do that, why would it harm the bill or intent of the House at this time to entirely eliminate section 9?

Mr. WINSLOW. I am not sure I would be in order in debating that point in advance of submitting the amendment, but if there is no objection I would be glad to go on.

Mr. SNELL. I think there would be no objection.

Mr. WINSLOW. The object in keeping the paragraph is this, and a powerful argument. The Congress will have put forth an extreme effort if this legislation becomes a law to establish a reasonable and prompt method, we believe, for meeting an emergency situation. If the paragraph remains in there, as we would have it in the case I suggested, if the changes are adopted, that would leave in the last few lines, namely, "the powers conferred by this act shall be revived and in full force and effect." That would make it possible for Congress at any time when it might come to the conclusion that an emergency existed, and Congress saw fit to declare such, to simply make the declaration, in which event the machinery for operating would be at hand. Otherwise we would have to go through the time of drawing up new bills, going through committees, going through sessions of the House and Senate, and doing an unusual amount of work, which perhaps might be avoided, to say nothing of the loss of time.

Mr. SNELL. Then, as I understand it, it would be entirely dependent on the act of Congress for the whole matter to be revived?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes; and once they declare it it would be automatic and a system of procedure would be established.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. In my remarks on Tuesday I gave notice that when section 9 was reached I would offer an amendment as follows. I want to ask a question in regard to it. On page 6, line 1, after the word "hereafter," insert the words:

When the Congress or, if the Congress is not in session, the President shall determine that an emergency exists.

Now, as I understand from the chairman of the committee his amendment proposes to leave it entirely in the hands of Congress. If Congress was not in session, it ought to still remain in the President, and I would therefore give notice that I will insist upon offering the amendment which I foreshadowed in my remarks on Tuesday in this regard.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, may I have a moment or two in which to explain?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINSLOW. I realize perfectly well that all this discussion about amendments to be offered is quite out of order in respect to the question before the House. I shall reserve the right, Mr. Chairman, when the time comes, as representing the committee, to propose an amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the meantime the chairman does not want to be understood that this House committee amendment, about which this discussion has taken place, ought not to be adopted?

Mr. WINSLOW. The gentleman means in lines 13 and 14?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. WINSLOW. No. The chairman has objected as far as he could to the removal of those lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that he was in doubt.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 23.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to section 9, page 6, to strike out the words in line 1, "when the President," and insert in lieu thereof the words "whenever the Congress." And, in line 2, after the word "determine," insert the words "and declare." Strike out all of line 15 and the words "and thereupon" in line 16, so that the section will read—and I would like to have the Clerk report it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment and the section as it would read when amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WINSLOW, of Massachusetts, moves to amend on page 6, line 1, by striking out the words "when the President" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "whenever the Congress" and on line 2, after the word "determined," insert the words "and declare"; and by striking out all of line 15 and the words "and thereupon" in line 16 so that section 9 as amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 9. At any time hereafter, whenever the Congress shall determine and declare that an emergency exists caused by shortage of supply or inequitable distribution of coal or other fuel, which injures industry and business generally throughout the United States, causes extortion, limits the supply of heat, light, and power, threatens to obstruct and hamper the operation of the Government of the United States and of its several departments, or the transportation of the mails, or the operation and efficiency of the Army and the Navy, and the operation of carriers engaged in commerce among the several States, or with foreign countries, or otherwise endangers the public health and general welfare of the people of the United States, the powers conferred by this act shall be revived and in full force and effect."

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, in submitting this amendment we were mindful of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] yesterday, and recollected that in his view it will be as well to put the power of determining and declaring or proclaiming an emergency into the hands of Congress whenever Congress is in session, but, if not, in the hands of the President. In carrying that thought through, it seemed to us that if there were any lack of wisdom in putting the matter into the hands of the President when Congress is in session there would be an equal lack of wisdom in putting it into the hands of the President when Congress is not in session. It was either one thing or the other. The President could have it at one time as well as at another, and at all times or at no time. Between the two the amendment provides at no time. The idea is this, that if there is an emergency of sufficient moment to warrant the President in believing that it is of importance to the country to the extent of calling and declaring an emergency, it would oblige the Congress of the United States to come together by call of the President.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Would it require such an action by Congress as would need the signature of the President, or could it be overridden by the President's veto—the act to create an emergency?

Mr. WINSLOW. I am not prepared to answer that question.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If the gentleman will yield further, the reason why I asked that question, Mr. Chairman, is that if it is proposed to say that Congress in the future by an act of Congress may revive this act, I think it would be a rather curious and remarkable thing for the Sixty-seventh Congress to say that we propose in the future to allow Congress to pass legislation. If it is proposed to do it merely by congressional resolution, which does not require the signature of the President, that is a different thing.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. You would find that impossible.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] has the floor, but I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. You would find it impossible to do it by resolution without the signature of the President, because legislation in that manner is not permissible.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I would like to inquire of the gentleman if he does not think this is a remarkable piece of legislation, to pass a law informing future Congressmen that if they please they may pass a law?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think it is absurd and without any precedent. If the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts should be adopted and the Sixty-eighth or Sixty-ninth Congress should undertake to act, nevertheless, the entire subject would be open to consideration. There would be nothing to prevent any suggestions or amendments being made to any of the sections of the entire act. I respectfully submit, and with great deference, that we would not get anywhere by undertaking to do what the gentleman from Massachusetts proposes. I think the legislation is feeble and inadequate. However, I am going to vote for it, but I am not going to vote for any proposition that I think is the limit of absurdity.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I wish to say that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW], as I understand it, intends to have this legislation read so that a joint resolution of Congress will call the emergency back into being, and that resolution does not have to have the signature of the President.

Mr. WINSLOW. I am frank to admit that I had not in mind any operation other than the ordinary operation of law.

Mr. RAYBURN. In other words, the gentleman from Massachusetts has this in mind, that we would give to a future Congress the power only to call that thing into being and not give them the power to pass any legislation repealing it or adding to it.

Mr. WINSLOW. I do not think you can detract that power from a future Congress.

Mr. RAYBURN. Then the amendment means absolutely nothing.

Mr. WINSLOW. Not at all.

Mr. RAYBURN. The amendment means absolutely nothing if you are not going to bind a future Congress as to what it can do. If that is it, then your amendment has no effect.

Mr. WINSLOW. I do not agree with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, would a motion to strike out section 9, offered as substitute for the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It would be in order to offer, but not to be voted on until all perfecting amendments are disposed of.

Mr. RAYBURN. I say, would it be in order to offer it as a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I make that motion—that section 9 be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers a motion that the section be stricken out. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAYBURN: Page 6, strike out all of section 9.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard on the amendment at this time or later, when the amendments shall have been passed?

Mr. RAYBURN. I would like to be heard now.

Mr. Chairman, the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW], if it does what he intends it to do, does absolutely nothing. The question, therefore, must recur upon whether or not this Congress wants to grant a continuing power. If this Congress wants to say that at any time in the future, whenever a man proposes this legislation says that it is emergency legislation—and that is the only reason why he advocates it—if they want to leave the power in the President of the United States or in Congress, as they say, by joint resolution to call this thing back into power without amendment, without doing anything except passing this resolution, that is one thing. If they do not want to grant unheard-of power to a President of the United States at any time he wants to call it into being, then section 9 ought to be stricken out.

It does seem to me that section 8 as it now stands grants all the power that this Congress ought to want to grant to anybody, for the reason that section 8 gives the President the power to continue this emergency just as long as he desires. It says that "whenever the President shall be of the opinion that the existing emergency has passed he may by proclamation so declare," and so forth. Therefore the President of the United States can hold this act in effect until after April 1, 1923, if, as gentlemen here think, there might be a strike or a threatened strike, or he might hold it until April 1, 1924, or at any time that he thinks it reasonable; so that if this Congress wants to vote into this measure anything that would prevent a continuation of this power in the hands of the President and granting to the President the right to hold this thing in being in future, the only thing to do is to strike out section 9.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] whether he thinks we have the constitutional power to give to a future Congress the right to do a legislative act within the meaning of the Constitution, which ordinarily requires the President's approval, and to cut out the right of the President to veto it?

Mr. RAYBURN. I say I do not think the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts means anything.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I think the gentleman's motion to strike out the section should be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I desire to offer a substitute for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: Page 6, line 1, after the word "hereafter," strike out the word "when" and insert "when Congress or when the Congress is not in session."

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the fact that it appears to be the established order that nothing except committee amendments to this bill shall be allowed. Nevertheless I indicated in my remarks the other day why I thought this section ought to be amended in this particular. Otherwise the declaration of an emergency in future years will rest solely with the President, this being continuing legislation. Personally I am heartily in favor of striking the section from the bill. It is senseless legislation. There is no principle better settled in law than that one Congress can not bind its successor in any way, and the question of having machinery ready for another Congress to put into operation borders on the edge of absurdity.

I offer this amendment with a view to perfecting the section if it is going to be passed by the committee; but if the motion to strike out prevails I shall feel that the committee will have adopted the wise course.

Now, my amendment differs from the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts only in this, except the correction of verbiage throughout the section. His amendment provides that Congress alone shall declare an emergency in the future—a contradiction of the spirit of this measure which is that in the future the President may announce and declare an emergency to exist calling for drastic action. In the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts no provision is made for that period when the Congress is not in session. I think it ought to be provided for. An emergency might arise of such a pressing character that there would be no time to convene the Congress, and the President ought to declare the emergency. If Congress is in session, then I am strongly and persistently opposed to Congress surrendering its right to declare when an emergency of this character exists, which is to call for such drastic treatment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the matter now pending before the committee that has precedence for consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] will be voted upon first. Then the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts will be voted on. Lastly, after all perfecting amendments have been passed on, the motion to strike out the section will be voted on. The order of debate, however, is not determined by that. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, up to now I have refrained from taking any part in the discussion on this bill; but I think we have reached a stage where every Member of the House ought to express his opinion as to the wisdom of what we propose to do.

Section 8 of the bill provides that—

> Whenever the President shall be of the opinion that the existing emergency has passed he may by proclamation so declare, and thereupon the exercise of the powers conferred under this act shall be suspended.

And I assume that what is meant by the word "suspended" is that the act shall thereafter be of no force and effect. Now, section 9, as it is proposed to amend it, seems to me to be unnecessary; and section 9, as it is proposed without amendment, ought not to be in the bill. There ought not to be any instruction given to a future Congress as to what it undoubtedly has the constitutional right to do, and it seems to me that we should not under any circumstances give to the President the power to continue an act which by the preceding section has been suspended by the mere declaration of the nonexistence of the emergency to meet which this legislation is about to be enacted.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Then, I take it, the gentleman would also be opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which proposes to give to a President elected 50 years from now, if Congress does not happen to be in session, the power to resurrect this act?

Mr. MADDEN. I am opposed to both amendments, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I am in favor of the elimination of section 9 in toto. [Applause.] That is what ought to be done, and it seems to me that is the way to reach the case. When the emergency no longer exists the law should be set aside.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I say this to the gentleman——

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Emphasizing his view, with which I thoroughly concur, that the fact which unfortunately will probably obtain throughout the future is that Congress will nearly always be in session and can deal with any emergency.

Mr. MADDEN. Whether it is in session or not it can be called into session, and it will be just as easy to enact legislation then which may be required to meet an emergency which may arise at that time as it is now; and the emergency then, if one should exist, may not be at all what the existing emergency is now, and this law might not be applicable to the emergency that might exist in the future.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Under section 8 unless the President should see fit to declare the emergency at an end the power conferred in this act would continue?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. VESTAL. It would go on indefinitely?

Mr. MADDEN. But no President would refuse to declare the emergency at an end if it was at an end.

Mr. VESTAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. VESTAL. Is it not unfortunate that, on page 5, at the end of section 8, the word "suspended" is used? What does that mean?

Mr. MADDEN. It means that the act is at an end.

Mr. VESTAL. Then why does not the section say so, that it shall terminate. With the word "suspended" there I think section 9 should go out.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not in favor of continuing an emergency by enacting permanent legislation under which the President or anybody can declare an emergency. That should be left to Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, while strongly supporting this bill as a piece of emergency legislation, I am opposed to a permanent grant of this extraordinary power to the President. To give to the Executive for all time to come such extraordinary power in control of prices seems unnecessary and unwise. Let the people, speaking through the Congress, say when the emergency exists and bestow the power. At the same time, I can not agree with the interpretation placed on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts by the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Virginia. There is no attempt in the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts to dictate to any subsequent Congress. There is no attempt to preclude a subsequent Congress from doing this or that thing. There is no attempt to tell any subsequent Congress what it may or may not do. The only purpose of the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is to make unnecessary the reenactment of all this legislation and go into all the questions as to machinery that would be set up in case an emergency existed. I believe we can determine what legislation shall be in existence until such time as a subsequent Congress may declare that the emergency exists. The subsequent Congress may repeal the law or set up any machinery it pleases. We can not by any act here prescribe or limit the action of a subsequent Congress, but I think we can provide legislation which is permanent to that extent, and that unless a subsequent Congress shall determine otherwise, then this legislation might be called into being by the subsequent Congress.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me. I will be obliged to him if he will give me his view on the effect of this language at the end of the section, "and thereupon the powers conferred by this act shall be revived and in full force and effect." Does that attempt to bind a subsequent Congress?

Mr. HOCH. The subsequent Congress, knowing that the declaration of an emergency would revive these powers, would have it within its power to declare that the emergency existed and thereby automatically revive them. But if the Congress did not wish to revive the powers, it could refuse to declare the emergency, or it might declare it and put into effect a new law. But if it desired simply to declare an emergency and revive this act, it could do it by simply declaring the emergency.

Mr. BUTLER. Then we would bind a subsequent Congress, and therefore it seems to me the language employed is useless.

Mr. HOCH. We are not trying to bind any subsequent Congress, but to make it possible for the subsequent Congress to revive the act in a simple way if it desires.

Mr. BUTLER. The language is emphatic—"the powers conferred by this act shall be revived and in full force and effect."

Mr. HOCH. Certainly; but the Congress could repeal it or amend it if it so desired.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If the gentleman from Kansas will yield.

Mr. HOCH. I yield.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. When Congress wanted to revive the War Finance Corporation act, without any authority in the former act at all, the Congress in five lines passed a joint resolution reviving the War Finance Corporation act, and if any future Congress wanted to revive this act it could do it in the same way.

Mr. HOCH. The gentleman is addressing himself to the question whether it would be more simple to revise the law in that way than by a declaration of emergency. That is open to question. I was addressing myself simply to the effect of the amendment and the argument and interpretation placed on it by a gentleman in opposition. The gentleman abandons that interpretation, and says that while the effect might be the same it would be unnecessary because it would be as simple to revise the law.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts means anything, it would give the next Congress or any other Congress the authority to revive this far-reaching bill without any opportunity for amendment, if the legislators saw fit to bring in a resolution to that effect. I do not believe we can grant any authority to a subsequent Congress, or in any way bind its free judgment, but if we could I would be opposed to it in view of the far-reaching powers of this bill. I do not believe in placing in the hands of any one man the authority to say that the industries in my district are not as valuable as the industries in some other man's district, and therefore the industries in my district must go or that people in some other sections shall have fuel and the people in my section shall not have fuel. The fuel distributor if he saw fit to determine that in some section of the country the industries were not as important as in some other section he could say that this section may have coal and that section may not have coal. Of course, he would submit his recommendation to the Interstate Commerce Commission, but with all the business that devolves upon the Interstate Commerce Commission and its great number of activities we know that it would follow the recommendations of the fuel distributor. I remember the trouble we have heretofore had in the distribution of cars out of Washington.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Would not the gentleman be in favor of this if he knew that it would save human lives in the northern part of the country?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I would if it would save human lives by conferring this power, but even the wildest supporter of the measure has made no such claim as that. The business of this country is very complex. I do not believe the man has lived since the days of the organization of the Republic who can get in his own mind and fully comprehend the various complex merits and relative importance of the different industries and the different activities and the different needs of the various sections of this country. For example, I represent a district containing 53 counties and it has about the same population as the city of Baltimore.

Suppose my district needed a thousand tons of coal and Baltimore needed a thousand tons of coal and that there is just a thousand tons for the two places. There is no organization in any of my counties; they are not large enough to justify any great organization. Baltimore is so located that it could send 100 men to the fuel distributor to present and show the needs of that city. It could flood him with telegrams. No one would come from my section, and who do you suppose would get the 1,000 tons of coal? You are making by this section permanent law of the provisions contained elsewhere in the bill, which renders it possible to deny any section, community, or municipality what it may need in the way of fuel. I believe the amendment of my colleague should be adopted. The measure would not be so bad if the bill simply conferred the power to give priority in the shipment of coal over the shipment of other commodities, but it goes further in section 5 and says that they can enter an order against any community or region or municipality, and thus deny to that community or region or municipality the use of any coal.

If this measure passes in its present form they will be compelled to burn kaffir, fodder, and corn for fuel in some sections, while certain other congested and highly organized centers would have their supply of coal. I would vote for any legitimate legislation that would destroy profiteering and extortion in this essential commodity. But this legislation will not accomplish that end and is not meant to do so. It is simply a blind and a smoke screen to hide the real purposes that are behind its enactment. I would like any advocate of this bill to explain to me why it would not be possible for the fuel distributor to say one section of the country shall not get any coal, or shall get only a small amount, while another section shall get a great amount. I grant you that he probably would not intend to do that, but he could not possibly get all of the facts, in the first place, and, in the second place, it is too much power to place in the hands of any one man, I do not care how bright or how patriotic he may be. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am one of those who originally felt and still feels that section 9 in its original form should not be in this bill. I am willing to grant to the President this extraordinary, almost extraconstitutional power to meet a great emergency, but I am unwilling to grant to any future President the right to say that an emergency exists and so arrogate to himself such extraordinary power as the right to fix the price of an essential commodity. It does seem to me, however, that the committee amendment is not open to the same objections. It is not open to the same objections, because obviously in the future Congress may revive this legislation and so grant the power to the President. But gentlemen say, if that be so, what then do you accomplish by such an amendment—you are not increasing the power of a future Congress, and you certainly can not diminish its power. It seems to me that you accomplish just this: If you leave in section 9 unamended, you have met the existing emergency, and you have declared that when the existing emergency is at an end this policy shall be discontinued for all time. If you adopt section 9 as amended by the committee, you declare that we propose to meet the emergency to-day with this kind of legislation, and that when the emergency is over we will bring it to an end, but we announce to the country and to operators and men alike that we propose to deal with future emergencies in just this way. [Applause.] Legally you may not accomplish very much, but do not neglect the moral effect of saying that in the future we will see to it that the American people and the American consumer are not held up. It is the moral effect of holding a club over the head of people who may create emergencies that may be the very means of avoiding emergencies, something infinitely preferable to dealing with them when they arrive. [Applause.]

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, the preceding speaker attempted to supply a reason for what appears to be an absurdity, and he almost succeeded—almost but not quite. I am anxious to utilize an occasion, a very rare occasion, when I can agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. GRAHAM. I think he is absolutely right in his contention that section 9 should go out. He prefers that the entire section should go out. The moral effect, of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] so ably speaks, is accomplished by the enactment of this legislation. Congress has been called upon to deal with this problem, and it has dealt with the problem, not in a very effective way, I think, but still it has dealt with it. The moral effect is, therefore, accomplished. There is nothing to be gained by declaring now that a future Congress can revive the act by resolution. What substantial reason can be advanced for incorporating section 9 in the law as it is proposed to amend it?

No future Congress will be bound by it, and any future Congress can at any time reenact such a law. As the gentleman from Massachusetts recommends it to be amended it has no meaning at all, and it should go out. If a new emergency is to arise, let Congress be called upon to meet it. It is a dangerous thing to confer upon the President the extraordinary power of declaring an emergency.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that some confusing statements have been made in reference to section 9. If I can I want to clarify the situation somewhat. There are two separate questions presented by amendments pending before the House. The first question is whether or not the revival of the exercise of the powers of this act shall be by the President or by the Congress. The committee amendment proposes to change the bill as presented to the House and confer the power of reviving this act upon the Congress instead of the President.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. Not now.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman calls that a committee amendment. I never heard of it as such.

Mr. LEA of California. Well, the amendment that is offered by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Should not the gentleman make that clear?

Mr. LEA of California. There is no doubt about the fact. The chairman offered this amendment.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But it is not a committee amendment.

Mr. LEA of California. That is not an important consideration.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I think it is very important.

Mr. LEA of California. The point I am suggesting is the question that the House is going to pass on. I was speaking with reference to the effect rather than the source of the amendment. It is a question whether you are going to confer the power on the Congress or upon the President. The amendment proposed conforms to the constitutional method of letting the Congress by legislative declaration establish the facts upon which the power shall be exercised. I believe the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee in that respect should be adopted.

The other question is whether or not you are going to retain the machinery that this bill establishes. Let me give a crude illustration that emphasizes the point. Suppose a farm is threatened by overflow of water. The farmer does not know when the overflow is going to come, but it is liable to come with any freshet. The question here is whether the farmer shall provide his machinery for meeting that emergency or shall wait until the emergency comes before he provides both the machinery and the men to operate it. The plan suggested in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] is that we shall have the machinery established and on hand to meet the emergency, and that the only thing required to be done when the emergency arises is to provide a man to operate the machinery that is already on hand.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If they have the machinery in Washington, as they do, will not it be pretty hard for the farmer in California to get the facts before the man running the machine?

Mr. LEA of California. That is aside the question. The machinery is for this bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But you are providing machinery here in Washington.

Mr. LEA of California. The question whether or not you oppose this bill is one thing, and whether or not you want its operation and immediate operation in case of an emergency is another. The sufficiency of the propriety of the machinery adopted is not the question presented by this amendment.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, at this juncture it seems that we should do one of two things, either strike out section 9 entirely or leave section 9 exactly as it stands in the bill, so far as the power to call the emergency into effect is concerned. It seems to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is absolutely futile. What does it do? It says that Congress, by resolution, can call this legislation into effect. That is no more than to say that Congress can reenact the legislation, and what then would happen?

If a resolution of that kind was introduced it would call up every question which could be raised under the bill. It would take practically just as long to adopt that resolution as it would to reenact the legislation. The resolution would be a joint resolution of the Congress, and it would have to go to the President for his signature.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I yield.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Your colleague from New York says it is setting a precedent; that this is to be the future legislation.

Mr. HUSTED. I do not think it sets any precedent at all. It simply says to the country that the Congress may by resolution reenact this legislation. The country knows that already, and anybody with any common sense knows that already. You have got to pass a resolution; you have got to have a majority of both Houses to do it; and you have got to have the signature of the President. Now, you have got to have that, and no more than that, in the case of a bill, and if such a resolution should be brought into the House do you not think it would be discussed just as thoroughly; do you not think that every question would be raised under it, just as if the legislation itself was before the House? I not only believe that that amendment should not be adopted but I believe that section 9 should remain in the bill exactly as it is now. I am not afraid to leave this power in the hands of any future President. I can not conceive that any President of the United States would abuse this power, and if we had had this authority in the hands of the President two or three months ago we would not be in the situation in the country which we are in to-day. The reason why we are in our present situation in the matter of production and distribution of coal is very largely because the Government has had no power of control. If this legislation now is good for this emergency, why is it not good for any future emergency? I believe that the deterrent effect lies and lies only by leaving in the hands of any President of the United States the right to call immediately into effect, on the happening of any such emergency, the full powers of the Government conferred by this bill, so that he may be able to cope with the emergency and deal with it adequately and promptly. The element of time is of prime importance in the handling of these matters. And that element of time is provided for by allowing the President of the United States to call these powers into effect immediately on the arising of an emergency, such as faces the country at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time on the section has expired.

The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW].

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. To ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment. I feel that the section is utterly useless and ought to be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to withdraw his substitute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW.]

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] to strike out the section.

The question was taken and the Chair announced that he was in doubt.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 65, noes 62.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. WINSLOW and Mr. RAYBURN took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided, and there were—ayes 85, noes 64.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. Every person or corporation, whether carrier or shipper, who shall knowingly offer, grant, or give, or solicit, accept, or receive any concession or discrimination in respect of car service as the same is defined in paragraph (10) of section 1 of the interstate commerce act, in violation of any order, direction, or rule of the Interstate Commerce Commission in respect thereto, or who shall by any willful misrepresentation or by any fraudulent device or means whatsoever, procure or cause to be issued any order or direction for priority hereunder, or who shall knowingly or willfully use or cause to be used any fuel for purposes other than those for which any order or direction for priority is issued, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $20,000: Provided, That any person or any officer or director of any corporation subject to the provisions of this act, or the interstate commerce act and the acts amendatory thereof, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person acting for or employed by any such corporation, who shall be convicted as aforesaid, shall, in addition to the fine herein provided for, be liable to imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term not exceeding two years, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. Every violation of this section may be prosecuted in any court of the United States having jurisdiction of crimes within the district in which such violation is committed, or through which the transportation is conducted, or in which the car service is performed, or in which such concession or discrimination is granted, or given, or solicited or accepted, or received; and whenever the offense is begun in one jurisdiction and completed in another it may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in either jurisdiction in the same manner as if the offense had been actually and wholly committed therein.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Committee amendment: Page 6, line 18, strike out "9" and insert "10."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment. The Clerk informs the Chair that inasmuch as section 9 has just been stricken from the bill that committee amendment should be disagreed to. So the Chair will modify the statement by saying that, without objection, the amendment is rejected. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 6, line 18, after the word "corporation," strike out "whether carrier or shippers."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 7, line 2, after the word "hereunder," strike out "or who shall knowingly or willfully use or cause to be used any fuel for purposes other than those for which any order or direction for priority is issued" and insert "or whoever having obtained coal or other fuel through a priority order shall dispose of the same for purposes other than those for which said priority order was issued without the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Amend the committee amendment, lines 5 to 9, on page 7, by inserting after the word "order," in line 6, the words "or direction," and in line 7, after the word "order," by inserting the words "or direction," so that the said committee amendment will read as follows: "or whoever having obtained coal or other fuel through a priority order or direction shall dispose of the same for purposes other than those for which said priority order or direction was issued without the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. This is merely to conform to the text of the car service act as it has been written.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurring on the committee amendment as amended, the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, under the Articles of Confederation, in which the original States entered, one of the difficulties encountered was in the laws enacted by one State against another—creating tariffs and establishing embargoes—operating as barriers and retarding free trade among the Colonies, so that when the Constitution was framed in order to remedy that evil what we know as the commerce clause, consisting of 10 or 11 words, was provided, saying in substance that Congress should have power to regulate commerce between the States, with the Indian tribes, and with foreign countries, the main object being that commerce between the States should always be free; that there should be no impediments or retarders placed thereto. In harmony with that thought the courts have always construed the commerce clause liberally with the purpose of facilitating commerce between the States.

Beginning with Gibbons against Ogden (opinion by Marshall), the Supreme Court in an unbroken line of decisions—Munn against Illinois and the others of the Granger cases, the Covington Bridge case, the child-labor decision, and thousands of other cases—has labored to hold that commerce between the States should be absolutely free. For the first time in the history of our country Congress has undertaken to legislate on price fixing, not itself fixing the price but by doing a much more questionable thing, namely, attempting to delegate to an inferior tribunal the power to fix the price of a commodity that should move freely in the channels of trade and transportation. I am aware of the fact that, as has been stated here already, the Supreme Court has gone a long way in recognizing the power of Congress to do certain things with reference to commerce between States, and for that reason this Congress should be the more ready to guard and protect that organic instrument in the object and purpose that the people had and undertook to accomplish by it.

We feel that at times the court has been influenced by the passing waves of popular opinion, as evidenced by the decision construing the Reed amendment to the Agricultural bill, holding that if one for personal use should carry a flask of intoxicating liquor from one State into another that that person was engaged in interstate commerce, and again, if a man take a woman on a personal escapade from one State into another, that this was commerce between the States, and the man liable to a term in prison for violating the Mann Act directed against "white slavery." The court probably acted on the theory that the man was polluting the channels of interstate commerce. But the court has never gone so far as to hold that Congress has the right to fix a price for the commodity. If the Supreme Court has gone far afield this alone should be a reason why we should restrain our own activities and keep within constitutional limitations.

The rent acts decisions are not precisely parallel, because Congress had plenary power to deal with the District of Columbia, and in the New York case the Supreme Court, in review, merely recognized the power of that sovereign State to legislate on the subject. There was not involved the question of power delegated to the Federal Congress to legislate concerning the domestic affairs of the State.

Before proceeding further on the constitutional phase of the subject I wish to direct attention to the fact that I am not speaking solely for the coal industry of my district, although I have the honor to represent one of the greatest coal sections in the world—the smokeless fields of the Winding Gulf, the Pocahontas, and the Tug River regions. Secretary Hoover, in his testimony before the committee (p. 21 of the hearings), said this:

For instance, in the smokeless fields, the figures will show that less than 5 per cent of the coal out of that field has moved at over the fair price. The average price of coal in the smokeless field has been less than $3.50 per ton right straight through until the agreement was dissolved by the end of the strike.

This certificate from Secretary Hoover shows that the captains of a great industry came to Washington and voluntarily entered into an agreement with the Department of Commerce not to charge in excess of $3.50 a ton for the highest grade coal to be found in the land, and they have been faithful to their agreement—having charged less than the maximum allowed. Therefore this legislation to West Virginia operators is a gratuitous insult.

The public question is one of transportation and not of production. The mines are installed and ready to produce a great volume of coal. Rather, I think the committee had better have directed its attention to opening up the channels of interstate commerce. The committee should have devoted its time and attention to perfecting some plan whereby the railroads of the country might operate. Very little coal is sold at extortionate prices. Eighty per cent of the output of legitimate operators is sold on time contracts, running from April 1 to April 1. The few cars of coal that have been sold at extreme prices generally represent the product of some little one or two car a day mines, or wagon mines. If a coal operator shall sell 80 per cent of his output to a manufacturer, or other consumer, and then is only able to run his mine for two or three days in the week, as is now generally the case, due to inability to get labor and on account of car shortage, then that operator is not in a position to produce any "spot coal," for his 80 per cent contracted will more than absorb his actual production.

To remedy the situation we must provide for transportation. There will be plenty of coal in the markets wherever the cars are rolling.

Mr. Chairman, I now offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOODYKOONTZ: Page 6, line 18, strike out section 9.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, I presume that the gentlemen who are in favor of legislation of the general tenor of that incorporated in the bill are interested in keeping that legislation within constitutional limitations. The major portion of the bill——

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I yield.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Where does the gentleman get that idea?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. We admit for the purpose of argument that the gentlemen in good faith are interested in this legislation. If the bill shall pass, some little time must elapse before its constitutionality can be passed upon. The bill may for a few present the case of "good enough, Morgan, until after the election."

The major portion of the bill is a mere repetition of matter that was considered by the Congress and enacted into law by the transportation bill. By the transportation act the Interstate Commerce Commission was fully empowered to allocate cars, to promulgate priority orders and embargoes, to route and reroute cars, all of which was abundantly provided for in that legislation.

The only new thing that this bill undertakes to do is to lug in the condition that before a shipper can have his coal transported over an interstate line he must first submit the question as to the fairness of price of the commodity that he is to deliver to a tribunal—the Interstate Commerce Commission—whose chief duty should be to keep the channel open rather than to clog it, and if that tribunal shall be of opinion that the selling price amounts to extortion then cars are to be refused. The commission will thus become the all wise and all powerful tribunal before whom shippers must appear on bended knee and learn from delphiclike lips to the very cent, precisely, where fair dealing leaves off and extortion begins. It will be a sorry day for America when this bill becomes law. In granting the priority order the commission will assent to the price to be paid by the consignee, but if the coal goes over the road and one of the parties shall violate the terms of the order as respects price, or as to object and use of the coal so transported, then the offending person will be subjected to fine and also imprisonment, two years at the maximum, in the penitentiary.

Legislation of this character was condemned by the Supreme Court, clearly, in the case of the United States v. Cohen Grocery Co. (255 U. S. p. 81), which involved the Lever Act, and was decided, opinion written by Chief Justice White, February 28, 1921. The syllabus reads:

Section 4 of the food control act of August 10, 1917, as amended October 22, 1919, in denouncing and attaching a penalty of fine or imprisonment to the making by any person of "any unjust or unreasonable rate or charge in handling or dealing in or with any necessaries—

Which, of course, includes fuel—

must be construed as forbidding and penalizing the exaction of an excessive price upon the sale of a commodity."

In the body of the opinion (idem, p 89) the Chief Justice said:

Observe that the section forbids no specific or definite act. It confines the subject matter of the investigation which it authorizes to no element essentially inhering in the transaction as to which it provides. It leaves open, therefore, the widest conceivable inquiry, the scope of which no one can foresee, and the result of which no one can foreshadow or adequately guard against.

The court (idem, p. 93), in announcing the conclusion arrived at, said:

It follows from what we have said that, not forgetful of our duty to sustain the constitutionality of the statute, if ground can possibly be found to do so, we are nevertheless compelled in this case to say that we think the court below was clearly right in holding the statute void for repugnancy to the Constitution, and its judgment, quashing the indictment on that ground must be, and it is hereby, affirmed.

In view of the fact that the Lever Act was an exertion of the war power of Congress and was declared unconstitutional and therefore void, it is somewhat difficult for me to understand upon what theory constitutional lawyers in the House base their opinion that the bill before us would be held valid if passed as an act of Congress.

Gentlemen on the floor have verbally castigated and vituperated the coal operators, but they have been very cautious not to say anything against the retailer, the jobber, and the "coal bootlegger." There is nothing in the bill to protect the public from any undue exactions of the jobber and the retailer. The people have asked for bread and you give them a stone—by this bill you give them nothing.

The bill is socialistic and vicious. If the commission be given the power to fix the price of coal, it may also be given the power to fix the price of cotton and wheat and shoes. The price so to be fixed may be maximum or minimum. As an incident, wages may be fixed. Differentials may be allowed concerning union or nonunion labor, affecting the commodity. You have entered upon a new field, the length and breadth of which none of us can see. It is without limit. It is the field of socialism. And very strange it is that among those who have entered upon the new field are to be found the representatives of manufacturing—New England and financial New York—all meekly following the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], the only Socialist in the House who is frank enough to admit that he is a Socialist.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. STAFFORD). The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the question is whether we are going to put teeth in this act and penalize anyone from obtaining a priority through fraud or willful misrepresentation or from selling coal contrary to the expressed purpose upon which it was asked for and issued. The motion to strike out the section should be voted down. I now ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that debate on this section and amendments thereto be now closed. Is there objection?

Mr. WOODYARD. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, then, that the debate on the section and all amendments thereto close in six minutes.

Mr. OLIVER. As I understand, that does not preclude an amendment that seeks to add a new section?

The CHAIRMAN. In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Alabama, the Chair will state that the amendment to add a new section is not an amendment to the pending section. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in six minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to have one minute in which to ask a question.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will modify my request and make it seven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota modifies his request to seven minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WOODYARD] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WOODYARD. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with considerable interest to the arguments advanced in behalf of this legislation. The principal one seems to be that profiteering in coal exists in this country and for that reason the coal operators are responsible for it, and this legislation is intended to correct that condition.

In the first place, I want to say that I hold no brief for the National Coal Operators' Association nor for the coal operators of my State. I am not aware that I know a single member of the National Coal Operators' Association, and possibly not more than five or six coal operators in my State. Outside of one or two small operations, I have no coal mines in my district. But, Mr. Chairman, I can not sit silent and hear men who have contributed so largely to the development of such a great State as my own maligned, as I believe they are, when the charge is made that they are profiteering. As my colleague [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ] just now stated, they have gone into a voluntary agreement with the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hoover, to regulate the price of coal during this period. We may have an emergency in this country at this time, but it is not the first time that condition has existed, and it is not going to be the last time.

I deplore this idea of coming to Congress and asking for legislation to remedy all kinds of conditions that prevail throughout this country. I insist that this legislation is absolutely socialistic, and if we continue to recognize and advance it in this House I shall not be surprised to soon see the farmers of this country coming into this body and asking us to give them a law whereby they can settle their differences in regard to a line fence.

Mr. Chairman, no statement of fact has been presented to this House to show where there has been any evidence of profiteering on the part of the coal operators of this country, and I want to express here my decided opposition to this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. WOODYARD. I reserve the balance of my time, and I yield one minute to my colleague Mr. ROSENBLOOM.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not yield any time.

Mr. WOODYARD. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. The objections that have heretofore been made to the pending bill have been so numerous and have covered the ground so thoroughly that there remains but little to be said. I shall consume little time in voicing my objections to the measure.

The most noticeable fact with regard to the bill is that while it is generally conceded by every Member who has discussed it as being the most important bill to be considered by Congress, and while it will receive the vote of those Members of Congress who, by reason of their ability for clear thinking and expression of thought, have become recognized here and throughout the Nation as the leaders of their respective parties in Congress, these gentlemen are strangely silent on a matter of such admitted importance.

The great hue and cry being made for the passage of this bill comes from those whose sole argument is that it is necessary to prevent extortion; to prevent conscienceless profiteering. There are several words in the English language that have by discreet usage become the inseparable ally of persons desiring legislation for selfish purposes. When neither reason, fact, logic, or argument avail the practice is to subtly charge profiteering, extortion, or Bolshevism. All of these base eventualities are honestly feared, or, at least, earnestly charged by the advocates of the pending measure, who anticipate dire consequences if the ordinary economic law of supply and demand be permitted to prevail in the coal industry.

There is an ancient legal maxim, familiar to all of the gentlemen: "When you have a bad case of your own, throw mud at your opponent." Failing in their attempt to show reasonable need for legislation such as proposed in the pending measure, and realizing their failure, some of the gentlemen have adopted the nowadays popular subterfuge of referring to the persons connected with the industry which this legislation will affect as profiteers. Such references are probably intended to elicit the help of those who prefer not to be identified with parties who have been so designated or to alienate their assistance from those advocating the rights and privileges of the industry falsely designated as profiteers, merely as a substitute for logic to defend their own position.

The clamor for legislation to fix the price of coal comes from all parts of the country, except where coal is produced. In localities where the citizens have invested their money, their intelligence, their time, their lives, where men earn their daily bread for themselves and their families by producing coal, these people rightfully object and protest against the radical departure from long-established Government administration, permissible under this bill, to have the Government regulate and dictate prices and practice in their industry. It has been oft repeated that this is the first time in the history of the country where the Government has attempted such a policy, and I reiterate with all possible emphasis that such practice is essentially dangerous.

Should this legislation be enacted, you gentlemen who are advocating it will some day be confronted with similar situations. If you undertake to fix the price of coal to-day when the price of shoes advances, when the price of cotton goods soars, when the price of meat goes to a higher figure, when there is a big demand for wheat—when all of the human necessities, by reason of the law of supply and demand, become inadequate to meet the demand, and the price rises correspondingly, then we will see future sessions of Congress considering similar legislation with regard to each of those commodities. Again, I say, such a precedent as contemplated in the bill is essentially dangerous. Need I mention to the gentlemen from Boston that there are more people who wear shoes than produce them; to the gentlemen from Chicago that there are more people who eat meat than produce it; to the gentlemen from Kansas that there are more people who eat flour than produce it, and so on ad infinitum.

In the production of coal the producers are divided into two classes—operators and miners. The consumers of coal are those who throughout the breadth of our country are dependent upon coal for their fuel. These consumers are public and private, of which the majority are public—those who use the coal for operation of public utilities, street car companies, electric light, power, and public utilities of various kinds. During the past four or five years these public consumers of coal have increased their prices from 200 to 800 per cent for the services they have been rendering society.

Coal is a vital necessity for the continued operation of their plants, and the increase in price of coal has never corresponded with the increased price which they charged. There was no loud clamor voiced in Congress for the regulation of the price of those commodities, for the reason that in every congressional district in this country citizens had their money invested in those businesses. Any attempt to override the law of supply and demand in connection with those industries would, of course, be heard from at home in every part of this country.

Therefore without making a case or in any way showing the necessity for this legislation directed against the producers of coal, merely by brute strength and by reason of the fact that there are so many more consumers than producers you are asked to take this radical departure from established governmental practice and inject "less government in business and more business in government."

The contention that coal at $10 or $12 a ton delivered in the far West is extortionate and is indicative of profiteering by the industry is ridiculous. It is my opinion that coal heretofore has been sold too cheap, when you realize that in order to produce coal men take their capital, invest it in one of the most hazardous businesses, and are continually facing the possibility that they will be destroyed by forces over which they have no control. A man who invests in a coal mine knows not at what moment his entire investment may be wiped out. Some unthinking miner might strike a match to light his pipe, ignite gases far below the surface of the earth, and the result of years of toil, the fortunes of many people engaged in the coal-mining industry, together with the lives of many of the men who are engaged in digging coal, may be wiped out in an instant. There can be no insurance against this risk.

The miner who digs this coal must arise at the break of the day, descend deep into the bowels of the earth, hundreds of feet below the surface, and at the bottom of the mine shaft find his way through the ever-present darkness with the aid of a pit lamp to the face of the vein which he is working, maybe a mile or 2 or 3 miles from the foot of the shaft. He finds his way through the darkness, with water dripping from the walls and the roof of the mine, and begins to dig the coal, being constantly alert that the roof of the mine above him does not cave and crush out his life; often the water is over the top of his shoes; often he must lie on his back or side to dig the nuggets which are so essential to commerce and industry. After he has completed a most arduous day under conditions which could not well be made more unfavorable his reward from society is about enough to eat for himself and his dependents, without the possibility of being able to lay aside sufficient for the day which may come when he shall be taken from his place of employment crushed, bruised, or carried home dead to his little family group.

I contend that any man whose service to society in the production of so essential a commodity is necessary should not be asked to labor for a wage that is less than would guarantee him at the end of 12 or 15 years sufficient to be independent for the remaining years of his life.

While the gentlemen who have preceded me on the floor have urged legislation to limit the price of coal to $4 a ton, I believe that a price to the coal operator sufficient to allow him to pay $4 a ton to the miner alone would not be too high.

The inevitable result of fixing a price on coal will be to reduce the wages of the men who produce it; it will be a reduction in the profits of those who engage in this business, operator or miner, and in the final summing up it means a reduction in the production of coal—the last thing to be desired in this emergency. Men operating small wagon mines, as they are called, men operating thin veins of coal, men who by reason of contracts with their labor and with the royalties they must pay, will not, under such conditions, speed up their production, nor will they make any serious effort to remain in business.

The principal function of the Government at this time should be to see that adequate car service is rendered, but to undertake to cure the situation with a statute aiming to replace the natural law of supply and demand can have but one effect and that effect disastrous.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the committee to the words "or both such fine and imprisonment," in line 19, page 7. The proviso states, in line 17, page 7, that in addition to the fine herein provided for, anyone convicted shall be liable to imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term not exceeding two years, or both such fine and imprisonment. Of course, those words "or both such fine and imprisonment" are mere surplusage and should go out, because this imprisonment is in addition to the fine, in the discretion of the court. I offer the following amendment.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. What are the words proposed to be stricken out?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In line 19, page 7, strike out the words "or both such fine and imprisonment" and the comma after the word "imprisonment."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHINDBLOM: Page 7, line 19, after the word "years," strike out "or both such fine and imprisonment" and the comma.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia to strike out the section.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OLIVER: Add a new section, to be numbered 10 and to read as follows:

"If any State shall, through duly constituted authority, fix and promulgate sale-price schedules f. o. b. mines for coal mined in said State, the Federal fuel distributor and Interstate Commerce Commission shall recognize said State price schedules as establishing reasonable maximum sale prices for coal mined in such State."

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, the proponents of this bill concede that the right to fix prices is vested in the States, and the claim is made that this bill in no way infringes on or abridges rights so vested in the States. The amendment I offer is drawn for the purpose of giving protection to those rights when lawfully exercised by the States.

It is needless to call attention of the House to the embarrassments that might follow if Federal officials in Washington, vested with rights under this bill, should undertake, by indirection or otherwise, to annul and render ineffective a clear constitutional right exercised by a sovereign State.

This amendment simply seeks to give protection and respect to any lawful act of a State which seeks to declare and promulgate f. o. b. price schedules for coal mined in such State and to forbid Federal officials, under the pending act, from declaring as reasonable any price which exceeds that lawfully fixed by State authority. It relates only to f. o. b. prices on coal in the States where mined, and makes the State price schedule, if lawfully promulgated, the maximum price that coal operators may charge for mine deliveries.

Mr. WINSLOW. For the purpose of information I should like to ask if, under the gentleman's amendment, the Federal authorities would have the right to fix a lower price?

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, yes. The amendment simply says that the fuel distributor and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall recognize schedules lawfully fixed by State authority as the maximum price that operators may demand or receive, with Federal sanction, for the sale of coal f. o. b. cars at their mines. The amendment is limited to f. o. b. prices at the mines for coal mined in the States, and then only in cases where the State in the exercise of lawful authority has declared and promulgated a price schedule.

It is to restrain the Federal fuel administrator or the Interstate Commerce Commission from declaring a price as reasonable in excess of that fixed by duly constituted State authority, and only applies to coal mined in the State and to mine-delivery prices.

Mr. WINSLOW. Is there any reason under this bill why the Federal authorities could not make as high a price as they wanted to?

Mr. OLIVER. The Federal authorities, as the gentleman has announced here, are not clothed with any authority to fix the price of coal. They may ascertain whether or not the operator is charging an unreasonable price, and if they so ascertain they can deny to him cars to ship the coal.

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. This amendment simply seeks to lend respect to the act of a sovereign State in fixing reasonable mine-delivery prices for coal mined in the State.

Mr. WINSLOW. For interstate commerce?

Mr. OLIVER. For any coal mined in the State.

Mr. WINSLOW. In other words, the Federal authority would have to consult the State authority to find out the maximum before they made a decision as to whether or not they were charging an extortionate price.

Mr. OLIVER. Every official is charged with notice of State law, and if a State in the exercise of its lawful authority has properly fixed and promulgated a schedule of prices f. o. b. mines for coal mined in the State, Federal officials should take notice of it and not be allowed under this or any other act of Congress to fix prices in excess of the State f. o. b. mine price, when coal is purchased at the mines in such State. In other words, the amendment simply seeks to protect the basic mine price if lawfully declared by a State as to coal mined in such State, and in no way would prevent proper freight and handling charges from being added thereto.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW], as well as all who have spoken in support of the pending measure, recognizes that States may in the exercise of sovereignty fix prices on certain essential commodities, and where such right exists and is lawfully exercised, I feel it should be respected by Federal officials.

Mr. WINSLOW. If I understand the procedure, we might have 48 different prices that a distributor would have to pay. It seems to me the difficulty in working it out would add to the labor and work confusion in the situation and would not help this bill at all.

Mr. OLIVER. A little labor is a cheap price to pay for properly respecting the exercise of constitutional rights by the States.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, of all the amendments offered here so far which would make the bill ineffective, the one offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] would assist most in putting this legislation to sleep if it were enacted into law. We all know that coal is mined principally in the States of Pennsylvania, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and Alabama. We know that the State of Pennsylvania has put a tax on each ton of coal produced in that State before it can leave the State. We know that under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in re Singer Sewing Machine Co. v. Buckell (233 U. S. p. 304) that such a tax has been held constitutional.

As has been said by Mr. Justice Pitney, on page 316:

> The contention that the statute violates the State constitution is grounded upon two sections of the Bill of Rights, viz, No. 1, "that all men are equally free and independent; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness"; and No. 37, "that the sole object and only legitimate end of government is to protect the citizen in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property; and when the government assumes other functoins, it is usurpation and oppression."
>
> The bearing of these provisions upon the case in hand is not clear. The argument seems to be that since the tax law in question is not a police measure but a revenue measure the discriminations are arbitrary. To quote from the brief: "Selling sewing machines is the business, and it is taxed highly, and it may be in fact prohibitorily, when it is done by the use of wagons and teams, and not at all when done at stores." There are other suggestions of a like import. They seem to be sufficiently answered by what has been already said respecting the "equal protection" clause of the fourteenth amendment. The State has a wide range of discretion with respect to establishing classes for the purpose of imposing revenue taxes, and its laws upon the subject are not to be set aside as discriminatory unless it clearly appears that there is no rational basis for the classification.

That being the decision of the court, it is our duty to respect it, for we are still a government controlled by laws and not by individuals having their own personal gain solely in view.

The great State of New York, with a population of 10,384,829, pays 33 to 35 per cent of all the taxes collected in the United States. If this amendment is adopted, the fuel administrator of the State of Alabama would fix the price, or two prices, one for the State of Alabama and one for such coal as leaves that State for consumption in other States. It puts the people of New York and New England at his mercy. Under this amendment the residents of the other States which have no coal mines would be compelled to take the price so fixed as the minimum price. We all know from the history of price fixing by distributers that the minimum price has always been the maximum price at the outset.

Mr. Chairman, there is an emergency in this country. When men arise here and say there is no emergency they either have not read the newspapers or are not acquainted with the facts.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. I was under the impression that this bill was intended to prevent parties from charging an unreasonable price for coal at the mine. If the gentleman's position is correct you are hopeful that the Fuel Administrator will fix an amount largely in excess of that which the State permits to be charged at the mines for the delivery of coal.

Mr. SIEGEL. I believe not. The gentleman's amendment would permit one price for people residing in Alabama and a higher price for those residing elsewhere.

Some of the gentlemen who have been arguing that an owner's right to transfer property can not be limited are probably unfamiliar with the statutes of the various States requiring conditional sales to be recorded, and with the laws which require certain conditions precedent to be performed before sales of merchandise in bulk can be deemed valid.

For instance, Indiana has a law in reference to taking of natural gas. Read Ohio Oil Co. v. Indiana (177 U. S. 190).

An emergency, as I have stated, is here, and if during that time the coal business necessitates the right of public regulation in order to deal with that emergency, I am confident that the courts will sustain the exercise by Congress of that right for the public good.

In the recent rent cases which came before the Supreme Court of the United States the legal principles which underlie the question which is before this House was discussed at great length by Mr. Justice Holmes in Two hundred and fifty-sixth United States Reports, page 153, and I quote in part from pages 154, 155, and 156:

> No doubt it is true that a legislative declaration of facts that are material only as the ground for enacting a rule of law, for instance, that a certain use is a public one, may not be held conclusive by the courts. (Shoemaker v. United States, 147 U. S. 282, 298; Hairston v. Danville & Western Ry. Co., 208 U. S. 598, 606; Prentis v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 211 U. S. 210, 227; Producers' Transportation Co. v. Railroad Commission, 251 U. S. 228, 230.) But a declaration by a legislature concerning public conditions that by necessity and duty it must know, is entitled at least to great respect. In this instance Congress stated a publicly notorious and almost world-wide fact. That the emergency declared by the statute did exist must be assumed, and the question is whether Congress was incompetent to meet it in the way in which it has been met by most of the civilized countries of the world.
>
> The general proposition to be maintained is that circumstances have clothed the letting of buildings in the District of Columbia with a public interest so great as to justify regulation by law. Plainly circumstances may so change in time or so differ in space as to clothe with such interest what at other times or in other places would be a matter of purely private concern. It is enough to refer to the decisions as to insurance, in German Alliance Insurance Co. v. Lewis (233 U. S. 389); irrigation, in Clark v. Nash (198 U. S. 361); and mining, in Strikley v. Highland Boy Gold Mining Co. (200 U. S. 527). They sufficiently illustrate what hardly would be denied. They illustrate also that the use by the public generally of each specific thing affected can not be made the test of public interest (Mt. Vernon-Woodberry Cotton Duck Co. v. Alabama Interstate Power Co., 240 U. S. 30, 32), and that the public interest may extend to the use of land. They dispel the notion that what in its immediate aspect may be only a private transaction may not be raised by its class or character to a public affair. See also Noble State Bank v. Haskell (219 U. S. 104, 110, 111).

The fact that tangible property is also visible tends to give a rigidity to our conception of our rights in it that we do not attach to others less concretely clothed. But the notion that the former are exempt from the legislative modification required from time to time in civilized life is contradicted not only by the doctrine of eminent domain, under which what is taken is paid for, but by that of the police power in its proper sense, under which property rights may be cut down and to that extent taken without pay. Under the police power the right to erect buildings in a certain quarter of a city may be limited to from 80 to 100 feet. (Welch v. Swasey, 214 U. S. 91.) Safe pillars may be required in coal mines. (Plymouth Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 531.) Billboards in cities may be regulated. (St. Louis Poster Advertising Co. v. St. Louis, 249 U. S. 269.) Watersheds in the country may be kept clear. (Perley v. North Carolina, 249 U. S. 510.) These cases are enough to establish that a public exigency will justify the legislature in restricting property rights in land to a certain extent without compensation. But if to answer one need the legislature may limit height, to answer another it may limit rent. We do not perceive any reason for denying the justification held good in the foregoing cases to a law limiting the property rights now in question if the public exigency requires that. The reasons are of a different nature, but they certainly are not less pressing. Congress has stated the unquestionable embarrassment of Government and danger to the public health in the existing condition of things. The space in Washington is necessarily monopolized in comparatively few hands, and letting portions of it is as much a business as any other. Housing is a necessary of life. All the elements of a public interest justifying some degree of public control are present. The only matter that seems to us open to debate is whether the statute goes too far. For just as there comes a point at which the police power ceases and leaves only that of eminent domain, it may be conceded that regulations of the present sort pressed to a certain height might amount to a taking without due process of law. (Martin v. District of Columbia, 205 U. S. 135, 139.)

It is my contention, therefore, that it is not only our duty but our constitutional right to alleviate as much as possible the terrible conditions which we are going to face this winter. We are here for the purpose of acting for and in behalf of what is the best interests of the entire American people and not for any particular class, be they either coal operators or miners.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Certainly.

Mr. ROSE. Is it not the opinion of the gentleman that the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama would result in the surrendering of all the powers of the Federal Government to the several States?

Mr. SIEGEL. No question about that. You would set up 48 State coal distributors who would determine what is a fair and reasonable price of coal. I have listened patiently to the debate here during three days, and I feel it my duty and obligation as a Member of this House to plead for prompt and effective legislation which will give notice to all that we are still a Government able to cope with any and all emergencies created by selfish man.

[Mr. SIEGEL had leave to extend his remarks.]

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I do not know as I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, but if I do I do not believe his last statement agrees with my interpretation of it. In other words, he asks that this law be made so that the Federal Government must recognize the maximum price fixed in the State by the State commission. Suppose they should make a maximum price of $9, this would make the Federal Government say it was a reasonable price.

West Virginia may pass a law fixing $7 and Indiana may pass a law fixing $3. It would not be fair; that is clearly not fair. You think you are going to regulate, but I do not think you are going to do much regulating under this act when the time comes. In Indiana we had a coal commission and they fixed the price, but an injunction was immediately obtained saying that they could not interfere with the production of our coal for the reason that they were interfering with interstate commerce. That same coal company, when this legislation goes into effect, is going to claim that the Federal Government is interfering with intrastate commerce and that the Federal Government can not be heard to say what coal they shall ship inside the limits of the State nor the price they shall receive. But if you are going to have this sort of legislation do not adopt an amendment of this kind. It will defeat the purpose you are trying to bring about. The legislation is wrong within itself. As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] stated the other day, I do not want to be one of those wreckers who will help to wreck my country, and I am saying to you to-day that this bill which is being forced through here is the greatest departure from our fundamental form of government that has come on the floor of Congress in half a century.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] says that there is an emergency. It was the opinion of this House yesterday that the President ought to have the right to declare an emergency any time he wanted to, so far as the production of coal is concerned. Well, for heaven's sake, if you can do that, it is just as consistent for you to pass a law saying that the President shall have the right to declare an emergency so far as food is concerned, because, God knows, people get hungry, and so far as clothing is concerned, because we all know that people get cold. Gentlemen, you are setting a precedent that will come back to plague you. You will have to meet it before your constituents; but I have got the nerve to face it now, notwithstanding the fact that my administration is demanding it.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SIEGEL. Has the gentleman read the opinion of the Supreme Court in the rent cases, wherein they held that what Congress says is an emergency is deemed to be the fact?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I think there is no Supreme Court holding that under the declaration of an emergency the Federal Government can regulate the price of a commodity which a man produces. If there is such an opinion, then it is the end of government, because if Congress can declare an emergency it can declare one at any time on anything, whether there be an emergency in fact or not. No; I can not yield further. The gentleman from New York, as well as some others here, are bristling with prejudice against the coal industry. They do not produce any coal in New York, but they consume it, so they are willing to legislate the coal industry down. The manufacturing industries of the East will be regulated down in years to come. The agricultural interests of the West will find that this precedent will come up to plague them, because they will find that their products will be regulated by law through this overpowering Federal Government that seeks to go out into the States and say to a man that the thing which he manufactures or that he produces must be sold for so much. I know that the men gathering around in the cities and congested places are going to say that the food products are too high. They will claim that the price of the Angora goat hair in Texas and the onions produced there are too high, and that we have to regulate that price down, and give some man all power to do it, and wheat and corn will go the same route. The way it is proposed to be done is to say that we will not give the producer any cars to ship his stuff in if he violates the regulations of the dictator. If you recognize that as a constitutional doctrine, then you have recognized that the Federal Government has the right directly to fix prices. If it has the right to fix prices, it has the right to fix wages. Would not you like to be a Member of Congress when the fixing of wages and prices by law becomes the habit? My mouth will not be closed by my vote to-day when that unhappy hour arrives, and if this foolish legislation ever gets by the Senate it is certain to be the precedent unless the courts save us from our folly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that debate upon the pending amendment and amendments thereto be now closed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $250,000, available until expended, for the purposes of this act, including payment of personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and all expenses incident to organizing the Federal fuel distribution, and not exceeding $50,000 thereof shall be available for reimbursement and payment upon specific approval of the President of expenses incurred since May 15, 1922, in connection with the matters embraced in the title of this act under authority of the President.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 8, line 6, strike out the figures "10" and insert the figures "11."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that amendment will be disagreed to because of the elimination of section 9. The Clerk will report the other committee amendments.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 10, after the word "organizing" insert the words "the work of."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 11, strike out the word "distribution" and insert the word "distributor."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I now send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Page 8, line 10, after the word "the," strike out "Federal fuel distributor" and insert "President's fuel distribution committee."

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the change in the text is to conform to the proper title of the preliminary organization that was called into being by the President some several weeks ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Page 8, line 14, after the word "with," strike out the balance of the line and all of line 15 and insert "the work of the President's fuel distribution committee organized for the purpose of helping to meet the emergency existing in the matter of fuel."

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is merely to so change the text as to take care of the expenses of the President's fuel distribution committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SANDERS of Indiana: Page 8, line 15, after the word "President," insert a new section, to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. Except as to prosecutions for offenses, the provisions of this act shall cease to be in force and effect at the end of one year from the date of its passage."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the Committee of the Whole has stricken out section 9, and those of us who have been making a fight against this legislation as permanent think we have won a victory. We have not. That amendment is subject to being voted on in the House. A great many Members have not heard the debate and the vote is close, and, mark my words, nine chances out of ten section 9 will go back in the bill. If it does, and when it does this is permanent legislation, unless we at the present time fix the duration of it. I have prepared a series of amendments, the first limiting the time to one year. I think this emergency ought to be limited to one year. If that amendment shall be voted down, I shall offer an amendment limiting it to two years. If that shall be voted down, I shall offer successive amendments up to the point of five years. I want to give this House an opportunity to write into this law that it is emergency legislation by which we undertake to depart from the fundamentals of government and fix the price of a commodity.

It is permanent unless you do, because a half century from now any Executive may bring it into full force and effect. You may say that the Congress can repeal it, but I want to repeat what I said the other day, because there are some Members here who were not here then, that this matter is in our hands now. When it passes from us it passes into the hands of the Chief Executive, and you can not take that vast, perpetual power out of his hands against his will and over his veto without a two-thirds majority of the House and Senate. So I warn you now, while we have the opportunity we should write a limitation into this law.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman let me make a suggestion? This is experimental legislation, as he says, and ought not to be made permanent. In order to render his proposition perfectly defensible, why does he not change it so as to provide that the act will only operate, say, until the next Congress will certainly be in session.

The first Monday in December, 1923, is the time for the convening of the next Congress. Fix the date as of the first Monday in December, 1923, or the 1st of January, 1924. That would not extend the period very much beyond the one year provided by the gentleman's amendment, and it would relieve the amendment, it seems to me, of any possible criticism.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am more anxious that this amendment shall carry in some form of limitation than I am to have any particular time fixed. I think the suggestions of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] are worthy of adoption, and I shall ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, if the Clerk will do the work, to change the amendment to limit the time to the first Monday in January, 1924.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. All right. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment which I offered, which will strike out the period of one year and insert in lieu thereof the termination on January 1, 1924.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment to his amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SANDERS of Indiana: Page 8, line 15, after the word "President," insert a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. Except as to prosecutions for offenses, the provisions of this act shall cease to be in force and effect January 1, 1924."

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield for a question?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman's amendment be in conflict with section 9 in the event it goes back into the bill?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I call to the attention of the membership that the House is very likely to put back section 9. Whether it does or not, this ought to be adopted, because in section 8 there is a provision that the President may determine when the emergency ceases, and then the President may terminate the provisions of the act. That leaves it permanent legislation unless the President shall use his option and terminate the legislation. It does not say that it shall be the duty of the President to do so. He might think the emergency had ended, and yet, under the circumstances, we have conferred upon him the power and authority to carry it along, irrespective of whether there is a continuance of an emergency or not, and we ought now to write into this law this limitation upon the duration of time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] to the amendment which he has already offered.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House as amended, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12472, had instructed him to report the same to the House with certain amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. According to the rule, the previous question has been ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I desire a separate vote on the amendment by virtue of which section 9 was stricken from the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. WINSLOW. In the event the amendment striking out section 9 from the bill should be voted down, I shall demand a separate vote on the Sanders amendment at the end of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the other amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment on which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] demanded a separate vote, and which amendment the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RAYBURN: Page 6, line 1, strike out all of section 9.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. On what is the vote being taken?

The SPEAKER. On the motion of the gentleman from Texas to strike out section 9.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 69, noes 66.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the motion to strike out section 9 of the bill will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 124, nays 148, answered "present" 3, not voting 152, as follows:

YEAS—124.

Ackerman	Dyer	Linthicum	Sanders, Tex.
Almon	Echols	London	Sandlin
Aswell	Ellis	Lowrey	Slemp
Bankhead	Favrot	Luhring	Smithwick
Bird	Fisher	Lyon	Snell
Bixler	Foster	McClintic	Sproul
Black	Garner	McCormick	Steagall
Blakeney	Garrett, Tex.	McLaughlin, Mich.	Strong, Kans.
Bland, Ind.	Goodykoontz	Madden	Sumners, Tex.
Bland, Va.	Graham, Pa.	Mansfield	Swank
Bowers	Hammer	Millspaugh	Taylor, Tenn.
Bowling	Harrison	Moore, Ohio	Thomas
Box	Hayden	Moore, Va.	Tillman
Briggs	Hickey	Morgan	Tucker
Buchanan	Hill	Mudd	Tyson
Bulwinkle	Hoch	Murphy	Underhill
Burke	Huddleston	Oliver	Upshaw
Butler	Hudspeth	Park, Ga.	Vaile
Byrnes, S. C.	Jefferis, Nebr.	Parker, N. Y.	Vinson
Cable	Jeffers, Ala.	Parks, Ark.	Ward, N. Y.
Chandler, Okla.	Jones, Pa.	Pou	Weaver
Chindblom	Jones, Tex.	Quin	Wheeler
Collier	Kendall	Rankin	Williams, Ill.
Cooper, Wis.	Ketcham	Rayburn	Williams, Tex.
Coughlin	Kincheloe	Reed, W. Va.	Wilson
Crago	Kirkpatrick	Ricketts	Wingo
Crisp	Kraus	Robsion	Wood, Ind.
Denison	Langley	Rose	Woodyard
Doughton	Lanham	Rosenbloom	Wurzbach
Drane	Layton	Rouse	Wyant
Driver	Lee, Ga.	Sanders, Ind.	Zihlman

NAYS—148.

Anderson	Dowell	Johnson, S. Dak.	Paige
Andrew, Mass.	Elliott	Johnson, Wash.	Parker, N. J.
Andrews, Nebr.	Evans	Kearns	Patterson, Mo.
Ansorge	Fairchild	Kelly, Pa.	Perkins
Atkeson	Fairfield	Kennedy	Perlman
Bacharach	Faust	Kindred	Purnell
Barbour	Fenn	King	Radcliffe
Barkley	Fess	Kissel	Ramseyer
Begg	Fish	Kleczka	Ransley
Benham	Fitzgerald	Kline, N. Y.	Reece
Boies	Focht	Kline, Pa.	Rhodes
Bond	Fordney	Knutson	Roach
Britten	Free	Kopp	Rogers
Brooks, Ill.	French	Kreider	Rossdale
Brooks, Pa.	Frothingham	Lampert	Sanders, N. Y.
Burdick	Fuller	Lawrence	Scott, Tenn.
Burtness	Glynn	Lazaro	Shaw
Campbell, Pa.	Gorman	Lea, Calif.	Siegel
Cannon	Graham, Ill.	Leatherwood	Sinnott
Chalmers	Green, Iowa	Longworth	Smith, Idaho
Chandler, N. Y.	Greene, Mass.	McFadden	Smith, Mich.
Christopherson	Greene, Vt.	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Speaks
Clague	Griest	McPherson	Stafford
Clarke, N. Y.	Hadley	MacGregor	Stephens
Cole, Iowa	Hardy, Colo.	Magee	Sweet
Cole, Ohio	Hardy, Tex.	Mapes	Taylor, Colo.
Colton	Haugen	Michener	Taylor, N. J.
Cooper, Ohio	Hawley	Mills	Timberlake
Crowther	Hays	Moores, Ind.	Towner
Cullen	Henry	Morin	Treadway
Curry	Hersey	Newton, Minn.	Vestal
Dale	Hogan	Norton	Volk
Dallinger	Hull	O'Brien	Volstead
Darrow	Husted	O'Connor	Walters
Davis, Minn.	Hutchinson	Ogden	Ward, N. C.
Dempsey	Ireland	Olpp	Winslow
Dickinson	James	Osborne	Young

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3.

Edmonds	Mondell	Schall

NOT VOTING—152.

Anthony	Burroughs	Codd	Dunbar
Appleby	Burton	Collins	Dunn
Arentz	Byrns, Tenn.	Connally, Tex.	Dupré
Beck	Campbell, Kans.	Connell	Fields
Beedy	Cantrill	Connolly, Pa.	Frear
Bell	Carew	Copley	Freeman
Blanton	Carter	Cramton	Fulmer
Brand	Clark, Fla.	Davis, Tenn.	Funk
Brennan	Classon	Deal	Gahn
Brown, Tenn.	Clouse	Dominick	Gallivan
Browne, Wis.	Cockran	Drewry	Garrett, Tenn.
Gensman	Lehlbach	Overstreet	Stiness
Gernerd	Lineberger	Patterson, N. J.	Stoll
Gilbert	Little	Petersen	Strong, Pa.
Goldsborough	Logan	Porter	Sullivan
Gould	Luce	Pringey	Summers, Wash.
Griffin	McArthur	Rainey, Ala.	Swing
Hawes	McDuffie	Rainey, Ill.	Tague
Herrick	McKenzie	Raker	Taylor, Ark.
Hicks	McLaughlin, Pa.	Reber	Temple
Himes	McSwain	Reed, N. Y.	Ten Eyck
Hooker	Maloney	Riddick	Thompson
Hukriede	Mann	Riordan	Tilson
Humphreys	Martin	Robertson	Tincher
Jacoway	Mead	Rodenberg	Tinkham
Johnson, Ky.	Merritt	Rucker	Vare
Johnson, Miss.	Michaelson	Ryan	Voigt
Kahn	Miller	Sabath	Wason
Keller	Montague	Scott, Mich.	Watson
Kelley, Mich.	Montoya	Sears	Webster
Kiess	Moore, Ill.	Shelton	White, Kans.
Kitchin	Mott	Shreve	White, Me.
Knight	Nelson, A. P.	Sinclair	Williamson
Kunz	Nelson, J. M.	Sisson	Wise
Lankford	Nelson, Me.	Snyder	Woodruff
Larsen, Ga.	Newton, Mo.	Stedman	Woods, Va.
Larson, Minn.	Nolan	Steenerson	Wright
Lee, N. Y.	Oldfield	Stevenson	Yates

So the motion to strike out section 9 was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. Garrett of Tennessee (for) with Mr. Mondell (against).

Mr. Edmonds (for) with Mr. Vare (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Cramton with Mr. Carter.

Mr. Thompson with Mr. Tague.

Mr. McArthur with Mr. Jacoway.

Mr. Burton with Mr. Oldfield.

Mr. Maloney with Mr. Gallivan.

Mr. Kahn with Mr. Cantrill.

Mr. Snyder with Mr. Overstreet.

Mr. Rodenberg with Mr. Rucker.

Mr. Lee of New York with Mr. Logan.

Mr. Nolan with Mr. Kitchin.

Mr. Tilson with Mr. Humphreys.

Mr. Tincher with Mr. Johnson of Kentucky.

Mr. Reed of New York with Mr. Bell.

Mr. Knight with Mr. Woods of Virginia.

Mr. Kiess with Mr. Deal.

Mr. Porter with Mr. Carew.

Mr. Shreve with Mr. Larsen of Georgia.

Mr. Newton of Missouri with Mr. Brand.

Mr. Hicks with Mr. McSwain.

Mr. Patterson of New Jersey with Mr. Davis of Tennessee.

Mr. Little with Mr. Connally of Texas.

Mr. Mann with Mr. Kunz.

Mr. Funk with Mr. Raker.

Mr. Mott with Mr. Ten Eyck.

Mr. White of Kansas with Mr. Goldsborough.

Mr. Brennan with Mr. Dominick.

Mr. Lehlbach with Mr. Cockran.

Mr. Tinkham with Mr. Mead.

Mr. Himes with Mr. Stoll.

Mr. Codd with Mr. Drewry.

Mr. Burroughs with Mr. Johnson of Mississippi.

Mr. Steenerson with Mr. Collins.

Mr. Gahn with Mr. Montague.

Mr. Strong of Pennsylvania with Mr. Riordan.

Mr. Sinclair with Mr. Dupré.

Mr. Lineberger with Mr. Martin.

Mr. Robertson with Mr. Stedman.

Mr. Appleby with Mr. Hooker.

Mr. Gernerd with Mr. Rainey of Alabama.

Mr. Beck with Mr. Wright.

Mr. Anthony with Mr. Taylor of Arkansas.

Mr. A. P. Nelson with Mr. Byrns of Tennessee.

Mr. Michaelson with Mr. Blanton.

Mr. Frear with Mr. Clark of Florida.

Mr. Connolly of Pennsylvania with Mr. Wise.

Mr. Dunn with Mr. Sears.

Mr. Yates with Mr. Fulmer.

Mr. Hukriede with Mr. McDuffie.

Mr. Montoya with Mr. Rainey of Illinois.

Mr. Larson of Minnesota with Mr. Sabath.

Mr. Watson with Mr. Gilbert.

Mr. Temple with Mr. Sisson.

Mr. McKenzie with Mr. Griffin.

Mr. Wason with Mr. Hawes.

Mr. Moore of Illinois with Mr. Stevenson.

Mr. Swing with Mr. Lankford.

Mr. Woodruff with Mr. Fields.

Mr. Williamson with Mr. Sullivan.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will not this vote leave section 9 in the original form in which it was reported to the House?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Without any committee amendments and without perfecting amendments.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. WINSLOW. My inquiry relates to the same matter that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] has asked about. I meant to ask if the perfecting amendments are included in the section.

The SPEAKER. They are not.

Mr. WINSLOW. I ask unanimous consent to have them reinstated and considered as adopted.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, in the confusion it was impossible to hear what was said. Has anything been done by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. Nothing was done. Objection was made.

The question is on the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SANDERS of Indiana: Page 8, line 15, after the word "President," insert a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. Except as to prosecutions for offenses the provisions of this act shall cease to be in force and effect January 1, 1924."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota) there were—ayes 122, noes 77.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Thirty-six Members rising, not a sufficient number. The yeas and nays are refused and the amendment is agreed to. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. I am.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RAYBURN moves to recommit the bill (H. R. 12472) to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with instruction to report the same back forthwith with an amendment as follows: Page 4, line 10, after the word "emergency," strike out "prevent extortion in prices charged for coal and other fuel, and promote the general welfare."

Mr. RAYBURN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Thirty-two Members rising, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

The question being taken, the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 214, nays 61, answered "present" 4, not voting 148, as follows:

YEAS—214.

Anderson	Burdick	Coughlin	Favrot
Andrew, Mass.	Burke	Crowther	Fenn
Andrews, Nebr.	Burtness	Cullen	Fess
Ansorge	Butler	Curry	Fish
Atkeson	Byrnes, S. C.	Dale	Fitzgerald
Bacharach	Cable	Dallinger	Focht
Barbour	Cannon	Darrow	Fordney
Barkley	Chalmers	Davis, Minn.	Foster
Begg	Chandler, N. Y.	Dempsey	Free
Benham	Chindblom	Dickinson	French
Bird	Christopherson	Doughton	Frothingham
Bixler	Clague	Dowell	Fuller
Blakeney	Clarke, N. Y.	Dyer	Glynn
Bland, Va.	Cole, Iowa	Elliott	Gorman
Boies	Cole, Ohio	Ellis	Graham, Ill.
Bond	Colton	Evans	Green, Iowa
Britten	Connolly, Pa.	Fairchild	Greene, Mass.
Brooks, Ill.	Cooper, Ohio	Fairfield	Greene, Vt.
Brooks, Pa.	Cooper, Wis.	Faust	Griest
Griffin	Kline, N. Y.	Murphy	Smith, Mich.
Hadley	Kline, Pa.	Newton, Minn.	Snell
Hammer	Knutson	Norton	Speaks
Hardy, Colo.	Kopp	O'Brien	Sproul
Hardy, Tex.	Kreider	O'Connor	Stafford
Harrison	Lampert	Ogden	Stephens
Haugen	Lawrence	Olpp	Strong, Kans.
Hawley	Lazaro	Osborne	Strong, Pa.
Hayden	Lea, Calif.	Paige	Swank
Hays	Leatherwood	Parker, N. J.	Sweet
Henry	Linthicum	Parker, N. Y.	Taylor, Colo.
Hersey	London	Patterson, Mo.	Taylor, N. J.
Hickey	Longworth	Perkins	Taylor, Tenn.
Hill	Lowrey	Perlman	Thomas
Himes	Lyon	Purnell	Timberlake
Hoch	McClintic	Radcliffe	Towner
Hogan	McCormick	Ramseyer	Treadway
Huddleston	McFadden	Ransley	Upshaw
Hull	McKenzie	Reece	Vestal
Husted	McLaughlin, Mich.	Rhodes	Vinson
Hutchinson	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Ricketts	Volk
Ireland	McPherson	Roach	Volstead
James	MacGregor	Rodenberg	Walters
Jefferis, Nebr.	Madden	Rogers	Ward, N. Y.
Johnson, S. Dak.	Magee	Rose	Ward, N. C.
Johnson, Wash.	Mapes	Rossdale	Weaver
Kearns	Michener	Sanders, N. Y.	Wheeler
Kelly, Pa.	Mills	Sanders, Tex.	Williams, Ill.
Kennedy	Millspaugh	Schall	Winslow
Ketcham	Moore, Ohio	Scott, Tenn.	Wood, Ind.
Kindred	Moore, Va.	Shaw	Wurzbach
King	Moores, Ind.	Siegel	Young
Kirkpatrick	Morgan	Sinnott	Zihlman
Kissel	Morin	Slemp
Kleczka	Mudd	Smith, Idaho

NAYS—61.

Almon	Drane	Lanham	Sandlin
Aswell	Driver	Lee, Ga.	Smithwick
Bankhead	Echols	Luhring	Steagall
Black	Fisher	Mansfield	Tillman
Bland, Ind.	Garner	Oliver	Tucker
Bowers	Garrett, Tex.	Park, Ga.	Tyson
Bowling	Goodykoontz	Parks, Ark.	Underhill
Box	Hudspeth	Pou	Vaile
Briggs	Jacoway	Quin	Williams, Tex.
Buchanan	Jeffers, Ala.	Rankin	Wilson
Bulwinkle	Jones, Pa.	Rayburn	Wingo
Chandler, Okla.	Jones, Tex.	Reed, W. Va.	Woodyard
Collier	Kendall	Robsion	Wyant
Crago	Kincheloe	Rosenbloom
Crisp	Kraus	Rouse
Denison	Langley	Sanders, Ind.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—4.

Ackerman	Edmonds	Layton	Mondell

NOT VOTING—148.

Anthony	Frear	McArthur	Scott, Mich.
Appleby	Freeman	McDuffie	Sears
Arentz	Fulmer	McLaughlin, Pa.	Shelton
Beck	Funk	McSwain	Shreve
Beedy	Gahn	Maloney	Sinclair
Bell	Gallivan	Mann	Sisson
Blanton	Garrett, Tenn.	Martin	Snyder
Brand	Gensman	Mead	Stedman
Brennan	Gernerd	Merritt	Steenerson
Brown, Tenn.	Gilbert	Michaelson	Stevenson
Browne, Wis.	Goldsborough	Miller	Stiness
Burroughs	Gould	Montague	Stoll
Burton	Graham, Pa.	Montoya	Sullivan
Byrns, Tenn.	Hawes	Moore, Ill.	Summers, Wash.
Campbell, Kans.	Herrick	Mott	Sumners, Tex.
Campbell, Pa.	Hicks	Nelson, Me.	Swing
Cantrill	Hooker	Nelson, A. P.	Tague
Carew	Hukriede	Nelson, J. M.	Taylor, Ark.
Carter	Humphreys	Newton, Mo.	Temple
Clark, Fla.	Johnson, Ky.	Nolan	Ten Eyck
Classon	Johnson, Miss.	Oldfield	Thompson
Clouse	Kahn	Overstreet	Tilson
Cockran	Keller	Patterson, N. J.	Tincher
Codd	Kelley, Mich.	Petersen	Tinkham
Collins	Kiess	Porter	Vare
Connally, Tex.	Kitchin	Pringey	Voigt
Connell	Knight	Rainey, Ala.	Wason
Copley	Kunz	Rainey, Ill.	Watson
Cramton	Lankford	Raker	Webster
Davis, Tenn.	Larsen, Ga.	Reber	White, Kans.
Deal	Larson, Minn.	Reed, N. Y.	White, Me.
Dominick	Lee, N. Y.	Riddick	Williamson
Drewry	Lehlbach	Riordan	Wise
Dunbar	Lineberger	Robertson	Woodruff
Dunn	Little	Rucker	Woods, Va.
Dupré	Logan	Ryan	Wright
Fields	Luce	Sabath	Yates

So the bill was passed.

The following additional pairs were announced:

On this vote:

Mr. Mondell (for) with Mr. Garrett of Tennessee (against).

Mr. Hooker (for) with Mr. Davis of Tennessee (against).

Mr. White of Kansas (for) with Mr. Graham of Pennsylvania (against).

Mr. Tincher (for) with Mr. Sumners of Texas (against).

Mr. Vare (for) with Mr. Edmonds (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. McArthur with Mr. Riordan.

Mr. White of Maine with Mr. Campbell of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Appleby with Mr. Rucker.
Mr. Campbell of Kansas with Mr. Johnson of Kentucky.
Mr. Merritt with Mr. Stoll.
Mr. Patterson of New Jersey with Mr. Goldsborough.
Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that if my colleague, Mr. CRAMTON, was present he would have voted for this legislation.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
On motion of Mr. WINSLOW, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on immigration and naturalization.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on immigration and naturalization. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:
Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, immigration is clearly the most important subject before the people of the United States to-day.
The demand for increased restriction of immigration continues.
Unless this demand is quickly met the people of the United States are likely to develop a spirit of intolerance which is not natural to them.
Fifty years ago James Russell Lowell warned us that because of immigration we were becoming a heterogeneous people, and that the time would come when we would have to control the influx of alien elements.
Thirty-five years ago the Congress of the United States began serious efforts to check immigration. But the efforts of Congress were vetoed by Presidents as early as the first administration of Grover Cleveland and as late as the last administration of Woodrow Wilson.

CREDIT FOR THIS CONGRESS.

It remained for this Congress and our illustrious President Harding to take the decisive step which has so reduced immigration that the net number of new aliens in the country for the year ended June 30, 1922, was but 87,121. The exact net gain, including admissions from Canada, the West Indies, and Mexico, was 100,844. What a drop from the million or more per year who came for years up to the second year of the World War! Steamship officials and our consuls estimate that without the percentage act immigration for the year ended June 30, 1922, would have been from 1,000,000 to 1,750,000 persons from European countries alone, mostly from the countries which quickly exhausted their quotas. English and Scandinavian countries did not use their full quotas, nor did Germany.

HISTORY OF PRESENT RESTRICTION.

The history of the "quota" law is described by Commissioner General Husband (U. S. Monthly Labor Review, August, 1922) as follows:

In December, 1920, the House of Representatives passed a bill, the Johnson bill, H. R. 14461, Sixty-sixth Congress, which provided for suspending practically all immigration for a period of 14 months, only 40 votes being recorded against it. The Senate, however, was more conservative, and after extended hearings adopted in a modified form the Dillingham per cent limit plan as a substitute for total suspension, and eventually this prevailed. This per cent limit plan was first proposed by Senator DILLINGHAM in 1913 in a bill which provided that the number of aliens of any nationality who might be admitted to the United States in any fiscal year should be limited to 10 per cent of the number of persons of such nationality who were resident in the United States according to the census of 1910.
At the time it was presented this bill represented a rather extreme attitude of restriction; but how materially sentiment changed during and after the war is reflected in the fact that when the idea was finally incorporated into law the limit was fixed at 3 instead of 10 per cent, as originally proposed.
The Senate bill prevailed almost unanimously, but Executive approval was withheld, resulting in a "pocket veto," which obviously reflected President Wilson's opposition to immigration restriction quite as clearly as did his two previous vetoes of the literacy test bill. The measure, the Johnson bill (H. R. 4075, 67th Cong.), was again introduced in the special session which followed President Harding's inauguration, passed both Houses almost without opposition, and became a law on May 19, 1921.

Commissioner General Husband, in a statement before the House Committee on Immigration, August 22, 1922, presented numerous important tables concerning the immigration movement. One table is of particular interest, and will be referred to later in connection with Japanese, Polish, and certain other immigration. It follows:

Principal sources of immigration during 1922, together with the number of emigrant aliens departing for the countries named.

	Immigrant aliens admitted.	Emigrant aliens departed.
British North America	46,810	4,480
Italy	40,319	53,651
United Kingdom	35,732	9,591
Poland	28,635	33,581
Mexico	19,551	6,285
Germany	17,931	4,362
Russia	17,143	6,407
Czechoslovakia	12,541	7,846
Rumania	10,287	3,795
West Indies	7,449	5,252
Japan	6,716	4,368
Sweden	6,624	1,903
Yugoslavia	6,047	9,733
Hungary	5,756	4,307
Norway	5,292	1,427
Austria	5,019	579
China	4,406	6,362

PUBLIC DEMANDS MORE RESTRICTION.

Before discussing this and other statistical tables let me say here and now, with all of the force that I can command, that 3 per cent admission, based on the census of 1910, admits too many aliens of the wrong kind. Desire for more restriction of immigration continues to increase. Leading men who hitherto were strong advocates of a liberal immigration policy have become restrictionists. I could name 50 of the older Members of Congress who six and eight years ago saw no danger in the coming of a million immigrants a year who now urge haste toward more complete suspension than we have at present. I could name a hundred leading thinkers who were indifferent a few years ago, but who now are writing and pleading for more restriction. Newspapers and magazines, too, by the hundred have changed front. The World War opened their eyes. Present world conditions serve to intensify the demand. Whole peoples—millions of them—seem to desire to flee from worthless rubles, kopecks, kronen, and marks and to get to the United States, where dollars still have permanent value. What a pity that those we permit to come are met here by so many of their former countrymen who desire to reduce our American dollar to the value of the Russian soviet ruble.

WHAT CHANGES ARE NECESSARY.

The country seems to want complete suspension of immigration. That is impossible, it seems to me, for we should leave an opening for the admission of immediate relatives of citizens of the United States and permanently domiciled aliens; for their fathers, mothers, and children, but not for their uncles, cousins, and aunts.
How can this be done?
1. Reduce the percentage figure to 2 per cent or even to 1½ per cent, thus lowering the total number of admissibles from countries entitled to large quotas.
2. Give all countries which have separate governments, or parliaments which act independently of the parent government, base quotas of about 600 each annually, cutting down other exemptions as far as possible. This will relieve the everlasting cry from Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, and other countries whose present annual quotas are 300 or less.
3. Treat immediate families as units, admitting the husband, wife, or children of citizens of the United States and aliens permanently domiciled here. This will eliminate nine-tenths of the appealing distress cases at our principal ports by uniting families which might otherwise, because of exhaustion of quotas, become separated.
4. Perfect the literacy test by providing authority for exclusion of the mentally inferior and the emotionally unstable classes, some of whom, experience has shown, often are competent to meet the literacy test by reading 40 words but nevertheless are wholly unfit for incorporation into the mass of our people. Such a provision would exclude the weak-minded, the degenerate, and those who although old in years are children mentally and never can be expected to develop stability of character themselves or to transmit desirable capacities to their offspring. The literacy test has excluded many of these but not enough. It should be expanded and developed so as better to effect the purpose for which it was originally written. In the light of modern scientific experience this can and should be done.
5. Provide for more thorough physical examination of immigrants by authorizing the modern blood test, a simple yet effective step, which will exclude aliens afflicted with diseases not otherwise readily detected. Application of the blood test will mean more thorough medical examinations at little increased cost if any. It will mean also the absolute exclusion of certain infectious and loathsome diseases, some cases of which now escape the attention of examining officers. Only three immigration stations, namely those at New York, Boston, and San Francisco, are now fully equipped to conduct thorough medical examinations. If application of the blood test be authorized, examinations at all ports will be simplified.

6. Apply the quota law to alien seamen who intend to leave ship and remain in the United States, preventing absolutely the landing of those who are diseased and preventing also violations of the Chinese exclusions acts and the gentlemen's agreement with Japan. Experience has shown that under existing laws and regulations thousands of seamen deserters have landed in the United States and remained unlawfully without examination. Such evasion of law must be stopped.

7. Admit certain excepted classes, such as students, actors, and members of certain professions, for temporary stay only. Their right to enter upon arrival in excess of quotas and remain in the United States permanently thereafter can not be maintained.

8. Change the percentage of monthly admissibles from .20 to 10, thus eliminating much confusion and hardship due to the absolute cessation of immigration from certain countries for seven months of each year. At present, with 20 per cent of a national quota permitted to arrive in one month, some countries exhaust their quotas in five months. If but 10 per cent could come monthly such quotas would be unexhausted for 10, instead of 5, months each year. A trifling percentage might be withheld from each quota for the 10 months in order to take care of cases of extreme distress, these to be charged against the eleventh and twelfth months.

9. Authorize the exercise of administrative discretion in determining nationality. As the law stands at present an alien must be charged to the quota of the country in which he was born. This has worked hardship in many cases. Nationality determined by place of birth may well remain a provision of the law, except when domicile in or attachment to another country during a long period of years establishes definitely and conclusively that as a matter of equity and justice the alien should be held and considered as a national of the country of his allegiance rather than of the country of his birth.

10. Limit all immigration to persons eligible to citizenship, once and for all time disposing of difficulties which have arisen by reason of the heavy colonization on our Pacific slope of unassimilable alien races. The policy of denying United States citizenship to the yellow and brown peoples is applauded by students and thinkers, both here and abroad, who appreciate the fact that because physical assimilation of oriental peoples is impossible their incorporation into the body politic is impracticable and unwise. If they can not, and should not, be made citizens, does it not follow that their admission to our country should be strictly and absolutely limited? We bar the Hindu, with certain exceptions, by a geographical barrier. We bar the Chinese, with certain exceptions, by an exclusion law. Our failure to bar the Japanese has resulted in the development of alien colonies in our Pacific Coast States, the residents of these colonies being entirely under the protection of a foreign government and amenable in only slight degree to American influence. It would seem to be reasonable and proper, therefore, that we set up a uniform rule affecting Hindu, Chinese, Japanese, and all oriental people alike, providing for exclusion of all who can not become American citizens, admitting only those justly and equitably entitled to come as members of the excepted classes or temporarily for business or pleasure.

A provision of law on this point would cover the essentials of the so-called "gentlemen's agreement," but instead of being a subject of international concord—or discord—would be the exercise of a national prerogative, which is universally acclaimed as an attribute of national sovereignty. The policy behind such a provision of law was espoused by the late Colonel Roosevelt. The Imperial Government of Japan adheres to a similar policy, as does every other nation which seeks to maintain its own identity. It may be suggested that the assertion and enforcement of the elemental right involved in this proposition will give offense to the Imperial Japanese Government. I think not. The jingo element, both here and in Japan, may make a loud outcry, but the statesmanship of the entire world, including that of Japan, will recognize that in pursuit of this policy the United States will be clearly within rights universally applied in international law. No nation can claim a right to send one, or a thousand, or a million, of its nationals to the United States for purposes of permanent domicile or colonization. Such a claim would be incompatible with all the essential elements of national sovereignty. If we admit those Japanese who have business here and those who travel within our boundaries for business or pleasure, we shall do all we are bound to do in justice to ourselves. To maintain this proposition, I believe, will mean the elimination of the friction which has developed out of the "gentlemen's agreement."

SEPARATE CITIZENSHIP FOR WOMEN.

Separate citizenship for American women and separate naturalization of alien women married to aliens, which passed House and Senate by overwhelming votes and is a law, will help straighten up many vexed questions.

American women married to aliens may under this law retain their American citizenship, while alien women married to aliens may not be naturalized upon the naturalization of husbands, but must go through a short, separate process. The bill was introduced by Representative CABLE and was perfected by the House committee. Similar legislation is before the English Parliament and the French Chamber of Deputies. Much of the credit for the passage of this legislation by this Congress is due to Mrs. Maud Wood Park, of the Women Voters' League. The fairness of its provisions to American institutions can be understood by all, and it is the first of numerous naturalization reforms about to be undertaken.

CRIMES BY ALIENS.

Of course, not all the crime in the United States, or even half of it, is committed by aliens, but much crime of a non-American kind is committed by them. I receive hundreds of letters and clippings concerning this phase of immigration. I have before me an editorial from the Grand Rapids Press, as follows:

LIBERATORE.

John Liberatore, the youth who stabbed and killed a fellow workman in Ionia and was brought to Grand Rapids because of high feeling at the scene of the crime, says he arrived in the United States from Italy three years ago. His father and uncle had already established themselves in the New World, and the family seems to have been typical of the race and in no way below the average. Young Liberatore apparently inherited the industry, the hot passions, the temper, and the code of violence of the southern Italian, and was aggravated, or worked himself up, to the point of applying it with a knife.

There is a ward in Chicago populated by southern Italians and noted for a record of ambush murders. The Sicilian vendetta carried to America's shores has been a common source of docket entries. Yet we continue to admit these races, with their feud code intact, and either scatter them among our people who dislike them and inflame their passions, or else permit them to herd together in cities and live, with little or no chance of Americanization, in the same fashion and with the same ideas of life and law as in their Italian homes. Southern Italians not differing greatly in make-up from Liberatore have been for many years the biggest single source of increase for our population.

The Ionia crowd which went to the mayor's house to protest against the employment of the Liberatore class of foreigners in their factories had, we think, a glimpse of the right idea. The need of cheap labor is not sufficient argument for opening the Nation's gates to men who, like the unfortunate Liberatore, can not assimilate American ways. We think this near-by crime is another call for immigration which will cull the unfit rather than admit all types without discrimination and according to a senseless ratio based on past mistakes.

HERRIN.

The Tacoma Ledger says editorially:

WERE LARGELY FOREIGNERS.

There is something significant in the statement that of the miner population of "Bloody" Williamson, the "Little Egypt" county of Illinois, which was recently the scene of the most savage display of barbarism in the history of America, a large proportion are foreigners.

While, of course, this fact does not mitigate the horrible offense or serve to erase in the slightest degree the stain that has been placed upon the name of the Commonwealth of Illinois, still it is with some degree of satisfaction that red-blooded and true Americans can say of this barbarous thing down there at Herrin, "These were not our people who did this shameful thing."

As a rule, Americans, no matter what the provocation, do not resort to assassination and outrage in seeking to correct that which they claim to be wrong. Respect for law and good order is almost instinctive with the American; and he, knowing that after all he has a chance to redress injuries in the courts and at the ballot box, is content to await the time when justice will come. Instead of appealing to the gun and the bomb, he is in the habit of appealing for the sympathies of his fellow Americans.

The foreigner, smarting under class distinctions and denied opportunities to earn for himself and family the necessities and comforts so essential to right living, comes to this country in search of the things denied him in the homeland. He knows little and cares less for American laws and American institutions, and when demagogues ply their arts upon him he is too apt to drift into frenzy that leads to positive anarchy.

Comments such as the above appear in the public press almost daily, indicating clearly that the American people at last are appreciating the enormity of the burden borne by municipal and State governments by reason of the violation of criminal statutes by aliens. The repetition on court dockets of such names as Uselis, Popvitch, Petrowski, Alussio, Berkman, Goldman, and so forth, is impressing the public mind to such an extent that many believe our criminal courts are sustained chiefly for the punishment of crimes committed by those who are not of us, or for us, or concerned with our national welfare.

PROTECTION OF ALIENS.

President Harding, in a recent message to Congress, August 18, said:

One specific thing I must ask at your hands at the earliest possible moment. There is pending a bill to provide for the better protection of aliens and for the enforcement of their treaty rights. It is a measure, in short, to create a jurisdiction for the Federal courts through which the National Government will have appropriate power to protect aliens in the rights secured to them under treaties and to deal with crimes which affect our foreign relations.

Well and good! But in addition to such a law there should be additional laws to protect the United States and its citizens from aliens who have no regard for State or national laws. We have provided laws for the deportation of aliens after serving sentences for certain crimes. The list should be extended. A bill introduced by me for the deportation of alien violators of State and national liquor and narcotic acts (H. R. 11118, which passed the House by a vote of 222 to 73) should be enacted into law. Deportation of aliens convicted of mob violence should be required. The alien deportation act should specifically name train wreckers, bank robbers, and so on. We are deporting more aliens than ever before (13,731 for the year ending June 30, 1922), but not enough convicted criminals. Study the following tables and see for yourself the points in the law which need changing:

Aliens debarred from entering the United States during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, by causes.

Idiots, imbeciles, and feeble-minded	112
Insanity, epileptics	94
Constitutional psychopathic inferiority	31
Surgeon's certificate of mental defect which may affect alien's ability to earn a living, other than idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded, epileptics, and insanity	22
Tuberculosis (noncontagious)	14
Loathsome and dangerous contagious disease	672
Surgeon's certificate of physical defect which may affect alien's ability to earn a living, other than loathsome or dangerous contagious diseases	573
Likely to become a public charge	5,529
Paupers	2
Vagrants	4
Professional beggars	2
Contract laborers	809
Assisted aliens	161
Chronic alcoholism	2
Stowaways	1,483
Accompanying aliens (under sec. 18)	100
Under 16 years of age and unaccompanied by parent	146
Criminals	176
Polygamists	2
Prostitutes and aliens coming for any immoral purpose	113
Aliens who are supported by or receive proceeds of prostitution	3
Aliens who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or females for any immoral purpose	94
Had been deported within one year	24
Unable to read (over 16 years of age)	1,249
Geographically excluded classes (natives of that portion of Asia and islands adjacent thereto described in sec. 3)	22
Under provisions Chinese exclusion act	225
Under passport provision, section 3	6
Under provisions section 23	107
Without proper passport (State Department regulations)	292
Under per cent limit act of May 19, 1921, "excess quota"	1,662
Total	13,731

IMMIGRANTS ON AMERICAN SHIPS.

House bill 12237 also contains provisions for carrying on American ships at least one-half of whatever aliens are to be admitted. These provisions need to be changed in numerous details. Should perchance the quota be retained at 3 per cent, the demand to make it 6 or 10 per cent will soon be in evidence, backed by Americans interested in our ships. If we are to give Federal aid to the American merchant marine, which I favor, we had better give it straight away rather than introduce 50–50 methods, which are sure to invite more immigration business than our people want. Uncle Sam can not afford to sell our American birthright for a mess of steamship pottage.

A better way to insure that most of those aliens permitted to come shall come on American ships is to fix requirements as to air space, English-speaking matrons, equipment, food, and so forth, which modern American ships can meet, but which foreign vessels can meet only at great expense.

I am inclined to favor an additional plan to help American ships, as soon as we have permanently fixed the quotas. I would enact a law by which citizens or permanent residents of the United States may deposit the cost of passage with any immigration commissioner or shipping commissioner in the United States.

Inasmuch as more than half come to relatives now here, who send their money abroad for the tickets for relatives, no harm would result, and in addition to assisting our ships, we would take a long step toward ending the damnable robbing of immigrants, which in many cases is done by people of their own kind, who exact commissions, tolls, and so forth, from the newcomers and even place them in peonage in the United States until passage money is repaid.

CANADIAN RESTRICTIONS.

The public has heard much of the "so-called" Canadian plan, which has been proclaimed as highly successful. In hundreds of letters, magazine articles, and newspaper editorials the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, of which I have the honor to be chairman, has been urged to adopt the last Canadian effort at overseas selection as the one method which will restrict with the minimum of hardship. Overseas examination sounds well as a theory, but in practice it utterly fails, for several reasons, as our Canadian neighbors have learned.

Remember that the Dominion of Canada is of immense area. It has a population of less than 8,000,000 and has public lands to give away. It has not sufficient big interests in the cities to take up the unemployment slack; but as badly as it needs people on its lands, it will not settle its unoccupied lands with those who will weaken its blood and threaten its Government.

Canada's general law is essentially the same as our law of 1917—the Burnett Act. A Canadian order in council provided that—

From and after the date hereof, and until otherwise ordered, no immigrant of any Asiatic race shall be permitted to land in Canada who does not possess in his own right the sum of $250: Provided, That this regulation shall not apply to a national of any country in regard to which there is in operation a special treaty, agreement, or convention regulating immigration.

That did not work. The Japanese had an "agreement," while the Chinese were willing to pay $250, and even the $500 which British Columbia Province imposes by order in council.

The next order in council provided that a charge of $5 be imposed for the examination and visé by a Canadian officer of passports required under the authority of the regulation established by the order in council (P. C. 718) April 12, 1922.

The United States has a similar law, with a $9 fee and $1 for registration.

The next order (P. C. 717), May 9, 1922, provided:

From and after the date hereof and until otherwise ordered the landing in Canada of any immigrant is hereby prohibited, except as hereinafter provided:

The immigration officer in charge may admit any immigrant who otherwise complies with the provisions of the immigration act if it is shown to his satisfaction that such immigrant is—

1. A bona fide agriculturist entering Canada to farm and has sufficient means to begin farming in Canada.
2. A bona fide farm laborer entering Canada to follow that occupation and has reasonable assurance of employment.
3. A female domestic servant entering Canada to follow that occupation and has reasonable assurance of employment.

And provided further that the immigration officer in charge may admit—

(a) The wife and family of any person legally admitted to and resident in Canada who is in a position to receive and care for his dependents.

(b) The national of any country in regard to which there is in operation a special treaty or agreement or convention regulating immigration.

(c) Any British subject entering Canada—directly or indirectly from Great Britain or Ireland, the United States of America or any self-governing British dominion or Newfoundland, who shall satisfy the immigration officer in charge at the port of entry that he has sufficient means to maintain himself until employment is secured.

(d) Any American citizen entering Canada from the United States, provided it is shown to the satisfaction of the minister of immigration and colonization that his labor or service is required in Canada.

Next came P. C. 1041, on May 12, 1922, which provided that—

The landing in Canada is hereby prohibited of any immigrant who is not in possession of a valid passport issued in and by the government of the country of which such person is a subject or citizen, viséed as follows:

1. The passport of any alien immigrant landing in Canada from the Continent of Europe, whether directly or indirectly via Great Britain or Ireland, shall carry the visé of a Canadian immigration officer stationed on the Continent of Europe.

2. The passport of any immigrant not included in the last preceding paragraph shall carry the visé of a British diplomatic or consular officer. For the purpose of this regulation a passport to be valid must be presented within one year of the date of its issue: Provided, That this regulation shall not apply to British subjects landing in Canada directly or indirectly from Great Britain or Ireland, the United States of America, or any self-governing British dominion, or Newfoundland, nor shall it apply to American citizens, nor to immigrants landing in Canada from the United States who have been resident in the United States for at least one year immediately prior to their landing in Canada.

Neither was that entirely successful. I am informed it is proving troublesome, for—

The Canadian act contemplated the creation of machinery which would determine an emigrant's fitness before he left his home, but it has been and is being enforced without this machinery being provided. All that has been done is to establish visé points which determine the civic fitness of intending citizens.

This determination of civic fitness is exactly what the consuls of the United States undertake to do under present laws.

There is also no medical examination, so that the immigrant on reaching Canada, although having a visé, may still be rejected for physical unfitness.

The same situation prevails in the United States.

WHY NOT THE MEDICAL EXAMINATION ABROAD?

So much objection was taken by Scandinavian countries to the Canadian regulation requiring Scandinavians to obtain visés in England that a few months after the regulations were promulgated they had to be rescinded. Poland has now taken to fining the steamship companies for taking rejected emigrants to the visé station at Danzig.

Italy, France, and other countries have protested against the overseas medical examination proposed in a bill now before the House committee. If it dealt with immigrants only, no harm would be done by refusing to heed the protests, but we must consider the rights of visitors and travelers and be prepared for retaliation against our own people who visit foreign countries.

It is reported that—

The steamship companies claim that as they are fined and made to bear the cost of returning unfit immigrants from Canada to their point of departure the preliminary examination of continentals may safely be left in their hands, since self-interest will dictate the exercise of care. They would not object to the Canadian act if adequate machinery were provided for its enforcement, but they do not think that the various European governments would allow the setting up of such an elaborate organization to drain their countries of their best citizens.

Mr. Speaker, in the United States we have long known that even before we had the passport system certain countries unloaded their undesirables on us. Most foreign countries have had their passport systems for a long time, and will continue to have them, whether we do or not. It is common in some countries to withhold passports from one class and grant passports freely to another class. Testimony before the House committee shows that this is the practice in Poland and elsewhere. It accounts for the oddity in the statistics for the past year, which show that more Poles left the United States than came here. One can well believe that the Poles of old-time blood went back to join the forces of the new Polish Government, and that Polish Jews were freely given passports to the United States—so freely that the number holding passports was out of all proportion to the quota.

The same thing applies to our statistics concerning immigration from and emigration to certain other countries. In fact, our evidence shows that in several of these countries—including some of the new ones—the political division is always racial—and even approximates the religious. The majority party fights, annoys, and sometimes tortures and maddens the members of the minority party, which is usually made up of Jewish citizens. That is the political division over there. We do not want it here, and the safest way to prevent it is to reduce the quotas from all such countries. It is the best for all concerned. Leading Jewish people of the United States have said this to me.

CONGRESS MUST NOT LOSE ITS CONTROL.

Reverting to the proposed examination of immigrants overseas, it is often said that if we are to obtain immigrants of the greatest promise of social worth we must devise some method by which the nationals of foreign countries may be examined by our immigration inspectors in their foreign homes. It has been suggested that a proper means of effecting such examination would be to set up an immigration office in each consulate, to function in connection with the work of viséing passports, and thus to sift out there the wheat from the chaff and send on to America such classes of migrants as shall appear most likely to meet the social and economic needs of our country.

The idea is not new. It has attracted popular attention and applause frequently during the past 20 years, possibly longer. It is decidedly appealing. One great trouble is that no such scheme could be devised without utilizing the already existing machinery of consular offices. Our consular offices are established under authority of trade and commercial treaties, each of which sets forth specifically what functions may be carried on by consular employees. Examination of persons who contemplate migration to the United States is not included. It follows that if we are to set up a plan for examination of immigrants overseas we must of necessity revise many of our trade and commercial treaties.

CARRYING OF IMMIGRANTS IS COMMERCE.

I am certain that such a step is neither contemplated nor desired by Members of Congress or by any student of the immigration problem. For one thing, we could not well request revision of a commercial treaty without according to another sovereignty some measure of authority bearing upon the subject. Control over immigration should not, must not, be dependent even in the slightest degree upon the wish or desire of another country. Therefore, it would be the part of unwisdom to suggest the revision of any treaty so as to afford a foreign power opportunity to dictate or advise concerning our immigration policy. We must reserve to ourselves all authority in this most important matter, even to the point of refraining from effectuating what to many minds appears to be a most desirable plan for the solution of the problem. Further, the representatives of the people in Congress assembled must hold fast to their powers as conferred by the Constitution. It will be remembered that one of the most important reasons for the rejection of the covenant of the League of Nations was the fear that the league would arrogate to itself a measure of control over immigration. The American people never would permit an act of abdication in this regard.

VIEWS OF SECRETARY OF LABOR DAVIS ON 3 PER CENT LAW.

Mr. Secretary Davis, of the Department of Labor, has given the abuse of their own passport systems by certain foreign governments as one of the reasons why, in his opinion, the 3 per cent restriction law has outlived its usefulness.

I disagree with the distinguished Secretary of Labor. The 3 per cent act came just in time to save us from one and one-half million immigrants who would have arrived in 1921–22, when we could not have employed them, assimilated or even housed them. Secretary Davis wrote in a letter under date of August 25, 1922, in part as follows:

It is my firm conviction that we must have a radically different program for dealing with the immigration problem. In the first place, while the 3 per cent act serves very well as a temporary measure under the conditions responsible for its enactment, a permanent policy should be upon an entirely different basis. Good substantial immigrant stock has played an important part in the upbuilding of America. It has furnished labor for our mills and factories; it has helped to build our railroads and cultivate our farms. Apparently that kind of immigration is not forthcoming under the present program. The present passport and visé system gives to the foreign powers the privilege of designating or permitting those who are to emigrate, and those only. A selection of our future residents is, therefore, by some other power than our own Government, because they may refuse passports to whomsoever they desire to keep at home. It would be far better, and I am a strong advocate of the plan, if our own officers could be stationed at ports of emigration and in lieu of the viséing requirements put them through examinations covering the following tests:

(1) Blood, (2) physical, (3) mental, (4) character.

This will insure that we get immigrants of the constructive type. They will also be welcome, but our interests should not cease as soon as they arrive. We should follow them into the occupations that they go into and see that they make good. We should assist them to secure, at least, a working knowledge of the English language to better protect them in their work and open up possibilities for their advancement. We should acquaint them with the institutions of liberty which our forefathers fostered and which we have encouraged, and we should know that legally admitted aliens, and that only the legally admitted, are the recipients of the opportunities and privileges afforded. To do this we should have an annual census of the foreign born who are not citizens, requiring them to pay a nominal fee, this fee to be used entirely for their education and the advancement of their opportunities. While we should have no desire to create an espionage system through this restriction, it will nevertheless permit us to check up on all those who have violated the law in securing admission. If their regard for American law is such that they violated it in the first place by illegal entry, how can we expect that they will have any more regard for other laws. We will be able to trace surreptitious entries of orientals and we will be in a position to know our self-appointed enemies who are designing to rule America by revolution as opposed to our settled principle of advanced Government by evolution.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE REPLY.

Mr. Speaker, in my remarks I have covered the objections to some of the points made by Secretary Davis. I desire to add an editorial from the Chicago Tribune, dated August 29, 1922:

GUARD THE GATES.

Secretary of Labor Davis announces his belief that the present 3 per cent immigration restriction law has outlived its usefulness and "a radically different program must be evolved." He bases that conclusion on figures which show that immigration of the best European stock, which has done much to upbuild America, is insufficient under the present program.

That contention may be true, but there is a legitimate question as to whether changes in the 3 per cent restriction would correct the deficiency of high-class immigrants. The facts are that the 3 per cent limitation is keeping out hundreds of thousands of undesirable aliens who seek refuge in this country from chaotic, social, political, and economic conditions abroad. But under the same law the peoples to whom Mr. Davis refers as desirable are not filling their quotas. In other words, the 3 per cent restriction is not keeping them out of America, because less than the permitted 3 per cent are desirous to come here.

When, therefore, we begin to tamper with the present law we are likely to be laying ourselves open to the danger of bringing in more undesirables and no more desirables. The only way in which the latter can be brought in in larger numbers is to offer greater inducements or greater facilities for the move.

Any such proposition must be considered very carefully, lest it involve us in unpleasant relations with the countries from which we limit immigration or lest it open the way to a greater influx of undesirables. If, as he says, selection of America's future citizens is now reposed in other Governments, that is a point worthy of consideration, but whatever the results of that study may be no changes in the law should be permitted to open our gates to a horde of undesirable aliens.

CABLE EXPLAINS 3 PER CENT LAW.

Representative CABLE, of Ohio, a valuable member of the House Immigration Committee, in a recent speech said:

Mr. Speaker, a law of Congress should be judged by its benefits. If no good results ensue, it should be promptly repealed. What, then, of the 3 per cent restrictive immigration law of May 19, 1921? It has been in actual operation for the entire fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

After discussing the heavy immigration, which was checked by the World War, Congressman CABLE speaks of its sudden revival after the armistice, saying:

Evidence was introduced before our committee that the ports of southern Europe were congested with those seeking to come to this country; that unless a restrictive immigration law was passed there would be a virtual migration of foreign born to this country numbering from one to two million. The large number of ships created for war purposes were without goods to transport; they would be idle unless the owners could enter into the lucrative business of immigration transportation. But what was the condition in America? During the war the construction of homes and schools was stopped almost entirely. Congress was confronted with the proposition that there were no homes wherein these people could live, no schools whereby their children could be educated, and the American workingman should not be compelled to compete for his work with those seeking to come here. It was not a fair proposition either to the American people or to the foreign born. Prompt and proper solution of the problem was the passage of the 3 per cent restrictive immigration law.

This law, in brief, simply provides that new immigrants equal in number to 3 per cent of those foreign-born nationals who resided in the United States as determined by our 1910 census could be admitted during the fiscal year, and that not more than 20 per cent were admissible during any one month.

That this law is a success is proclaimed by the good and beneficial results it has accomplished. Not only has the number of immigrants been reduced to a minimum but the quality of those who came and remained here is of the highest standard obtainable from other countries. The workman is protected from foreign competition.

Because of the law we have been able to learn many characteristic facts concerning the nationals of other countries. For example, the people of southern Europe are more anxious to come to the United States than those of northern Europe. This is shown by the records. The people of Greece, Hungaria, Italy, Poland, Rumania, and such countries exhaust their entire quota and every person who, under the law, was permitted to come, did come to America. On the other hand, the countries of northern Europe were not inclined to permit their nationals to leave for our shores and but a portion of the percentage allotted to such nationals was exhausted. For example, the people of France used but 75.9 per cent; Germany, 28 per cent; Norway, 48.7 per cent; Sweden, 43.8 per cent; and the United Kingdom, 55.2 per cent.

Another interesting fact was disclosed in the operation of this law. While the nationals of the southern countries of Europe exhausted their full quota in coming to the United States, yet, instead of being a net gain, it was a loss in the number of immigrants from these countries for the entire fiscal year, because more nationals emigrated from the United States than entered here from these southern countries. On the other hand, when the English, French, Germans, Irish, Scandinavians, Scotch, Slovaks, and Welsh come to the United States they have the purpose of remaining here, making this their permanent home, and the United States the new country of their allegiance, because but few of these nationals return to their old countries.

The most peculiar result of the operation of the law is that our net gain consists entirely of women and girls. The number of male aliens who departed from this country during the fiscal year just passed exceeded those admitted by almost 12,000, while the number of females who were admitted to this country during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, exceeded those who departed by more than 98,000, so that the net gain in the number of aliens for the fiscal year last past, from both quota and nonquota countries, is 87,121—all females.

OTHER BENEFICIAL RESULTS.

In addition, the immigration laws have been better administered. The percentage of those usually debarred has been less than 2 per cent each year of those who seek admission, while under the administration of the 3 per cent law the percentage of debarred has almost doubled.

Another fine result of the law is the fact that under restrictive immigration naturalization of foreign born is on the increase. We have approximately 14,000,000 foreign born in this country, and less than half are naturalized. As is well known, when a man is naturalized his wife and also his children who are under 21 years of age, and residing in this country, automatically become American citizens. This process takes at least five years for the man.

About 12 years ago naturalization was granted to a number equal approximately to 10 per cent of the new immigrants who came to this country. During the last fiscal year this situation has been reversed, and, while the net gain of foreign born is about 87,000, the naturalization amounts in round numbers to approximately 262,000. I am one of those who believe that a foreign born who comes to this country to make a living should think enough of the United States to renounce allegiance to his foreign ruler and become a citizen of the United States.

Sometimes those seeking to be naturalized fail, but generally through no fault of the Government. Of the 29,000 who were denied naturalization in the last fiscal year, 10,000 were refused because they had claimed exemption from military service of the United States on the ground that they were aliens.

This law has been operating so successfully that it has been extended for two additional years with some amendments. For example, a penalty is imposed upon steamship companies who bring aliens here in excess of the quota; also, instead of one year, aliens must reside continuously for five years immediately preceding the time they seek admission to the United States from Canada, Newfoundland, Cuba, Mexico, and countries of Central and South America or adjacent islands.

THOMAS THINKS LAW WORTHLESS.

On the other hand, Representative THOMAS, of Kentucky, thinks the law is worthless, and in a speech recently made says:

The immigration bill is practically worthless and foreigners are pouring into this country by way of Canada, Cuba, and Mexico, while the law at the port of New York is administered principally by foreigners, and how many who should not enter come in through that port is not known. Whenever the gates to immigration are closed and those who have been in this country more than five years without becoming naturalized citizens are deported, then the immigration question will be settled as it should be. This administration really desires an influx of foreigners into this country that their cheap services may be utilized in competition with American labor.

Of course, Representative THOMAS desires complete suspension. Probably he does not realize the difficulties in the way. It is doubtful if European aliens have poured in surreptitiously in any such number as is popularly supposed. A few thousand, perhaps. But the amendment recently added by Congress has hung up in Mexico and Cuba many thousands who were sojourning there for one year in the hope of their beating the intent of the original quota law.

ARRESTING ALIENS FOR POSSIBLE DEPORTATION.

Under present law, aliens suspected of being illegally in the United States can only be arrested on a warrant from the Secretary of Labor which must show probable cause. The law should be changed so as to give any immigration commissioner the right to detain an alien and ask him to show his right to be in the United States. This would soon pick up the oriental and other aliens—also seamen—who have sneaked into the country and would greatly reduce the everlasting demand for certificates of arrival, or nunc pro tunc certificates, problems which have given the committee, as well as immigration and naturalization officials, much trouble. The provision for consular certificates which is in House Resolution 12237 will also lessen this trouble.

REGISTRATION OF ALIENS.

It will be noted that registration of aliens is also spoken of in the above letter of Secretary Davis. I introduced some time ago H. R. 10860, a naturalization bill containing many badly needed administrative features and proposing desired reforms in the law. I concluded that if the States must educate the alien the alien should pay a small part of the cost. Hence I proposed a nominal registration fee of $5, reducing certain present incidental naturalization fees, and greatly reducing the number of the costly processes of naturalization.

In another national legislative body this bill was introduced with the registration fee placed at $24, which in my opinion is prohibitory, particularly when United States labor wage boards establish $582 (or $11.20) as a living wage for laborers. In my opinion the introduction of the $24 fee proposed for registration as against the $5 fee proposed by me has set the much-needed naturalization bill back two years and possibly has killed the registration plan.

The alien press—never very friendly—was wildly worked up over the $24 proposal. I have hundreds and hundreds of copies of their editorials (translated and otherwise) in which they oppose registration and oppose especially the big fee. There are all sorts and kinds of foreign Americans, racial and even religious combinations, fighting restriction, and such traditional pillars of our very civilization as the public school. They have many hundred alien newspapers printed here. A study of the hundreds of clippings possessed by me is illuminating.

The Camp News of the Patriotic Order Sons of America says:

The foreign-language newspapers are nearly always American at least in their titles—Italian, Armenian, Lithuanian, American, Polish-American—unless their titles are out-and-out foreign, and then half of them have titles which mean in English "The Masses," "The Revolutionist," "The Terrorists," "The Liberator," and the like.

The Camp News says:

And all of them take a fling at immigration restriction and at that patriot, ALBERT JOHNSON; also at all Americans who would keep any foreigners out of this land of the "free and home of the brave."

The Italian American Review, published in New York City, urged editorially during last May the "organization of Italian-Americans," and that the organized Italians follow their leaders, and the editor even went to the extent of concluding:

We not only need organization, we need not only a rapid increase in births (among Italians here), but an organized body of mentally alert men and women.

A similar argument is advanced by the Nowiny Polskie, of Milwaukee, Wis., the same month, as follows:

It is the duty of every Pole to obtain his second naturalization papers as quickly as possible, so as to be able to vote this fall. * * * Let us remember there are many Chauvinistic and foolish (American) persons who are trying by various means to suppress the use of foreign languages and other personal liberties. Every Pole in America should acquire the right to vote and vote for men who are not in favor of limiting personal freedom.

And so forth.

The Glos Narodu, of Jersey City, has an editorial the same month calling attention to the fact that—

We pride ourselves on having a Polish judge here, and there a Polish clerk.

And then lambasts Poles for not organizing and voting solidly as Poles for Poles and Polish notions.

The Obrena, of Scranton, Pa., characterizes the demand for restriction and better naturalization laws as "selfish," "prejudice," "hatred," and announces that there is room and work for 100,000,000 aliens in the United States of America, while the Amerika Magyar Nepszava boasts that Hungarians alone sent back $40,000,000 to friends and relatives last year, and the other paper declares foreigners will not take jobs from Americans, because "the nativists won't work."

And the various hyphenates are urged, exhorted, and browbeaten in long editorials and articles, almost as long as the foreign steamship advertisements in these foreign-language papers, to write and vote against and to telegraph Congressmen, Senators, and the President against the Johnson immigration and naturalization bills.

I have not time in this speech for foreign-language newspapers who urge the actual overthrow of our Government.

WHAT RETURNING CITIZENS SAY.

Four-fifths of all Americans who return from a trip to Europe and who have given any thought to the question of immigration indorse the views of Mrs. Lillian Russell Moore as presented to the Committee on Immigration. The New York Commercial (April 5, 1922) says:

Those who reflect with any degree of seriousness upon the report dealing with the prospective immigration from Europe recently submitted to the Department of Labor by Mrs. Alexander P. Moore (Lillian Russell) can not desist from feeling that summary action should be taken by Congress to meet a situation which has been threatening the welfare of this country for several years. The report plainly states that unless our laws are revised to safeguard the country from a further influx of undesirables there will be no longer an America for Americans.

That statement is none too strong. Our lawmakers have been seemingly oblivious to the grave dangers attending unrestricted immigration. The recently enacted law restricting immigration to a 3 per cent basis is not adequate. It is not our purpose to limit the entrance of undesirables but to absolutely exclude them.

The future of this country and its institutions depends, to no small extent, upon the enactment and rigorous enforcement of a new immigration law which will adequately protect our citizens from the dangers which must necessarily follow the admission here of foreign subjects who can not measure up to our standards.

Dr. Henry Allen Tupper, of Washington, D. C., due back from Europe, again sounds the alarm; so do hundreds of leading citizens of national prominence. The cry is not from malice, not from race hatred, not from a denial of asylum, but for the preservation of our Government.

Doctor Tupper has been investigating labor and emigration problems in Constantinople, Beirut, Jerusalem, and Egypt on behalf of the Secretary of Labor. He says:

I will make a full report on my arrival in the United States early in October. Tens of thousands are anxiously awaiting an opportunity to seek work in the United States.

ALIENS WOULD DESCEND LIKE CLOUD OF LOCUSTS.

Edna Ferber, the noted short-story writer, wrote from Paris, August 14, giving her impressions of the Old World, and said:

Impression 3. If it weren't for the 3 per cent immigration law in force in the United States, Europe, en masse, would descend on us like a cloud of locusts. The earth, the sky, and the waters beneath the earth would be black with them. Every waiter, clerk, chambermaid, bath attendant, taxi driver, bootblack, engineer, dressmaker, embroiderer, accountant, teacher, unmarried woman, unmarried man confides to you a wish to come to America.

WARNING FROM DOCTOR SCHURMAN.

Dr. Jacob Gould Schurman warned the American people that they must protect themselves from the peril of denationalization by hordes of foreigners difficult to assimilate. He described the melting pot as a misleading shibboleth from the delusion of which the American people had awakened. He gives these figures on the present foreign population:

We now have in the United States, of all the Jews in the world, 24 per cent; of all the Scandinavians, 17 per cent; of all the Germans, 13 per cent; of all the Slovaks, of all the Poles, and of all the Finns, 8 per cent each; of all the Italians, 7 per cent; of all the Dutch and of all the Lithuanians, 5 per cent each; of all the Greeks and of all the French, 3 per cent each.

Walker D. Hines, former railroad administrator, who recently returned from Europe, said he saw darker hours ahead in Europe and that the demoralization of the currency of France, Germany, and Austria was bound to grow worse. Russian rubles are now 7,000,000 to the dollar and will get cheaper. So will German marks and Austrian kronen. The desire to get to the United States will increase from these and other broken countries.

VIEW OF ORGANIZED LABOR.

Organized labor, speaking through the American Federation of Labor, with its 4,000,000 members, and through the railroad brotherhoods, with almost a million, is joined by chambers of commerce, like that of New York, and by such representative bodies as the Women's Federation and the immigration division of the National Civic Federation, in advocacy of restriction. The Federation of Labor at its last annual meeting in Cincinnati by formal resolution urged that immigration be either restricted to only blood relatives of foreign-born citizens in the country or that the 3 per cent law be made permanent.

And in this connection I want to call attention to the convincing and conclusive argument—one of the best I ever heard or read—made by one of the great leaders of the labor movement in America, Secretary Frank Morrison, before the Senate Committee on Immigration at the time the existing percentage law was considered, and I want to quote now, in answer to sentimentalists who seem to have so little sympathy and consideration for our own and so much for aliens in foreign lands, what he said a little while ago before the House committee when he stated:

Mr. Chairman, I speak not only for the native but I speak for thousands of men of every nationality who believe that our first duty is to take care of those who are already here.

THE QUESTION OF WAGES.

Mr. Speaker, every good American sympathizes with workingmen in their effort to obtain decent wages and decent conditions. Believing as I do in protection in commodities, I can not agree to free trade in labor. Restriction is an absolutely necessary supplement to a protective tariff. Immigration must be curtailed until all workers, native and foreign born, whether in the basic or other industries, get wages and have conditions commensurate with American standards and ideals if we are to maintain those standards, ideals, and, in fact, our very civilization.

The 3 per cent restriction has done more for common labor than any other one thing. So say the managers of the big steel mills. They have recently increased wages of common laborers 20 per cent. Dividends may be a shade less, but the American standard of living gets a little chance in the all-labor communities.

I have before me various letters and printed statements of large employers and big bankers protesting restriction. In a recent pamphlet the National City Bank of New York City, and it ought to know, attributes the recent increase in the wages of common labor in the steel industry to the 3 per cent law. Similarly the president of the R. H. Johnson Co., of Wayne, Pa., writes that the percentage law, unless repealed, will necessitate a "further increase of 50 cents to $1 a day." Propaganda to break down restriction and open up the alien floodgates has been launched by big employers and importers of foreign cheap labor. The drive is on and is increasing. Members of Congress are being besieged with letters from factory districts and labor centers picturing a shortage of common labor and demanding foreign labor's importation in order to hold down the wages of unskilled workers. Common labor receives from $500 to $600 a year in the basic industries. As official investigation has shown and the writer of the above letter states, labor in these industries is practically all foreign.

WHO WILL DO THE WORK?

Americans can not and foreigners ought not be allowed to work in this country for those low wages. Neither can Americans work or ought foreigners be allowed to work for the $582 a year wage fixed by the United States Railroad Labor Board for maintenance-of-way men, whose duty it is to make and keep the rails safe for public traffic and travel.

Just as soon as wages in those industries rise to the point where the breadwinner can rear and support his family in keeping with American standards the native born will reinvade those industries from which they have been driven by the ruinous competition of imported cheap labor, often inducted into conditions amounting to slavery, and when wages do rise to that level the native supply will quite meet the demand, just as native labor does in every other country.

Gentlemen, the United States is paying and will pay a fearful price for the cheap labor already brought in. It is doubtful if our own ancestors will not damn us for the delay of years. Better slow down. To use up our resources still faster than we have simply to make more places for more aliens, to use more resources, to require more aliens on more jobs is waste. It has been a great scheme, it helped to make a great country, but it has its limitation.

PATRIOTIC SOCIETIES SEE THE DANGER.

Purely patriotic societies—national, State, and local—with no selfish interest or purpose, whose traditions and principles go back to colonial days, such as the Patriotic Order Sons of America, the Junior Order, and many others, are a unit in support of the existing 3 per cent law, and with the Grand Army of the Republic, the American Legion, and the Sons and Daughters of the American Revolution are urging more and more, perfecting and making permanent that legislation.

Not only are there all these organized groups urging this legislation but the farmers, who are the very mainstay of the Nation, through the National Grange or Patrons of Husbandry, with almost a million members, through their able representative, Dr. T. C. Atkeson, and prominent writers, experts, officials, and sincere students of the question, like Prof. Robert De Courcy Ward, of Harvard; Mr. Madison Grant, of New York; Colonel Yerkes, of the Army; Kenneth L. Roberts, Mr. James H. Patten, of Washington, D. C., and others who have made searching investigations of the whole problem, absolutely agree with the widespread demand of the press and public for strengthening, perfecting, and making the existing temporary legislation permanent.

NEW YORK'S PLIGHT.

The city of New York is rapidly becoming an alien metropolis, with a babel of the tongues of the earth. A leading New York daily recently quoted Prof. Duncan Joyce in a speech before the Young Women's Hebrew Association, as saying:

New York City is overpopulated, and unless the immigration authorities open their eyes to the situation and enforce restriction in as rigid a manner as possible, the struggle for existence will grow keener and keener every year. Few facts are more remarkable nowadays than the enormous increase of the population in the city of New York, a city to which the eyes of all the people of the earth are turned as a sort of Elysium.

With all the grounds we have for congratulating ourselves upon past achievements, however, there is one drawback that can not easily be overlooked. Never was this city so overcrowded. Never were there such numbers without work. In the professions, among the learned, in the stores, in the shops, in street work, all places are taken. While wretched men of all races exist by the hundreds who, for the wretched pittance of $1.50, will tramp the gutters of our streets all day bearing placards on their shoulders.

MORE THAN ONE IN EVERY THREE.

New York City has doubled her population in the last few years. Her foreign-born population is 35.5 per cent. A study of the 1920 census figures made by Dr. Walter Laidlaw, executive secretary of the New York City 1920 census committee, shows that New York City has a foreign white-stock population as large as the whole population of Chicago, Detroit, and Boston; that the Russian element is larger than the population of Warsaw, and that there are 100,000 more Italians there than in Naples. The leading foreign elements in New York City in 1920, according to Doctor Laidlaw, are as follows:

Russian	994,356
Italian	802,893
Irish	637,744
Austrian and Hungarian	603,167
German	593,199

There are 13,920,692 foreign born in the United States according to the 1920 census. Many of them are unable to speak English, and a still larger number can not read it.

Oh, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, in but a few years these aliens in very despair will be pounding heavily at the very pillars of our Government, where those who have come ahead of them a few years back with their socialism, their communism, their Bolshevism have been merely gnawing like rats at our foundations.

THE GREAT DANGER.

In concluding I want to commend to all those interested in the racial and political aspects of the question two epoch-making books by Dr. Lothrop Stoddard entitled "The Rising Tide of Color" and "The Revolt Against Civilization," an equally important book by Madison Grant entitled "The Passing of the Great Race," and a most illuminating monograph, just off the Putnam press, by Daniel Chauncey Brewer, entitled "The Peril of the Republic."

This book should be read by all persons who are giving study to the various forces which endanger the safety of our country. Mr. Kenneth L. Roberts's volume, "Why Europe Leaves Home," is well worth reading, and his forceful articles in the Saturday Evening Post have given great impetus to the movement for increased restriction. William Allen White, the noted editor of the Emporia Gazette, declares that immigration is bringing more morons from the Old World, and they are breeding faster than the good old stock of the early settlers of America.

No one concerned about the future of this Republic with any knowledge of the subtle "boring from within" that has been increasing from foreign sources year by year can afford to ignore the warnings contained in the books I have mentioned. They should be read by every thoughtful American, and a reading will convince him that our forces of assimilation and Americanization are strained to the breaking point; the melting pot is overflowing and will not melt any more, and that more foreign immigration is simply water on the wheels of the radicals and near radicals who would pull down our very house upon our heads, destroy our very civilization, and reenact here the Russian debacle ushering in the four horsemen of the Apocalypse.

APPENDIX A.

I present the following additional reports in reference to the Japanese situation:

JAPANESE SETTLERS ADVISED TO BRING FAMILIES SPEEDILY—PASSPORTLESS SHOULD ASK GOVERNMENT FOR PASSPORTS—SHORTRIDGE AND JOHNSON BILLS FEARED.

The press reports of the Albert Johnson immigration bill have aroused deep concern among California Japanese. Both of the San Francisco Japanese papers, the Japanese American News and the New World, are out to-day—June 28—in editorials on the subject. The Japanese American News looks to Tokyo for a strong protest if the bill should receive the approval of Congress. The New World anticipates the passage of something like the Johnson bill and also the Shortridge bill providing for alien registration. What the Japanese fear most, according to the New World, is an immigration law excluding relatives of resident Japanese and a registration law which would hit Japanese who are here without passports and have not been here long enough to acquire domicile under our present immigration laws. The frequency of references to the latter class by the Japanese press is a strong indication that it is numerically a large class. To save these men from detection and deportation under an alien registration act there is a quiet movement afoot for getting vouchers for them through the consulates. We know how easily a perfectly good certificate of domicile can be manufactured by the machinery of the consul-controlled Japanese associations. Of course, it is only those who have smuggled in recently who are objects of concern, and this gives all the more significance to the appeals on their behalf. If there were but few of them, there would not be so much anxiety. The New World says:

"At the present time the questions which give most anxiety to the resident Japanese are this one of prohibiting the coming of wives and children and the registration bills of Senator SHORTRIDGE and Representative JOHNSON. We think our nationals should at this time make the utmost haste in sending for their wives and children.

"The Shortridge-Johnson bill is likely to meet strong opposition in America on the part of resident aliens and others, but sooner or later it is likely to be adopted in some form. This bill does not strike any serious blow to aliens eligible to citizenship, but to others it is truly a great blow, spiritually and economically, and its most disastrous consequences will fall on the Japanese. Particularly those Japanese who are here without passports and have not been here long enough to acquire domicile will suffer greatly. Therefore the best thing for such persons to do is to confer with the secretaries of their local Japanese associations with a view to securing passports from the old country.

"The two questions above referred to have already come up for legislation in both Houses of Congress, and sooner or later the proposed bills may become laws. We must remember that both of the bills are aimed at orientals—i. e., aliens ineligible to citizenship. If the Japanese secure citizenship, these bills will not affect them. But the naturalization question seems to be very far from settlement, and so the quickest and best policy is that mentioned above."

JAPAN'S REACTION TO UNDESIRABLE IMMIGRANTS—A FEW HUNDRED CHINESE AND KOREANS BECOME A "PROBLEM" TO THE AUTHORITIES.

The following story, published in the Japanese-American News of August 29, 1922, shows the shallowness of the Japanese professions of "race equality" when it comes to admitting aliens to her own shores on an equality with native residents:

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS GLARE AT CHINESE PEDDLERS—BRINGING THEIR CHEAP WARES TO OUR COUNTRY WHERE PRICES ARE HIGH—STRICT OVERSIGHT AT TIME OF LANDING.

Recently large numbers of Chinese peddlers have been crowding into Tokyo, and at present there are 800 or 900 of them. They bring to our country of high prices cheap goods, such as Chinese umbrellas, fans, medicines, etc., and peddle them about the country. These peddlers come chiefly from Tsingtau and Shanghai, and congregate in cheap lodging houses in the Kanda and Hongo districts of Tokyo. Recently another company of 70 or 80 have taken lodgings in the Gotanda district, where they operate under orders from a chief, who apportions the wares and sends them out under instructions. They can live very cheaply, six to seven of them occupying a single six-mat (9 feet by 12 feet) room, costing them, with two meals a day, only 17 to 18 yen a month. (A yen is about 50 cents.) After paying all expenses, car fare, etc., on their trips they can send home to the old country about 50 to 60 yen a month. Umbrellas which cost only 20 to 30 sen (a sen is a hundredth part of a yen) sell easily for 1 yen in Japan. They say they are especially successful in making money to send home by selling "rokushingan" (a kind of pill), said to be made of human liver. This medicine they claim to sell cheaper than the local druggists, and say it is more effective, hence it is eagerly bought, disappearing as if it had wings.

Furthermore, they are well organized and work together, all obeying well the orders of the chief. For this reason, they are regarded with suspicion, as being possibly the cat's-paws of the Bolsheviki. Not only so, but recently indications have appeared connecting them with Koreans. For these reasons the police officials are keeping the actions of these peddlers constantly under observation. A certain Government official, in speaking of this matter, says: "We are taking full precautions in regard to the landing of Chinese peddlers, but by disguises and other methods they are crowding in, much to our embarrassment. If this goes on we shall have vast numbers of them here, and our Japanese merchants will suffer from it. It may become necessary to adopt very stringent rules for dealing with the situation." This shows what a problem the Chinese peddlers have become to the Government.

APPENDIX B.

JAPANESE IN SUPREME COURT.

OLYMPIA, WASH., September 15.—Attorney General L. L. Thompson leaves next week to argue the question of the right of Japanese to be admitted to citizenship before the United States Supreme Court on October 2. His brief, contending that the Japanese are not of white stock and therefore ineligible to citizenship, is now in the printers' hands.

Pitted against Attorney General Thompson in this case, on which hinges much of the anti-Japanese legislation in this county, is former United States Attorney General George W. Wickersham, of New York. At the same time the Washington case is heard a similar appeal from Hawaii will be argued.

The Washington question arose over the refusal of Secretary of State J. Grant Hinkle to accept articles of incorporation for the Japanese Real Estate Holding Co., presented for filing by Takuji Yamashita and Charles Hio Kono, who claimed to have been naturalized by the Pierce County Superior Court in May, 1902. The Washington Supreme Court held that the Japanese were not eligible to citizenship, sustaining Secretary Hinkle's refusal to permit the company to do business, and the Japanese appealed to the United States Supreme Court.

The United States Supreme Court will also be called on in October to decide the "color" of a man in the appeal of Takao Ozawa, Honolulu, Japanese, who is attempting to gain American citizenship by naturalization. Upon the outcome of the test case rests the disposition of several other similar suits in which Japanese have attempted to become naturalized.

Ozawa contends that he is entitled to citizenship on the ground that he has sought to mold his life along strictly American lines in accordance with the best American customs and ideals and on the further ground that he is "white" and is eligible for citizenship under the law, which provides that only a "free white person or person of African descent or nativity" may be naturalized.

Ozawa's efforts to obtain citizenship began here several years ago. The United States District Court for Hawaii denied his contention, and this decision was upheld by the Federal Circuit Court of the Ninth District of California. From this decision he appealed to the Supreme Court.

Ozawa contended that originally Japanese were of the white race. He traced the history of Japan several thousands of years to the Ainu Tribe and said that James M. Beck, Solicitor General of the United States State Department, had expressed the opinion that that particular branch of the Japanese race has characteristics of the Caucasian.

Ozawa came to Hawaii when a young man and was educated in the American schools here. In one of the briefs submitted here Ozawa said that he had taken special pains to educate his children in American public schools in order that they might become loyal American citizens, citizenship having been acquired by them through their birth on American soil. He said his children had not been taught the Japanese language, and that "nothing pertaining to Japan or the Japanese had been allowed to creep into their daily lives, education, or their religion."

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that privilege.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House on the legislative program.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to address the House on the legislative program. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I hope that all Members will try to be here to-morrow. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the Unanimous Consent Calendar will be considered, and my understanding is that the Speaker contemplates the consideration of some measures under suspension of the rules. We hope also that the bonus bill will reach the House and that we may be able to send it to conference. In view of these matters of importance I hope that all Members will be here.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, September 1, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

677. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce transmitting part 2 of the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Lighthouses for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ZIHLMAN: Committee on District of Columbia. S. 2531. An act to create a board of accountancy for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with amendments (Rept. No. 1200). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MILLSPAUGH: A bill (H. R. 12528) to amend the Federal reserve act by prohibiting the establishment and maintenance of branch banks or branch offices by member banks; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SCHALL: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 375) directing the Postmaster General to report the cost of printing and distributing the official Postal Bulletin and the maintenance of the Postal Bureau of Information and the assignment of post-office inspectors; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. RYAN: A resolution (H. Res. 420) calling for the removal of Brig. Gen. Charles E. Sawyer as chief of the coordination section of the Veterans' Bureau, and the appointment of some one with sufficient time and ability to fill this office; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BLAND of Indiana: A resolution (H. Res. 421) for the immediate consideration of House bill 12157; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ACKERMAN: A bill (H. R. 12529) for the relief of the estate of the late William R. Bennett; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BARKLEY: A bill (H. R. 12530) granting an increase of pension to Mattie A. Tansil; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BROOKS of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 12531) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Ford; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12532) granting a pension to Daisy Fear; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12533) granting a pension to Minerva Douglas; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12534) granting a pension to Allie M. Agrue; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12535) granting a pension to Mary J. Steele; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12536) granting a pension to E. B. McMillen; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12537) granting a pension to Mary Guy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOGAN: A bill (H. R. 12538) for the relief of Mary Dwyer; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LINEBERGER: A bill (H. R. 12539) for the relief of William H. Wagoner; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 12540) granting an increase of pension to David Akridge; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. VAILE: A bill (H. R. 12541) granting an increase of Pension to Mary S. Bisco; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6257. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Mr. Peter Moan, of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring a 40 per cent duty on wire cloth; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6258. Also, petition of the American Protective Tariff League, New York City, N. Y., regarding tariff publications; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6259. By Mr. LEA of California: Petition of 332 citizens of California protesting against the enactment of pending Sunday bills; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

6260. By Mr. SPEAKS: Papers to accompany House bill 12511, granting an increase of pension to Mary Bee; to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, September 1, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, Thou hast granted unto us the privilege of seeing the opening of another month. We thank Thee that Thou hast carried us safely through the duties and the responsibilities of the past month. While we know not what the day or the hour may bring forth, we ask Thee that we may realize that our times are in Thy hands. Give us the conviction of high and holy duty, and enable us always to seek Thy good pleasure and to serve our generation by Thy will. We ask it in Jesus Christ's name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, August 25, 1922, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MEMORIAL.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a resolution of the Farm Labor Union of America, No. 105, New Boston, Tex., protesting against the reappointment of W. P. G. Harding on the Federal Reserve Board, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COLT, from the Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12022) relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3970) amending the act of June 30, 1922, making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 3971) granting a pension to Nellie Wilkinson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 3972) relating to the admission of attorneys and counselors to practice in the United States courts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KELLOGG:

A bill (S. 3973) to remit the duty on a carillon of bells to be imported for the House of Hope Church, St. Paul, Minn.; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3974) to amend the act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1906, as amended; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

A bill (S. 3975) making an appropriation for the enforcement of the acts approved March 2, 1893, and February 17, 1911, requiring common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to provide certain equipment for their cars and locomotives; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. SMITH:

A bill (S. 3976) to extend the Market News Service to certain States; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 3977) to extend the Market News Service of the Department of Agriculture by telegraph to the State of Texas; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. BRANDEGEE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 242) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the District of Columbia of a statue by José Clará personifying "Serenity"; to the Committee on the Library.

UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION.

Mr. DIAL submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission, to be known as the United States coal commission, for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AUTHORITY OF ADMIRAL BRISTOL IN THE NEAR EAST.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 343), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is directed to report to the Senate whether or not Admiral Mark L. Bristol, presently stationed at Constantinople, has been invested with any diplomatic or political authority on behalf of the Government of the United States in addition to the authority exercised by him as an officer of the Navy; whether or not said Admiral Bristol is entitled to be designated as American high commissioner at Constantinople, and if so, to report to the Senate the extent of his authority as such commissioner; and, if not incompatible with the public interests, to report the instructions which have been given to said Admiral Bristol in the premises, and particularly to report whether or not said Admiral Bristol has used his position as an officer of the Government of the United States or otherwise in favor of the Kemalist Turks in the existing war with the Greeks in Asia Minor and in the controversy as to the military occupation and political control of the Smyrna district and other districts in Asia Minor inhabited by the people of the Greek race.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time between now and 2 o'clock be devoted to the consideration of bills unobjected to on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will report the first bill on the calendar.

Mr. ASHURST. At the beginning of the calendar?

Mr. CURTIS. At the beginning.

The bill (S. 214) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as the first in order on the calendar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In the absence of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. A good many Senators interested in the calendar are not here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Nelson	Stanfield
Brandegee	Gooding	New	Sutherland
Bursum	Harreld	Nicholson	Townsend
Calder	Heflin	Oddie	Underwood
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Wadsworth
Capper	Kellogg	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Colt	Kendrick	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Culberson	Keyes	Rawson	Warren
Cummins	Lenroot	Reed, Pa.	Watson, Ga.
Curtis	McCormick	Robinson	Williams
Dial	McCumber	Sheppard	Willis
Dillingham	McLean	Shortridge
Edge	McNary	Simmons
Ernst	Myers	Smoot

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

REGULATION OF ELECTION EXPENDITURES.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to take up Order of Business No. 864, the bill (S. 3603) to regulate expenditures in connection with the nomination and election of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that a unanimous-consent agreement has been entered into to consider unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. POMERENE. I realize that I am in a position where I can not insist upon the request if objection is made, but I have felt that it is absolutely necessary that something shall be done if we are to get any relief on the subject at all at this session of Congress and during the present campaign.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill is on the calendar and it is possible that we may reach it before 2 o'clock.

Mr. POMERENE. It is one of the last bills on the calendar.

Mr. FLETCHER. The unanimous-consent agreement covers all unobjected bills, and the Senator could make way for it by objecting to the consideration of other bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wonder if the Senator will not permit an opportunity for the preparation of amendments which may deal with the disparity in the voting population of the States? It seems to me that the purpose which the Senator has in mind is admirable, but that mere justice requires that a different limitation should be fixed, for example, for the States of Nevada and New York.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, there is very great force in what the Senator from Illinois says, but this was the thought of the committee: The Supreme Court of New York has held the present law to be unconstitutional in so far as it applies to primaries——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not wish to object to the statement which is being made by the Senator from Ohio, but we have already a unanimous-consent agreement that until 2 o'clock to-day the time is to be devoted to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator——

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw the point until the Senator from Ohio shall have answered the question of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. POMERENE. I simply wish to suggest that the committee felt that if we were to have any legislation which would apply to the campaign the only way it could probably pass would be in the form in which the law now is in so far as it relates to general elections. The question which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] suggests was considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and the chairman of the committee, on motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], has appointed a subcommittee of five, which has been instructed to take up the entire subject, including the thought which the Senator from Illinois has in mind, and to report to the Senate not later than January 1 next. We thought that if we were to take up these new provisions it might jeopardize the passage of the bill; and I am sure that the Senator from Illinois, as well as myself, would regret if no law on the subject were passed to regulate expenditures during the coming campaign.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I had a conference with the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Montana on yesterday, and I also suggested to some of my colleagues, who at the moment are less engaged than am I, that they consider the question and endeavor to prepare a simple amendment graduating, in some simple form, expenditures in proportion either to population or to the number of Representatives allotted to the several States, and the one with whom I talked at greatest length assured me that during the evening he would study the matter.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. May I ask the Senator from Illinois if he would be willing to take up this bill some time during the morning hour next week?

Mr. McCORMICK. Oh, certainly. Indeed, I will go so far as to say that if I can not prepare or find some other Senator to prepare an amendment such as I have in mind, and submit it to the Senator in the course of the day, I shall have no objection to make thereafter. I am eager, as the Senator from Ohio will bear witness, to pass this character of legislation.

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly, I know that. Mr. President, it is suggested that this bill go over until next week. I have some important engagements, however, next week.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Then let the bill go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. McCORMICK. I shall be willing that the bill go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. POMERENE. Then I ask unanimous consent that this measure be taken up to-morrow morning on the convening of the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I can not tell at this time what measure may be under consideration to-morrow morning, but I hope the Senate may adjourn to-night, so that we may have a morning hour to-morrow. So far as I am personally concerned, I have no objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. If there is to be a morning hour to-morrow, then, I will modify my request.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest that the Senator from Ohio modify his request.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take this bill up for disposition on the conclusion of the morning hour to-morrow, Saturday, morning.

Mr. LENROOT. If there be any morning hour?

Mr. CURTIS. If there be any morning hour.

Mr. POMERENE. If there be any morning hour; otherwise that it be taken up on the convening of the Senate.

Mr. LENROOT. We may have the coal bill up before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have talked with the Senator from Idaho on that subject, and, while there has been no binding agreement, he has indicated that, perhaps, an arrangement could be made to take up the bill for which I desire consideration either to-day or to-morrow. I regret that the Senator from Idaho is not here.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest that we let the matter go over for a little while and proceed with the calendar. The Senator from Idaho when he comes in may then be interviewed, as also may other Senators who are interested.

Mr. POMERENE. I realize that the calendar has the right of way this morning. Then I will bring the matter up a little later in the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before the pending matter is disposed of, I should like to say a word which I hope may be of some aid. I am in entire sympathy with the view which has been expressed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] that some distinction should be made with respect to the amounts to be expended by candidates for United States Senator in the various States. In the preparation of the general corrupt practices act some time ago, in which I participated as a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, recognition was given to that principle and I am in entire accord with it; and, yet, Mr. President, I desire to say that, by reason of the extensive exemptions which are contained in the present law, the disparity is by no means so great as would be generally believed. It is true that there is a general limitation of $10,000, but it will be observed that every candidate is at liberty to expend large sums of money without the necessity of making any accounting at all—for instance, for circulars, for traveling expenses, and for all manner of printing and advertising except advertising through the newspapers. A limited amount may be expended for those purposes and for postage and other items of that kind, which ordinarily are the chief items of expense in the conduct of a campaign. So that it is not by any means a simple matter to prepare a provision which would be entirely fair and just, and I am satisfied that none can be prepared at this time that would be very generally accepted.

I trust that the Senator from Illinois will feel constrained not to precipitate that discussion at this time, but let us get along once more with the arrangement provided by the old law, and then, after the ensuing election, the committee already appointed will take into consideration these matters, hear the parties interested, and endeavor to frame a law for the future which will be fairly equitable.

I am perfectly satisfied that once we begin proposing amendments to the bill which has been reported by the committee other amendments will be added, so that its passage will be imperiled if not entirely defeated. There was scarcely a member of the committee who was entirely satisfied with the present law, but they conceived that it would be better to revitalize it for the present occasion and pass it than to have no law at all governing the expenditure of money at the ensuing election. I repeat I hope very sincerely that the bill as prepared by the committee will have the approval of the Senate without amending it in any particular except in the one suggested by the committee itself. There is no purpose except to give vitality to the present law and make it available for the occasion of the ensuing election, with the intention upon the reassembling of Congress to take up the subject and deal with it in a reasonable way and to devise a measure which will meet the approval of the Senate.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the calling of the calendar is in order and nothing else is in order. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

The bill (S. 1467) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1807) to aid in stabilizing the coal industry was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that that bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1016) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1375) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 67) authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to hold hearings here or elsewhere and to employ a stenographer to report such hearings, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the resolution may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

LESTER A. ROCKWELL.

The bill (S. 63) for the relief of Lester A. Rockwell was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that the report may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, perhaps I can expedite the matter by a brief statement and a reference to the report of the committee. It appears that—

Lester A. Rockwell enlisted September 17, 1864, as a substitute, to serve three years as a private in Company G, First Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry. On March 16, 1865, he was captured in Hanover County, Va., and confined at Richmond until March 26, 1865, when he was paroled. On March 30, 1865, he was furloughed for 30 days—

It will be recollected that the war was nearly over at that time—and failed to return in accordance with the conditions of the furlough. In explanation of his failure to return within the 30 days he states that upon April 27, a few days before the expiration of his furlough, he left his home in South Windsor, Conn., but was refused transportation at Hartford station because his transportation papers were not indorsed by the Hartford official. He endeavored to locate the official to have them properly indorsed, but was unable to do so, and was informed that his regiment was mustered out May 1, 1865. He supposed such to be the case until several years afterwards, when he learned that his regiment remained in the service until August 2, 1865.

It is one of those cases which occurred at the very close of the war, and the committee believed that no desertion was intended.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection to the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that Lester A. Rockwell, late of Company G, First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of Company G, First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry, on the 29th day of April, 1865; but no pay, bounty, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to or by reason of the passage of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RURAL HOMES.

The bill (S. 491) to provide, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CHARLES K. BOND.

The bill (S. 62) for the relief of Charles K. Bond, alias Kimball W. Rollins, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "present with his company and regiment from the 19th day of March, 1865, to April 23, 1865," and insert "honorably discharged from the military service of the United States," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Charles K. Bond, alias Kimball W. Rollins, late of Company H, Fourth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1829) for the relief of Walter Runke was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Let that go over, in the absence of the Senator introducing it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 7) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real estate brokers in the District of Columbia," approved February 4, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

STREET RAILWAYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 985) to amend the provisions of an act relating to certain railway corporations owning or operating street railways in the District of Columbia, approved June 5, 1900, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 4, line 1, after the word "company," to insert "the East Washington Heights Traction Railroad Co., the Washington & Maryland Railway Co., the Washington & Virginia Railway Co., the Washington & Old Dominion Railway Co.," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Washington Railway and Electric Co., a corporation, be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, as hereinafter provided, to acquire, use, operate, and enjoy all the estate, property rights, and franchises of the Potomac Electric Power Co., also a corporation: Provided, however, That the said power company shall not be acquired by the said street railway company unless and until consent and approval so to do first shall have been given by the owners of record of at least 75 per cent of the capital stock of the railway company and by the owners of record of at least 75 per cent of the capital stock of the power company. When the said stockholders of the two corporations shall have given their respective consents and approval for the acquirement aforesaid, then, upon filing with the recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia such extracts of the proceedings of the meetings of the shareholders of said corporations, showing such assent and approval, duly certified and attested under the respective seals of said corporations, the said recorder of deeds shall duly record the same, together with a copy of this act, in his office; whereupon all of the estate, property, works, rights, privileges, and franchises of said Potomac Electric Power Co. shall vest in, be held, used, enjoyed, exercised, and be enforceable by the said Washington Railway & Electric Co; and thereupon the capital stock of the said power company shall be annulled: Provided further, That the existing liabilities of the Potomac Electric Power Co. and the rights of its creditors shall in no wise be prejudiced thereby: And provided further, That no action or proceeding to which the said Potomac Electrict Power Co. is or may be a party shall abate in consequence thereof, but the same may be continued in the name of the party, by or against which the same was begun unless the court shall order the said Washington Railway & Electric Co. to be substituted in its place. And thereafter the property so merged or consolidated shall be entitled to a reasonable return at all times on the fair value of the property of the consolidated corporation used and useful for street railway and electric power operations. The Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia in determining the reasonable return herein provided for shall give due consideration among other things to the transportation, heating, light, and power needs of the District of Columbia and the suburban community adjacent thereto, the necessity of enlarging and improving the existing facilities, of adequately protecting capital already judiciously invested therein, and of inducing further investments of capital needed for such purposes at reasonable rates of return, all subject to all rights of appeal from any such order or decision to the several courts upon the same conditions as are provided by the existing law for appeals from other decisions of the said commission: And provided further, That said Washington Railway & Electric Co. is hereby authorized, subject to the approval of the Public Utilities Commission, to issue such stocks and bonds or other evidences of indebtedness and to execute such mortgages, deeds of trust, trust agreements, or other securities as may be necessary for any corporate purpose, including the financing of needed extensions, additions, betterments, or purchase of equipment.

SEC. 2. That the Capital Traction Co., the East Washington Heights Traction Railroad Co., the Washington & Maryland Railway Co., the Washington & Virginia Railway Co., the Washington & Old Dominion Railway Co., the Washington Railway & Electric Co., the Georgetown & Tennallytown Railway Co., the Washington-Interurban Railroad Co., the City & Suburban Railway of Washington, and the Washington & Rockville Railway Co. of Montgomery County are hereby authorized to merge or consolidate all and singular their respective corporate rights, privileges, and franchises, and all their respective works and properties, real and personal, tangible and intangible, into one corporation and property for the ownership, management, control, and operation of all their said works, properties, rights, privileges, and franchises under such corporate name as may be adopted under the following conditions:

(a) The said corporations may, by agreement in writing, assented to by the owners of record of at least 75 per cent of the capital stock of each of them, agree to merge and consolidate into a single corporation and to own and operate all the rights, estates, works, properties, and franchises aforesaid owned by them under such corporate name as may be adopted and stated in said agreement and upon such terms and conditions not contrary to the provisions hereof as they may agree upon, but subject to the approval in writing of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia. Upon the execution of the said agreement in writing and its approval by the Public Utilities Commission and the lodging thereof in the office of the recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia for record, as hereinafter provided, the said merger and consolidation shall be complete and the merged or consolidated corporation shall be and become a body politic and corporate under the name so agreed on. It may sue and be sued thereby; may adopt and have a common seal and may change the same at pleasure, and shall have, own, and possess all and singular the rights, privileges, and franchises of each of said corporations parties to said agreement, their works and properties, and may own, operate, control, and mortgage all the said estates, works, properties, rights, and franchises of the several corporations merged, and shall be subject to all the duties, restrictions, and obligations imposed by law upon the several corporations whose estates, rights, and franchises it acquires pursuant to the provisions of this act except as the same may be modified by this act.

(b) The approval of the stockholders herein provided for may be given by the consent in writing of the owners of record of at least 75 per cent of the capital stock of each company parties to said agreement or by the vote of the owners of at least 75 per cent of the capital stock of each of such companies represented at a special meeting called and held as prescribed by the by-laws of the several companies or by law. When a certificate shall be filed with the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, signed and acknowledged by a majority of the board of directors of each of the corporations to be affected thereby and certified under the seals of each of said corporations showing the agreement for consolidation and merger and all of the terms thereof and its conformity with the provisions of this section, such certificate shall be presumptive evidence of the facts therein set forth, and thereupon said Public Utilities Commission shall approve or disapprove the same and certify its action thereon by certificate to be attached thereto under its seal and if approved it shall forward the same with the certificate of its approval thereon to the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, who shall indorse thereon the day and hour of its receipt and record the same in his offices. If the commission shall disapprove the same, its action thereon and a statement of its reasons therefor shall be forwarded to each of the corporations parties to said agreement.

(c) Within 15 days after the filing of such certificate with the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia a notice shall be mailed to each stockholder of record in each of such corporations by the merged or consolidated corporation, setting forth the time when and the place where such certificate was filed; and if within 30 days after the mailing of such notice any stockholder or any of the companies affected thereby shall give notice in writing to the merged or consolidated corporation that he dissents from such contract, it shall be the duty of the merged or consolidated corporation within 60 days after the filing of such certificate to institute a proceeding for the appraisement of the shares of all of such dissenting stockholders. If any stockholder shall omit to give such notice of dissent within the period herein limited, he shall be deemed and taken to have assented to such contract. The said proceedings for appraisement may be begun by filing with the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a petition setting out the names and addresses of record of each of the dissenting stockholders, with the number of shares, the name of the company in which they were held, and the par value thereof, and any other pertinent facts, and praying for proper process against said dissenting parties and the appointment of three persons to appraise the value of all such stock.

The court shall thereupon direct such process to issue, by order of publication or otherwise, and upon its return duly executed shall appoint three such appraisers and designate the time and place for their first meeting. The court may fill any vacancy in the board of appraisers occurring by the refusal or neglect to serve or otherwise. The appraisers shall meet at a time and place designated, and after being sworn honestly and faithfully to discharge their duties they shall appraise the stock of each dissenting stockholder at its fair value without any regard to any appreciation or depreciation thereof as a consequence of such merger and consolidation, and said award when confirmed by the court shall be final and conclusive on all parties. The charges and expenses of the appraisers shall be paid by the merged or consolidated corporation. If anyone entitled shall refuse to accept the amount awarded him, or if for any reason it shall be impossible to make payment of the amount of the award to such person entitled to receive the same without unreasonable delay, the court may direct the same to be deposited in court. When the said company shall have paid or deposited in court the amount fixed by the appraisers as the value of the shares of the dissenting stockholder or stockholders, such stockholder or stockholders shall cease to have any interest in the said appraised stock or in the property or franchises represented thereby, and the merged or consolidated corporation shall receive back from the proper corporation whose estate, rights, property, and franchises it has acquired that portion of the consideration for such merger and consolidation or the proceeds thereof which otherwise would have been distributed to such dissenting stockholder.

If such payment or deposit is not made within 30 days after the confirmation of the appraisal, the amount of the award with interest from the date of confirmation shall be a judgment against the said merged or consolidated corporation and may be entered, docketed, and collected as other judgments in said court are by law entered, docketed, and collected. If the said company shall omit to institute the proceedings hereinbefore required within the time hereby limited, any stockholder giving such notice may institute such proceeding by a proper petition on his own behalf or at the election of such stockholder the estate, rights, property, and franchises of the corporation in which he was a stockholder shall revest in such corporation, and the consideration received therefor shall be repaid to the said merged or consolidated corporation.

(d) Such merged or consolidated corporation is hereby authorized, subject to the approval of the Public Utilities Commission, to issue such stocks and bonds or other evidences of indebtedness and to execute such mortgages, deeds of trust, trust agreements, or other securities as may be necessary for the purposes.

(e) Such merged or consolidated corporation is hereby authorized to finance needed additions and improvements to its property and equipment or to retire outstanding bonds or other indebtedness by the issuance and sale or exchange therefor of additional stocks and bonds or other evidences of indebtedness under the same limitations as are provided by existing law for the issuance of additional bonds: Provided, That the certificate of the Public Utilities Commission showing authority for such issue shall first be obtained.

SEC. 3. That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect the proceedings for the valuations of the several component companies which may be merged or consolidated under the provisions of this act, but such proceedings, actions, and suits now pending shall proceed to final decision in the names of the now existing companies; and the fair value of the property of the merged or consolidated company used and useful for street railway and electric power operation shall be the sum of the fair values of the several companies which may enter into the merged or consolidated corporation aforesaid, as finally ascertained, plus any addition subsequently made.

SEC. 4. That Congress hereby reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributer, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were subsequently signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 813. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close upper Water Street between Twenty-first and Twenty-second Streets NW.; and

S. 2597. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, and safety, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in the alleys of the District of Columbia," approved September 25, 1914.

DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF FUEL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributer, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel, was read twice by its title.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the House bill just laid before the Senate be considered at the proper time without reference to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not understand the request. What is the request?

Mr. CUMMINS. My request is that the bill be considered by the Senate at the proper time without reference to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I ask that for this reason: There are two or three differences between the House bill and the bill upon the same subject which was reported by the Interstate Commerce Committee. Those differences will necessarily be settled upon the floor of the Senate, and there is no possible reason for referring the bill to the committee. It will delay the final disposition of the matter, and it is of great importance that there be a speedy consideration and disposition of the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator to allow his request to go over for the present. I am willing to let the bill lie on the table for the present. I want to examine it before I will consent.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well. I recognize, of course, that a single objection would necessitate the reference of the bill to the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Really, a bill of this very grave importance should go to the committee; and it is only out of deference to the Senator's request that I am not insisting that it go to the committee now.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is entirely within his rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will lie upon the table.

Mr. UNDERWOOD subsequently said: Mr. President, a while ago I objected to the request of the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee to allowing the fuel control bill to go to the calendar without going to the committee. I did so because a similar bill had been considered by the Interstate Commerce Committee, and certain important amendments had been added to it. Since that time I have had a talk with the chairman of the committee, and he assures me that the same amendments will be proposed to the House bill, which obviates my objection. I have no objection, therefore, to the bill going to the calendar, as it has already been considered by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asked that it lie on the table without reference to the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. I suggest that it go to the calendar. Then it will be subject to any motion that may be made in regard to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa did that in order that when the Senate bill is brought up the House bill can be then considered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection to its going to the calendar, with the understanding that I have in regard to the matter.

Mr. LENROOT. I suggest that it go to the calendar, which will absolutely fix its status.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It makes no difference whether it goes to the calendar or lies on the table. It may go to the calendar.

RETIREMENT OF CERTAIN ARMY FIELD CLERKS, ETC.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 48) authorizing retirement as warrant officers of certain Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). This joint resolution has been heretofore considered as in Committee of the Whole, and amended. It is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPULSORY SCHOOL ATTENDANCE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 2040) to provide for compulsory school attendance of children, to provide for the taking of a school census, to create the department of school attendance and work permits for the administration of this act and the act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, within the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let that go over.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will take up that bill. It is exceedingly important that we have action upon it just as soon as possible. The District Commissioners, the Board of Education, the superintendent of schools, all the parent-teachers' associations, and practically every civic organization in Washington, have appealed to Congress for early action on the bill. The committee reported it unanimously. It is in line with the school laws governing all the cities of the United States, and Washington should have had this legislation long ago. I think if a few minutes' consideration were given the measure there would be no serious objection to it.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will permit me, I want to suggest also, in support of the request made by the Senator from Kansas, that there has been, as I understand, no school census here for a considerable time, and without a school census it is next to impossible to provide for the compulsory-attendance feature, and that is provided for in this bill.

Mr. CAPPER. That is one of the main provisions of the bill. The Senator from Ohio is entirely correct. It is not known what the school population of this city is at this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I do not propose to stand in the way of early consideration of the bill. I have not examined it, but its title indicates that it is a bill of very far-reaching importance, and it seems to me that under the limitation under which we are proceeding now it would be impossible to consider it. However, as far as I am concerned, I withdraw any objection to it.

Mr. CAPPER. Probably the Senator from Florida has in mind the provision with reference to child labor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; and other provisions.

Mr. CAPPER. There is no change in the provisions of this bill from the law as it now stands in the District of Columbia in that respect, except that it combines with the compulsory school attendance department the administration of the law as to child labor; but the requirements of the bill on that subject are no different than they have been for some years past in this District.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not a member of the committee, and I do not care to take the responsibility of objecting to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn. The Secretary will read the bill.

The reading clerk read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 8, line 23, after the words "out of," to strike out "its reserves" and insert "the revenues," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc.—

ARTICLE I.—COMPULSORY SCHOOL ATTENDANCE.

SECTION 1. That every parent, guardian, or other person residing permanently or temporarily in the District of Columbia who has charge or control of a child between the ages of 7 and 16 years shall cause said child to be regularly instructed in a public school or in a private or parochial school or instructed privately during the period of each year in which the public schools of the District of Columbia are in session: Provided, That instruction given in such private or parochial school or privately is deemed equivalent by the Board of Education to the instruction given in the public schools: Provided further, That any child between the ages of 14 and 16 years who has completed satisfactorily the eighth-grade course of study prescribed for the public elementary schools of the District of Columbia or a course of study deemed equivalent thereto by the Board of Education may be excused by the superintendent of schools from further attendance at school under the provisions of this act provided he is actually, legally, and regularly employed.

SEC. 2. That an accurate record of the attendance of all children between the ages of 7 and 16 years shall be kept by the teachers of every public, private, or parochial school and by every teacher giving instruction privately. Such record shall at all times be open to the school-attendance officers or other persons authorized to enforce this act, who may inspect and copy the same.

That it shall be the duty of every principal or head teacher of every public, private, or parochial school or private teacher to report to the department of school attendance and work permits the name and address of any child between the ages of 7 and 16 years enrolled in his school whenever such child has been absent from school two day sessions or four one-half day sessions in any school month, together with the reason for such absence as far as known.

The Board of Education of the District of Columbia may issue a certificate excusing from attendance at school a child who, upon examination ordered by such board, is reported to be unable mentally or physically to profit from attendance at school: Provided, however, That if such examination shows that such child may benefit from specialized instruction adapted to his needs, he shall attend upon such instruction in atypical, ungraded, or other special classes provided for such pupils.

The Board of Education shall in its by-laws define valid excuses for absence from school, and the absence of a child between the ages of 7 and 16 years for any reason other than so defined as valid shall be unlawful.

ARTICLE II.—SCHOOL CENSUS.

SECTION 1. That it shall be the duty of the director of school attendance and work permits, under instruction of the superintendent of schools, approved by the Board of Education, to cause to be made a complete census of all children between the ages of 3 and 18 years permanently or temporarily residing in the District of Columbia before December 31, 1921, or as soon thereafter as practicable and annually thereafter or as frequently as may be found necessary or desirable.

The record of such enumeration of children shall give the full name, address, race, sex, and date and place of birth of every such child, the school attended by him, and if the child is not at school the name and address of his employer, and the name, address, and occupation of the parents or guardian.

It shall be the duty of the principal or head teacher of every public, private, or parochial school or private teacher, in accordance with the rules adopted by the Board of Education, to report to the director of the department of school attendance and work permits the name, address, sex, age, and race of every child under 18 years of age residing permanently or temporarily in the District of Columbia who enrolls in or withdraws from his school.

Such census shall be amended from day to day as changes of residence occur among children within the ages prescribed in this act, and as other persons come within the ages prescribed, and as other persons within such ages shall become residents of the District.

SEC. 2. That any parent, guardian, custodian, principal, or teacher of a child of 3 and under 18 years of age or other persons, who withholds information or makes a false statement concerning the age or school attendance of such a child with intent to deceive or to evade any of the provisions of this act, or who willfully neglects or refuses to answer any inquiry lawfully made or to comply with the requirements of this act, or who induces or attempts to induce any child of 7 and under 16 years of age to be unlawfully absent from school, or who conceals, harbors, or employs while the public schools are in session any such child, unlawfully absent from school, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not to exceed $50.

The parent, guardian, or other person, residing permanently or temporarily in the District of Columbia and having charge or control of any child between the ages of 7 and 16 years who is unlawfully absent from public or private school or private instruction shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction of failure to keep such child regularly in public or private school or to cause it to be regularly instructed in private, shall be punished by a fine of $10 or by commitment to jail for five days, or by both at the discretion of the court: Provided, That each two days such child remains away from school unlawfully shall constitute a separate offense: Provided further, That upon conviction of the first offense, sentence may, upon payment of costs, be suspended. Any child between the ages of 7 and 16 years who is unlawfully and habitually absent from school or is found to be employed, working, or engaging in any trade in violation of any of the provisions of the act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, or any other law to regulate the employment of children may be deemed to be a dependent or a delinquent child and be dealt with as such.

ARTICLE III.—DEPARTMENT OF SCHOOL ATTENDANCE AND WORK PERMITS.

SECTION 1. That there shall be created under the Board of Education of the District of Columbia a department to be called the department of school attendance and work permits, the duties and powers of which shall be to carry out and enforce the provisions of this act and of the act to regulate the school attendance and employment of children. That said Board of Education is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to appoint a director of said department whose rank shall correspond to that of other directors who serve as officers of the Board of Education and who shall be paid the same salary as said directors and who shall be known as the director of the department of school attendance and work permits, and also to appoint such a number of attendance officers, inspectors, clerks, and other assistants as shall be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Such appointments other than that of the director of said department shall be made from a list of applicants obtained from open competitive examinations conducted by the respective boards of examiners of the Board of Education and designed to test the fitness of the applicants for the duties to be performed.

That the enforcement of the provisions of the act to regulate child labor in the District of Columbia is hereby transferred to the department of school attendance and work permits. All inspectors provided for in said act shall hereafter be appointed by the Board of Education and be assigned to the department of school attendance and work permits.

SEC. 2. That in order to enforce the provisions of this act and of the act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, the director of the department of school attendance and work permits, attendance officers, and inspectors duly appointed under the terms of this act, and all other persons authorized to aid in the enforcing of the provisions of this act and of the act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, shall have authority to enter any place or establishment covered by the terms of this act or the act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, to have access to all age and schooling certificates and statements of age kept on file by the employer, and to street trades badges in the possession of any child, and to such other record as may aid them in the enforcement of this act and of the act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia. The persons authorized to issue age and schooling certificates and street trades badges shall have authority to administer all necessary oaths, but no fee shall be charged for this or for any other services rendered by the department of school attendance and work permits.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the police officers, juvenile court probation officers, and all other law-enforcing officers of the District of Columbia to cooperate in the enforcing of the provisions of this act and of the act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia relating to the work of children in occupations pursued in streets and public places by reporting violations thereof to the director of the department of school attendance and work permits.

SEC. 4. That the juvenile court of the District of Columbia is hereby given jurisdiction in all cases arising from this act.

SEC. 5. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of the funds of the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, to carry into effect the provisions of this act and the provisions of the act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the establishment and maintenance of the department of school attendance and work permits under the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, and hereafter appropriations shall be made upon estimates submitted showing in detail the number of employees, the salary to be paid to each, and the particular purpose for which any other sums are desired.

SEC. 6. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with any of the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 7. That if any provision of this act or the application of any provision to certain circumstances be held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provisions to circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 8. That this act shall take effect on the 1st day of July, 1921.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, on page 3, line 25, I move to strike out "1921" and insert "1922."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, line 25, it is proposed to strike out "1921" and insert "1922," so as to read:

That it shall be the duty of the director of school attendance and work permits, under instruction of the superintendent of schools, approved by the Board of Education, to cause to be made a complete census of all children between the ages of 3 and 18 years permanently or temporarily residing in the District of Columbia before December 31, 1922—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALARIES OF SCHOOL-TEACHERS.

The bill (S. 1976) to amend the first paragraph of section 2 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That hereafter the members of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia shall be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and section 2 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, is hereby amended by striking out the words "supreme court judges" and "judges of the supreme court" therein, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "commissioners."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the appointment of the members of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia."

Mr. JONES of Washington subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to ask what was done with Senate bill 1976.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That bill was passed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wanted to have it passed over. I was busy with another matter at the time it was reached on the calendar. I ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which it was passed, and that it may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which Senate bill 1976 was passed. I assume the Senator also asks that all the votes taken on the bill and amendments be reconsidered, so that it may be returned to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; that the bill may take its place on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The votes are reconsidered, and the bill is placed upon the calendar.

Mr. JONES of Washington subsequently said: Mr. President, I have spoken to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], who has charge of Senate bill 1976, and it is entirely agreeable to him to have it transferred to the calendar under Rule IX. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be transferred to the calendar under Rule IX.

FOREIGN TRADE ZONES.

The bill (S. 2391) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let that go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to ask the Senator from Washington if this foreign trade zone bill was not attached to another bill as an amendment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; and this bill should go over. We do not know whether that provision will be agreed to in conference or not. We hope it will, but we had better leave the bill on the calendar.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator desires to have it remain on the calendar?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I desire that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2228) to amend certain sections of the Judicial Code relating to the Court of Claims was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

DUTY ON REIMPORTATION OF AMERICAN GOODS.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 183) imposing a duty of 90 per cent on all goods exported from the United States for the use of the American Expeditionary Forces and its allied forces and which have been sold to any foreign Government or person, when reimported into the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let that go over.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not really informed as to the present conditions which might affect this situation, but if I am not very much mistaken the alleged emergency which this joint resolution was meant to meet has long since passed.

Mr. CURTIS. The committee was informed by the department a few days ago that the emergency still exists as to certain trucks. I hope the joint resolution will be passed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not care to interrupt the calendar, and I would rather have it go over for the present, because it will probably bring on some debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

WARRANT OFFICERS' RESERVE CORPS.

The bill (S. 2515) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920, be amended as follows:

Add the following:

"SEC. 37b. Warrant Officers' Reserve Corps: For the purpose of providing a reserve of warrant officers available for military service when needed, there shall be organized a Warrant Officers' Reserve Corps, which shall consist of persons appointed therein, upon their voluntary applications, for periods of five years. Appointments shall be made by the Secretary of War and shall be limited to persons who possess such educational qualifications and have had such military or technical training as may be prescribed by regulations of the Secretary of War.

A reserve warrant officer may be discharged at any time in the discretion of the Secretary of War. Appointments in force at the outbreak of war, or made during its continuation, shall continue in force until six months after its termination unless sooner terminated by the Secretary of War. To the extent provided for from time to time by appropriations for this specific purpose, the President may order reserve warrant officers to active duty at any time and for any period; but, except in time of a national emergency expressly declared by Congress, no reserve warrant officer shall be employed on active duty for more than 15 days in any calendar year without his own consent. So far as practicable, reserve warrant officers shall be assigned to units in the locality of their place of residence. Any reserve warrant officer may be appointed a warrant officer in the National Guard without thereby vacating his appointment as a reserve warrant officer. A reserve warrant officer shall not be entitled to pay and allowances except when on active duty. When on active duty he shall receive the same pay and allowances as a warrant officer of the Regular Army of the same length of active service and mileage from his home to his first station and from his last station to his home, but shall not be entitled to retirement or retired pay. Reserve warrant officers shall take rank next below second lieutenants and among themselves according to the dates of their respective warrants."

Mr. LENROOT. I notice a provision in the bill that warrant officers may be placed upon active duty when provision is made for that purpose. The legislation in the Army appropriation bill prohibits an appropriation for any additional warrant officers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true as to warrant officers in the Regular Army. All this bill does is to establish the grade of warrant officer in the Organized Reserves. The grade already exists in the Regular Army and the National Guard. The bill also carries authority, dependent, of course, upon appropriations, for the ordering of warrant officers of the Organized Reserves to active duty.

I remind the Senator from Wisconsin that Congress has laid down a rule in each Army appropriation act for the last two or three years that no reserve officer, under the provision "Pay of the Army," shall be ordered to active duty for more than 15 days of the year, and the same provision will undoubtedly be carried in the next bill.

Mr. LENROOT. That is carried in this bill; but it would permit Congress to make appropriations for warrant officers, where it is prohibited by law, in so far as the Regular Army is concerned.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not prohibited by a standing statute; it is prohibited from year to year.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it not permanent legislation in the Army appropriation act for the reduction of the warrant officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; in the regular establishment. This provision does not provide for any fixed number of warrant officers. It establishes the grade in the Organized Reserves only.

Mr. LENROOT. But under this bill Congress may at any time increase the number of warrant officers on active duty by appropriating for these reserve warrant officers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; it could.

Mr. LENROOT. And to that extent, of course, it could increase the number of warrant officers prescribed by law as far as active duty is concerned.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It could increase the number drawing pay, but I can not conceive that the Congress would do such a thing for warrant officers of the Organized Reserves when it refused to do it for the commissioned officers.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not suppose it will, as long as the Senator from New York is chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There will be one vote in the committee against it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM O. MALLAHAN.

The bill (S. 268) for the relief of William O. Mallahan was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers William O. Mallahan, who was a private in Company A, Eighteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered in as a member of said company or regiment on May 12, 1862, and honorably discharged therefrom on July 20, 1865: Provided, That, other than as above set forth, no bounty, pay, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to or by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM M. CARROLL.

The bill (S. 2035) for the relief of William M. Carroll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to add the following proviso: "Provided, That no back pay, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows and dependent relatives, William M. Carroll, who was a private in Company H, Seventeenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment: Provided, That no back pay, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SPECIAL OFFICER IN SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

The resolution (S. Res. 150) directing the Secretary of the Senate to employ a special officer for the office of the Secretary of the Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW and Mr. JONES of Washington. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF CRIMINAL CODE.

The bill (S. 2573) to amend section 198 of the act of March 4, 1909, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," as amended, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, to strike out the words "act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stats. p. 162)," and to insert the words "acts of May 18, 1916, and July 28, 1916 (39 Stats. pp. 162 and 418)," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 198 of the act of March 4, 1909, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," as amended by the acts of May 18, 1916, and July 28, 1916 (39 Stats. pp. 162 and 418), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That whoever shall willfully or maliciously injure, tear down, or destroy any letter box or other receptacle intended or used for the receipt or delivery of mail on any mail route, or shall break open the same, or shall willfully or maliciously injure, deface, or destroy any mail deposited therein, or shall willfully take or steal such mail from or out of such letter box or other receptacle, or shall willfully or maliciously assault any letter or mail carrier, knowing him to be such, while engaged on his route in the discharge of his duty as such carrier, or shall willfully aid or assist in any of the aforementioned offenses, shall, for every such offense, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than three years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF TRANSPORTATION ACT.

The bill (H. R. 8331) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill may be passed over.

CHARLES F. GETCHELL.

The bill (S. 748) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles F. Getchell was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Charles F. Getchell, late of Company B, Forty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of said company and regiment: Provided, That no back pay, bounty, or other allowances shall be considered to have accrued by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Charles F. Getchell."

GEORGE EMERSON.

The bill (S. 726) for the relief of George Emerson was considered as in the Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to George Emerson, of Great Falls, Mont., late a second lieutenant in the Air Service, Division of Aeronautics, United States Army, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $235, to reimburse him for money withheld from salary due him, upon his discharge from the Army, on or about

October 31, 1919, and still so withheld; and there is hereby appropriated for such purposes, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $235.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1452) providing for establishing shooting grounds for the public, for establishing game refuges and breeding grounds, for protecting migratory birds, and requiring a Federal license to hunt them, was announced as next in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] informed me that he will desire to offer some amendments to this bill when it comes up for consideration. He is unavoidably detained from the Senate at this time on account of official business. Therefore I ask on his account that it may be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 138) authorizing the payment of the cost of transportation for certain supplies purchased by the Military Establishment was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask that the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over on objection.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing transportation for dependents of Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection, the joint resolution will go over.

MARGARET I. VARNUM.

The bill (S. 2328) for the relief of Margaret I. Varnum was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows and dependent relatives, George Smith, late private of Company K, Twenty-first Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said organization on the 4th day of March, 1862: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1298) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2718) to provide for leasing of the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La., was announced as next in order.

Mr. CALDER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PETER SHELL.

The bill (S. 140) for the relief of Peter Shell was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 6, to strike out the word "Marines" and insert "Marine Artillery Volunteers," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows and dependent relatives, Peter Shell, late a private in New York Marine Artillery Volunteers, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said organization on the 15th day of November, A. D. 1862: Provided, That no back pay, pension, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALONZO C. SHEKELL.

The bill (S. 2498) to correct the military record of Alonzo C. Shekell was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Alonzo C. Shekell, who was a member of Company H, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Sharpshooters, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 22d day of November, 1864: Provided, That no back pay, pension, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Alonzo C. Shekell."

PAY OF ENLISTED MEN OF THE ARMY.

The bill (S. 2493) to relieve enlisted men affected thereby from certain hardship incident to the operation of the proviso of section 4b of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, and to protect disbursing officers in connection therewith, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs advise us exactly what the bill means and how great an expenditure is contemplated?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The expenditures will be exceedingly small. It is largely a matter of canceling charges now held against disbursing officers, in view of an unexpected decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury, to collect back from certain enlisted men in the Army very small sums which the comptroller said were paid in such a way as not to conform technically with the language of the national defense act.

I can describe very briefly what caused the confusion, but the matter from then on becomes exceedingly technical, and so highly confused at the outset that I find it difficult to follow it. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] made a very careful study of the whole matter as a subcommittee for the Committee on Military Affairs.

The act of June 4, 1920, provides that the enlisted personnel of the Army shall be divided into seven grades and fixes the rate of pay for each grade, with the stipulation that the number of enlisted men in each grade shall not exceed a fixed ratio to the entire enlisted personnel. It further provides that under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe enlisted men of the sixth and seventh grades, which are the lowest grades, may be rated as specialists and receive extra pay therefor per month at rates stated in the act, and that "nothing in this section shall operate to reduce the pay which any enlisted man is now receiving during his current enlistment and while he holds his present grade."

The phrase "and while he holds his present grade" was deemed by the Comptroller of the Treasury to refer to the grade which he held on June 4, 1920, the day the new law took effect. We can see what happened and what caused the confusion.

By General Order 36, War Department, 1920, the system of grading and rating enlisted men then in effect was changed to conform to the requirements of the act of June 4, 1920, to which I have just referred. Certain grades, such as cook, horseshoer, and so forth, were abolished, and it was stipulated that the men who held such grades prior to July 1, 1920, should be regarded as privates first class or privates, and should be given a designated specialist's rating with extra monthly pay, as therein indicated. It was furthermore provided that sergeants theretofore authorized for duty as bakers, blacksmiths, horseshoers, and so forth, should likewise be regarded as privates first class or privates, and should be given a designated specialist's rating with extra monthly pay.

It is at that point, where the regrading took effect, that the dispute arose, and the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury resulted in depriving the men of the pay which they were receiving at the time the new act took effect. Under the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury the War Department has been compelled to endeavor to collect back from those men these very small sums. Some they succeeded in getting back. Other men have left the service and can not be reached. The department begs that the whole thing be canceled and that the acts of the disbursing officers, in originally paying the men in the way in which they thought the Congress wanted them paid, be validated.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all payments heretofore made in good faith to enlisted men while in active service by reason of anything contained in that portion of the proviso of section 4b of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920, reading: "That nothing in this section shall operate to reduce the pay which any enlisted man is now receiving during his current enlistment and while he holds his present grade," be, and the same hereby are, validated for all purposes irrespective of whether such payments conform to decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury or the general accounting office; and such payments shall be passed by the proper accounting officers of the United States to the credit of the disbursing officers making the same. Any sums of money which may have been deducted from the pay of any enlisted man on account of such payment validated by this act shall be refunded.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2589) to amend section 11 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," approved January 15, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. I do not see the author of the bill nor the chairman of the committee in the Chamber. I ask that the bill may go over. There is quite a long report accompanying it and I wish to examine it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). On objection the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 67) for the relief of the heirs of Adam and Noah Brown was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JESSE L. CLAY.

The bill (S. 2258) for the relief of Jesse L. Clay was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he will withdraw the objection until I may make a brief explanation? A similar bill has passed the Senate on a former occasion. It involves a case where the man's illness was precipitated by an accident while he was an employee in the navy yard. He was compelled to be absent from duty because of consequent illness, was in a hospital more than a month, and necessarily incurred considerable expense. The committee, after looking carefully into the facts, decided that he had an equitable claim for the expense incurred due to his enforced separation from the service and his absence from the navy yard as a result of the accident.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What is the amount involved?

Mr. SHEPPARD. About $1,000. He was separated from the service four months, was in the hospital between 30 and 60 days, and had to undergo a severe operation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator stated that a similar bill had heretofore passed the Senate?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I thank the Senator.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is authorized and directed to pay to Jesse L. Clay $1,013.56 as reimbursement for all expenses incurred by or for him for or on account of hospital treatment, nurses' and doctors' services, and pay for all time lost from his regular employment as a machinist in the navy yard, Washington, D. C., as the result of a necessary operation performed immediately following an injury sustained while on duty and in the course of his employment, on May 16, 1916, such reimbursement and payment to be made from funds under the control of said commission under the act of September 7, 1916, notwithstanding the failure on the part of the injured employee to report the injury as required by the rules of the commission, of which rules he had no knowledge, and without requiring strict proof that the operation was the direct and necessary result of the injury so sustained.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1539) for the relief of Watson B. Dickerman, administrator of the estate of Charles Backman, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let the bill go over.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator objecting withhold the objection until I can make a brief explanation?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I must insist upon the objection. I think we should have an opportunity to examine into the matter more carefully than can be done at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1861) authorizing the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim of Capt. David McD. Shearer for compensation for the adoption and use and acquisition by the United States Government of his patented inventions was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 5965) for the relief of the owner of the vessel Maria Artau was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask that that bill may go over.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, that bill involves a particularly meritorious claim, I think. I have had some further information in reference to it since the bill was reported to the Senate, and I think there are good reasons why it should pass. The owner of the vessel involved is a poor man; he lost practically all he had in the collision; and it would be really an act of justice that he be reimbursed. The bill has passed the House of Representatives, and the reports which have come from the departments with reference to the case are very strongly in favor of the allowance of the claim.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to have the bill go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator still insist on his objection?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2390) to redistribute the number of officers in the several grades of the supply corps of the Navy was announced as next in order, and the bill was read.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that that bill may go over. It seems to me that it is too important a bill to be passed without some further consideration than that which may be accorded to it under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under objection, the bill will go over.

HENRY P. COLLINS, ALIAS PATRICK COLLINS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2380) for the relief of Henry P. Collins, alias Patrick Collins. It provides that in the administration of the pension laws Henry P. Collins, alias Patrick Collins, late of Company A, Sixty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of Company A, Sixty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, on the 14th day of July, 1865; but that no pay, pension, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALMOND S. ROOT.

The bill (S. 2654) for the relief of Almond S. Root was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. There seems to be an adverse report in that case.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is. I move the indefinite postponement of the bill, Mr. President.

Mr. LENROOT. I concur in the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion prevails, and the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator from New York think that action should be taken in the absence of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who requested, when the report was made, that the bill go on the calendar? The Senator from Utah is now necessarily absent from the Chamber?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am perfectly willing, under those circumstances, to withdraw my motion; and I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed be reconsidered, and that the bill may merely go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

MARTIN CLETNER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2362) to correct the military record of Martin Cletner. It proposes to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Martin Cletner, late of the First Independent Company, Pennsylvania Volunteer Engineers, and of Company C, Third Regiment, New Jersey Volunteer Cavalry, and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2674) to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under objection.

BENJAMIN F. SPATES.

The bill (S. 1352) for the relief of Benjamin F. Spates, was announced as next in order, and was read.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over on objection.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me an opportunity to make an explanation in reference to that bill before objecting to it? It is a very meritorious measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin withdraw his objection?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The beneficiary of the bill is an old man; he was a carpenter working on the Capitol grounds many years ago. In the course of his employment while carrying a heavy timber upon his shoulder he stepped into a sewer trap, which had been regarded as dangerous, and his doing so resulted in the breaking of his ankle, and an injury to his foot so that practically he has been disabled for manual labor ever since, which is now some 12 or 15 years ago. The bill has been before the Committee on Claims at different times, and in two or three instances it has been reported favorably, but never acted upon. I have looked into the matter.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Did the Senator say that this accident occurred 12 or 15 years ago?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Yes, sir; it occurred quite a number of years ago.

Mr. LENROOT. It was nearly 40 years ago.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Well, I have forgotten the exact number of years, but I know it was quite a while ago. That, however, does not detract from the merits of the case. Ample proof has been presented to show that this man was injured without fault of his own; that he was injured by reason of defective equipment on the Capitol grounds here where he was at work; that he suffered illness from his injury, was in bed for some two months, and that the injury was permanent. He was a laboring man, a carpenter, and his income as the result of his manual labor has been cut off; he has never been able since to engage in his vocation, that of the ordinary carpenter and manual laborer.

I think if the Government ever has paid any one for an accident occurring to him without any fault on his part, but due to the negligence of the Government it should do so in this case. If such an injury had been sustained on account of the negligence of a private individual, instead of this man receiving a thousand dollars for his injury he would probably have obtained $10,000.

I have no personal interest in the case. I never saw the man until he came and talked with me in regard to the claim. He is not from my State; I do not know from what State he comes; but I think in justice he ought to be paid $1,000. I have seen many claims approved for amounts equal to this, and, indeed, for much larger amounts, which were not half so meritorious as is this one. I think this man ought to be paid $1,000; that is the way I feel about it; and I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will not insist on his objection to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that there is nothing in the report in the way of medical testimony to prove that any permanent injury which this man is now suffering is the result of his accident. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will go over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 403) for the relief of Louise St. Gez, executrix of Auguste Ferré, deceased, surviving partner of Lapene & Ferré, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over on objection.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator withdraw his objection for just a moment?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. RANSDELL. I desire to state, Mr. President and Senators, that this bill has twice passed the Senate. It is to reimburse certain persons for cotton which was taken by the Federal forces during the Civil War, the proceeds of the sales of which passed into the Federal Treasury. The owners of the cotton were absolutely loyal, and certainly it is a just claim against the Government. The bill refers the claim to the Court of Claims and permits them to find the facts in the case. It has not been neglected, for it has been before Congress several times and passed the Senate twice. I trust the Senator from Wisconsin will not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask the Senator whether it provides for a judgment of the Court of Claims or only a report to Congress concerning the facts in the case?

Mr. RANSDELL. It permits the Court of Claims to find the facts and to render judgment.

Mr. LENROOT. I should have no objection if it merely provided that the Court of Claims might consider the case and report the facts to Congress. Under the circumstances I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. RANSDELL. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. I would not have any objection to the bill if it referred the case to the Court of Claims for a report to Congress concerning the facts, but as it involves more than that I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 404) for the relief of the legal representatives of the estate of Alphonse Desmare, deceased, and others, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask that that bill may go over.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will state, Mr. President, that the same state of facts generally applies to Senate bill 404 as to Senate bill 403. I understand the Senator from Wisconsin to state that he would not oppose the bill if it merely required the court to find the facts and refer them back to Congress.

Mr. LENROOT. Exactly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill goes over.

VIRGIL O. M'WHORTER.

The bill (H. R. 1948) for the relief of Virgil O. McWhorter was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to allow in the accounts of Virgil O. McWhorter, special disbursing agent of the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, the sum of $850 paid by him on authority from said bureau and disallowed by said accounting officers, covering expenses incurred in the drilling of a well at the United States sheep experiment station at Dubois, Idaho.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES JOHNSON.

The bill (S. 942) for the relief of James Johnson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to insert at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no back pay, bounty, or other allowances shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows and dependent relatives, James Johnson, who was a private in Company A, Fifty-fourth Regiment Kentucky Mounted Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 15th day of December, 1864: Provided, That no back pay, bounty, or other allowances shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TERMS OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT IN COLORADO.

The bill (S. 2967) to amend section 73 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as amended by an act approved June 12, 1916, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the bill simply relates to the places for holding court in the State of Colorado and provides for an additional place where the United States district court may be held. I think there can be no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 73 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as amended by an act approved June 12, 1916, be, and the same is hereby, further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 73. That the State of Colorado shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of Colorado. Terms of the district court shall be held at Denver on the first Tuesday in May and November, at Pueblo on the first Tuesday in April, at Grand Junction on the second Tuesday in September, at Montrose on the third Tuesday in September, at Durango on the fourth Tuesday in September, and at Alamosa on the first Tuesday in October.

"That the Secretary of the Treasury in constructing the public buildings heretofore authorized to be constructed at the cities of Grand Junction and Durango be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to provide accommodations in each of said buildings for post office, United States court, and other governmental offices, and the existing authorizations for said buildings be, and the same are hereby, respectively amended accordingly; and the unexpended balance of all appropriations heretofore made for the construction of said buildings and all appropriations which may be provided in any pending legislation, or that hereafter may be made for the construction of said buildings, are hereby made available for the purpose stated in this paragraph: Provided, That if at the time of holding the terms of said court in any year in any of the said cities of Grand Junction, Durango, and Alamosa there is no business to be transacted by said court the term may be adjourned or continued by order of the judge of said court in chambers at Denver, Colo.: And provided further, That the marshal and clerk of said court shall each, respectively, appoint at least one deputy to reside at and who shall maintain an office at each of the five said places where said court is to be held by the terms of this act."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That joint resolution may go over, Mr. President. It can not be disposed of in the short time allowed for consideration under Rule VIII. I also ask that the next bill on the calendar, being Order of Business No. 505, Senate bill 14, providing for the election of a delegate to the House of Representatives from the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, may be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate Joint Resolution 133 and Senate bill 14 will be passed over at the request of the Senator from Washington.

RECORDS OF OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN IN THE WORLD WAR.

The bill (S. 2992) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish certain information for historical purposes to the adjutants general of the several States and the District of Columbia, and making appropriation therefor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not see that bill listed on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill does not appear on the calendar. On April 3, 1922, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, amended, read the third time, and passed, but on April 5, 1922, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and the bill was returned from the House and placed on the calendar.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I apologize for not having followed the colloquy more closely. Is it now suggested that this bill pass?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the question before the Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask if it has to do with furnishing the records of the soldiers of the last war?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does. The notation on the bill indicates that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] asked that the vote be reconsidered by which the bill was passed before. It is back on the calendar under that reconsideration.

Mr. FLETCHER. It has passed the Senate, and the vote has been reconsidered, and it comes back here again.

Mr. McNARY. Let it go over.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May it go over temporarily?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 5214) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I ask to have the bill passed over. I do this at the request of a Senator who is absent. I shall be obliged to object, at his request, to the consideration of all omnibus pension bills at this time.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I regret that very much. The bill has been here a long time. These are just private bills.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand that. I suggest that the Senator had better ask that some specific time be designated for the consideration of the bill. I ask that it go over now on the request of a Senator who is absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon objection of the Senator from Montana, general pension bills will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1739) to amend sections 5 and 6 of the act of Congress making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved July 1, 1902, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6507) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, was announced as next in order.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. This is a general pension bill.

The bill (H. R. 1274) for the relief of Maude H. Mosher was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, what became of House bill 6507, Order of Business No. 526? Was that passed over?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was passed over.

Mr. WILLIS. I did not hear an objection made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to say that he would object to the present consideration of general pension bills.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIS. Do I understand it to be the policy of the Senator from Montana to object to the consideration of all private pension bills on the calendar?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. At the request of an absent Senator I am objecting to the consideration at this time of any of the omnibus pension bills.

Mr. WILLIS. Of course, there is no use in discussing the matter with the Senator, but that is very unfortunate, I think, because these bills have been on the calendar a long time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

MAUDE H. MOSHER.

Th bill (H. R. 1274) for the relief of Maude H. Mosher was announced as next in order, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Maude H. Mosher, the sum of $2,500, in full settlement against the Government as compensation for injuries sustained by being knocked down and run over by an automobile truck belonging to the arsenal at Watertown, Mass.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I think these private claim bills ought to be passed over unless there is some Senator present who is ready to explain them.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I dislike to object to any bill of this character, but I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin. We ought to know something about a bill and somebody ought to be ready to tell us something about it. I think the bill had better go over until the author of it can be here and tell us why we should pay this claim. If we are going into the business of paying a number of claims of that sort, I have a few myself which I should like to have paid.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, we ought not to pass on them at all. They ought to be referred to a court and let the court pass on them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Missouri asks that the bill go over.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over under objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, can not the chairman of the Committee on Claims have an opportunity to comply with the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Missouri? They both asked that the Senator in charge of the bill, whoever he might be, explain it; and here he is, ready to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be very glad to recognize the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the bill which has just been called up is a House bill. It was considered very carefully in the usual way by the Committee on Claims. There is a report filed with the bill, and I will read just a few lines from it, which I think will fully explain the reasons for a favorable report:

From the evidence submitted in this case it appears that Maude H. Mosher and another woman, while crossing Summer Street in Boston, Mass., on August 2, 1916, was struck by a Government truck in the service of the Watertown Arsenal, which was driven by an enlisted man named Patrick Mullen, a corporal. The testimony of witnesses is to the effect that the accident was due entirely to the gross negligence and reckless driving of Corporal Mullen. Miss Mosher was taken to the hospital and remained there about a month. Shortly afterwards she resumed her position as cashier in a mercantile establishment in Boston, but is unable to work more than a portion of the time. The affidavit of the physician in the case shows she has been permanently injured and will never again be as well as before the accident.

The committee felt that the case was a very meritorious one, and I hope the bill will be passed. It was carefully considered in the House, as well as by the Senate Committee on Claims.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What is the amount involved?

Mr. CAPPER. Twenty-five hundred dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNIE M. LEPLEY.

The bill (H. R. 4504) for the relief of Annie M. Lepley, was announced as next in order, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit Annie M. Lepley, as postmaster at Plymouth, Amador County, Calif., on her account as postmaster of said place, in the sum of $2,055.83, the same being the amount of certain moneys, money orders, and postage stamps taken and stolen by burglars from the post office at Plymouth, Amador County, Calif., at nighttime at about 10 minutes past 1 o'clock antemeridian on March 13, 1915, by unknown persons, and that the said Annie M. Lepley be, and she is hereby, relieved and released from payment to the Treasury of the United States of the said sum of $2,055.83, and every part thereof, as such postmaster, and that her account be credited as postmaster with said amount of $2,055.83 by reason of said loss caused by such burglary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not object, but I question very much the wisdom of this sort of thing. For instance, the Post Office Department lay down certain rules and regulations which postmasters ought to observe. They require certain safes, locks, and so forth, and postmasters who do not observe those rules and regulations ought not to expect to come to Congress and get relief in case burglars take away the money.

In this instance the postmaster had the safe, and the outside door of the safe was locked, and an inner door, which locked with a key, had not been locked. It appears that she was technically at fault in not locking this inner door, and the money was stolen. Perhaps it is hardly fair to charge her up with that loss; but, at the same time, I question very much whether Congress ought, in cases of this sort generally, to reimburse a postmaster where he or she has failed to live fairly and squarely up to the regulations of the department with reference to taking care of funds.

Mr. CAPPER. I think the Senator from Florida is correct as a general proposition; but the committee looked into this case pretty carefully, and in view of the letter from the Postmaster General acquiescing in the claim, and the House Committee having passed it favorably, our committee thought it was worthy of favorable action on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Kansas if he has observed the last paragraph of the report, in which Postmaster General Hayes stated that the regulations had not been complied with, that the doors had not been locked, nor the safe itself, and a change of the combination of the safe has not been made as has been ordered. Unless there is something further than that, it would seem that this is an unfavorable report from the Postmaster General.

Mr. CAPPER. The Postmaster General did not report unfavorably upon the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? According to the report, no force at all was used in getting into the safe. They evidently walked right into it.

Mr. CAPPER. We have no further information that appears in the report.

Mr. WARREN. The last paragraph of the report says:

The postmaster's failure to completely lock the safe, in which her stamps and funds were left at night, and to change the combination on her safe, as required by the above-quoted regulation—

Which, of course, follows any disturbance that has been had before—was considered negligence within the meaning of the above-cited statute, and, following the established practice of the department, this claim was disallowed under date of June 26, 1916. No additional evidence has been received by the department since that time which would justify different action in this case.

It would seem to me unwise for us to undertake to make good to every postmaster and postmistress funds that may be stolen when they will not observe their orders, and will not do such simple things as locking their safes, and so forth. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection of the Senator from Wyoming, the bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 820) for the relief of the Hunter-Brown Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3254) to enlarge the development of the agricultural resources of the United States through Federal and State cooperation, giving preference in the matter of employment and the establishment of rural homes to those who have served with the military and naval forces of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ELLEN B. MONAHAN.

The bill (S. 2346) for the relief of Ellen B. Monahan was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Ellen B. Monahan, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,371.18, for physical injuries received by her as the result of being overcome by illuminating gas escaping from a pipe (said to have been broken through the negligence of an employee of the Treasury Department) on the 14th day of June, 1911, while she was in the employ of the Government of the United States and in the discharge of her duties as a clerk in the national-bank redemption agency office of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I should like to ask whether this claim does not come in under the general law for the payment of compensation to employees injured in the discharge of their duties? Why does it come here as a special bill?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that this is a most meritorious case. No one questions the liability of the Government, but it is thought that this bill is necessary in order to bring about compensation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That goes to my inquiry. Does not this woman come within the terms of the general compensation act for the payment of employees injured in the line of duty?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If I may answer, at the time this bill was introduced it was thought not so, and it was considered that this bill was necessary.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to have the report read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the report (No. 544) submitted by Mr. STANFIELD on March 9, 1922, and read as follows:

Report to accompany Senate bill 2346.

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2346) for the relief of Ellen B. Monahan, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

FINDINGS OF FACT.

Miss Ellen B. Monahan entered the employ of the Government July 1, 1897, at $900 per year, and the salary increased as follows: August 10, 1899, to $1,000; May 4, 1904, to $1,200; July 1, 1909, to $1,400.

During all this time she has served the Government in the national bank redemption agency.

Some time prior to June 14, 1911, a vault was put in near the room where Miss Monahan was working, which involved the changing of the gas piping.

A gas pipe 1 inch in diameter was cut directly underneath the floor where Miss Monahan was working and left uncapped, but the gas was prevented from escaping by a valve in the sub-basement on the rising supply pipe.

About June 14, 1911, this valve was slightly turned in some manner which permitted the pipes to fill with gas and escape from the uncapped pipe.

The gas gradually filled the room and overcame the claimant. She finally fell in a faint and was carried out and taken to Providence Hospital, Washington, D. C., where she was confined until July 6, 1911. Her regular physician, Dr. Johnson Eliot, of 720 H Street, this city, was called and attended her.

Under the directions of her physician she left Washington and went to the ocean air at Atlantic City and later to The Weirs, N. H., and returned to Washington about September 20, 1911.

She again went to the seashore at Atlantic City March 30, 1912, and remained until April 13, 1912.

Supplementing medical treatment, she also had 73 massage treatments under advice of her physician. The result of the escaping gas upon Miss Monahan is best described by the attending physician. May 15, 1914, Dr. Johnson Eliot made the following sworn statement:

MAY 15, 1914.

Hon. HARRY LANE,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR LANE: I was called to see Miss Ellen B. Monahan June 14, 1911. She had been overcome by inhaling illuminating gas while at work in the United States Treasury Department.

She was carried to Providence Hospital and remained there until July 6. I was in attendance upon her during that period, at times making several visits daily.

On July 6, under my professional advice, she left Washington, though still remaining under my general care through correspondence.

On her return to the city in October she was still suffering the effects of the gas inhalation and further treatment was necessary.

The two bills, $125 and $75, are for professional services, necessary entirely by reason of illness due to the gas inhalation and not for other illness.

I can not indicate to the committee why the effects should be so profound, other than to state that the degree of shock, absolute prostration, the marked anemia due to carbon monoxide poisoning, and the neurasthenic condition were unusually marked.

While in the hospital it was necessary to have a special nurse for two weeks in constant attendance, and for months after she had to employ the services of a masseuse.

Respectfully,

JOHNSON ELIOT, M. D.

Sworn to before me this 18th day of May, 1914.

[SEAL.] DALE S. VENABLE,
Notary Public, District of Columbia.

Under date of February 11, 1915, Doctor Eliot made the following supplemental statement:

"The inhaling of the great quantity of illuminating gas caused a profound anemic condition.

"The kidneys were seriously affected, an acute nephritis developed, the urine was totally suppressed, requiring catheterization for days.

"The anemic condition caused a general weakness of the entire system, seriously involving the heart and nervous systems, which caused her to remain under constant medical care for over two years.

"I have been Miss Monahan's physician for about eight years and can state positively that she had no affection of the heart or kidneys previous to this poisoning and that her health was excellent.

"Respectfully,

"JOHNSON ELIOT, M. D."

Under date of September 12, 1911, Dr. Louis D. O. Jaques, of Worcester, Mass., wrote as follows:

WORCESTER, MASS., September 12, 1911.

Mr. FRANKLIN MACVEAGH.

DEAR SIR: Miss Ellen B. Monahan has befallen to me as a patient. I am sorry to say that her condition is anything but desirable. I have sent her to the country, where I think she will recuperate as quickly as possible, but her nerves are still in such a state that it is impossible to state definitely how long it will be before she is able to resume her work. If she were to report for duty now the chances are that she would land in the hospital again before a week. If she can be excused for a few weeks I think she will be able to stay at work when she goes back to Washington.

Respectfully yours,

LOUIS D. O. JAQUES, M. D.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not care to have the remaining portion of the report read. I ask the chairman of the committee if the report shows that this accident happened after the general compensation act, to take care of clerks suffering personal injuries, was passed. If it was, I would like to know why this bill is pending here. If the injury happened prior to that time, I have nothing more to say. It seems to me somebody ought to be able to inform us on that point.

Mr. CAPPER. I have not been in charge of the bill, and I am not prepared to answer the question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not care to object to this claim, as I have no doubt it is a perfectly legitimate claim, but I think somebody should be able to inform us about it. I think the general compensation act, under which persons injured in the service can apply for compensation, was passed 6 or 7 years ago, prior to the happening of this injury. I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The injury occurred 11 years ago.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am informed that the injury occurred 11 years ago, and as that was probably before the passage of the general compensation act, I will not object.

Mr. STANFIELD. I am quite sure the injury occurred before the enactment of the general compensation act. It occurred in 1911. I would like to say further, that the claim is not for any damage sustained; it is only for loss of time, and expenses incurred. It has the approval of the Treasury Department, as is shown by the letters which appear in the report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not question the claim. I merely wanted to know as to whether this was an effort to get around the general law. But I am informed the accident occurred 11 years ago, and I think the general law was passed since that time.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN ALLOTMENTS, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 10193) extending time for allotments on the Crow Reservation; protecting certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes; payment for tuition of Indian children in Montana; relief of Indians occupying certain lands in Arizona, New Mexico, and California; issuing patents in fee in certain cases; establishing a revolving fund on the Rosebud Reservation; leasing, for mining purposes, certain lands on the Fort Peck, Mont., Reservation; memorial to Indians of the Rosebud Reservation killed in the World War; additional water rights on the Crow Reservation; conferring authority on the Secretary of the Interior as to alienation in certain Indian allotments, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 2, line 9, to insert the words "and to prosecute all appropriate proceedings to recover for such members any excess income tax which may have been paid by or exacted of them, respectively"; and on line 20, the words "and that such contract shall obligate the firms or individuals with whom the same are made to prosecute to a final determination all claims included in such contract, unless the Secretary shall otherwise direct"; and on page 5, line 5, after the word "Interior," to insert the words "heretofore or," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for making the allotments on the Crow Reservation, Mont., as provided by the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. L. p. 751), be, and it is hereby, extended for a period of two years from December 4, 1921.

SECTION 1. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to make or approve contracts with competent and experienced firms or individuals to prepare and submit, through the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes, amended income-tax returns covering the years 1919, 1920, and 1921, for the restricted members of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, and to prosecute all appropriate proceedings to recover for such members any excess income tax which may have been paid by or exacted of them, respectively: Provided, That the compensation paid for the preparation and submission of such amended income-tax returns shall not exceed for any year 10 per cent of the actual net savings in taxes allowed such tax-paying Indians either by reason of deductions for depletion or other proper allowances actually secured in their behalf as a result of the work and efforts of the firms or individuals with whom such contract or contracts are made in pursuance of this act, and that such contract shall obligate the firms or individuals with whom the same are made to prosecute to a final determination all claims included in such contract, unless the Secretary shall otherwise direct: Provided further, That the Secretary shall make payment of such compensation out of the funds belonging to the several restricted Indians who shall be the beneficiaries of such contract.

SEC. 2. That all of the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the relief of Indians occupying railroad lands in Arizona, New Mexico, or California," approved March 4, 1913, and amended by the act of April 11, 1916, and the act of June 30, 1919, be, and the same are hereby, extended to March 4, 1923: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall apply only in cases where it is shown that the lands were actually occupied in good faith by Indians prior to March 4, 1913, and the applicants are otherwise entitled to receive such tracts in allotment under existing law, but for the grant to the railroad company.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent to the duly authorized missionary board, or other proper authority, of any religious organization engaged in mission or school work on any Indian reservation for such lands thereon as have been heretofore set apart to and are now being actually and beneficially used and occupied by such organization solely for mission or school purposes, the area so patented to not exceed 160 acres to any one organization at any station: Provided, That such patent shall provide that when no longer used for mission or school purposes said lands shall revert to the Indian owners.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to withdraw from the fund in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe of Indians, known as the Sioux fund, Rosebud, created under the act of March 2, 1884 (25 Stat. L. p. 895), the sum of $30,000 for the purpose of establishing a revolving fund from which he may make loans to members of that tribe, under such rules and regulations as the said Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. Any loan so made is to stand as a preferred claim against any trust fund or trust lands under Government supervision which may belong to the borrower or his restricted estate from any source whatever.

SEC. 5. That there is hereby authorized an appropriation of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, from Rosebud tribal funds, for the erection of a monument, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, on the Rosebud Indian Reservation as a memorial to Indians of that tribe who gave their lives for their country in the recent war with Germany.

SEC. 6. That wherever, in any law or treaty or in any patent issued to Indian allottees for lands in severalty pursuant to such law or treaty, there appears a provision to the effect that the lands so allotted can not be alienated without the consent of the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior shall have full power and authority to consent to or approve of the alienation of such allotments, in whole or in part, in his discretion, by deed, will, lease, or any other form of conveyance, and such consent or approval by the Secretary of the Interior hereafter had in all such cases shall have the same force and legal effect as though the consent or approval of the President had previously been obtained: Provided, however, That the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of wills by Indian allottees or their heirs involving lands held under such patents shall not operate to remove the restrictions against alienation unless such order of approval by said Secretary shall specifically so direct.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, out of its order, I offer an amendment to the bill, which I send to the desk, and I would like to make a statement about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator offer it as a substitute?

Mr. HARRELD. No; it is to come in as a new section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question first is upon agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The READING CLERK. Add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 7. That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to hear and adjudicate the claims against the Choctaw Nation of the heirs of Israel Folsom and of Peter Folsom, both deceased, on account of services rendered by said Israel Folsom and said Peter Folsom on behalf of the Choctaw Nation in connection with the net proceeds claims of said nation, and to render judgment therein in such amount, if any, as may appear to be equitably due. Said amount, if any, in favor of the heirs of Israel Folsom and of Peter Folsom, respectively, shall be paid out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Choctaw Nation.

Notice of said suit shall be served on the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, and the Attorney General of the United States shall appear and defend said suit on behalf of said nation. That either party in the above-mentioned case may within three months of the rendition of any judgment by the Court of Claims in said case appeal therefrom to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, there is on the calendar——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HARRELD. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I inquire of the Senator whether the subject matter of the amendment he now tenders has had consideration by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. HARRELD. Yes; and if the Senator will listen I will make a statement which will fully explain the amendment.

There is another bill pending, Senate bill 3308, Calendar No. 708, providing for the same relief covered by this amendment, and it has already been reported favorably by the Committee on Indian Affairs. The only difference between the two is that Senate bill 3308 names one of these parties, and recommends that the bill be passed giving him the right to present his claim to the Court of Claims, but it does not mention the other one. To that extent the bills are different. We find, however, that the naming of the other party is absolutely necessary. The other bill takes care of Peter Folsom, and it is found that in order to have all the parties before the Court of Claims it is necessary to include the name of this other Folsom.

Senate bill 3308 was reported favorably, recommending certain amendments. The amendment which I have offered to this omnibus bill is included in the amendments which were recommended by the Committee on Claims. The only difference between this amendment and Senate bill 3308 is that this includes the name of another one of the Folsom heirs, who is a necessary party, and it is so drawn as to include the amendments which were recommended by the Claims Committee. We felt that it would be better to put this on as an amendment to this bill, where these matters could be corrected, and I assure the Senator there is no difference between this and Senate bill 3308, with that exception.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Why does the Senator seek to incorporate it in this particular bill? Why not take that bill up when it is reached, and, if it is necessary to amend it, amend it then?

Mr. HARRELD. It would be necessary that that bill go back to the committee to insert this new name.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator can offer an amendment to that particular bill when it comes up for consideration, just as he offers it to the pending bill.

Mr. HARRELD. This is an omnibus bill, and it is a legitimate amendment to it, and, in my judgment, it would shorten matters.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I can not take that view of it. The bill throughout is for the protection of the Indians. It is looking after their interest. The measure to which the Senator refers is a bill to establish a claim against the Indians, and it does not seem to me to be germane to the general subject of the bill under consideration. The Senator ought to tender his amendment to the other bill on the calendar.

Mr. HARRELD. Permit me to make this statement: There were four delegates sent to Washington some years ago by the Choctaw council. One of them was named Garland, another was named Lewis, another was named Folsom, and I forget the name of the other delegate. Two bills have already been passed, one in 1906 and another in 1908, the 1906 bill giving the Garland heirs the right to go before the Court of Claims and prosecute their claims in this connection. In 1908 another bill was passed, giving to the heirs of one of the other delegates the right to go before the Court of Claims and prosecute the case. This is a similar bill, giving to the heirs of one of the other delegates the same right which the heirs of the other delegates were given to prosecute a claim before the Court of Claims.

There is no question about the righteousness of the cause. They are entitled to prosecute their cases, and I do not see why the Senator should say it would be detrimental to the Indians. This is certainly a matter of expedition. Of course, if objection is made, I am going to offer the same amendment when we reach Senate bill 3308, but in my judgment it would very much simplify the matter to let it be adopted as an amendment to this omnibus bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It seems to me the two things are in a sense antagonistic. This is a bill to protect the rights of the Indians. The bill which the Senator has under consideration is a bill permitting the establishment of a claim against the Indians, and it seems to me entirely incongruous to put it in the pending bill. This is a bill in which the State of Oklahoma is interested, as well as the State of Montana, and I trust we may be able to get consideration of it. But I shall object to its consideration if the Senator insists on putting that amendment on it.

Mr. HARRELD. I would not insist on it being put on the bill except for the fact that the Senate Committee on Claims has already recommended the passage of Senate bill 3308.

Mr. STERLING. I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will not press his amendment but will let the bill pass. He will have his opportunity later to make an amendment to the other bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator insist upon his amendment?

Mr. HARRELD. I understand there is objection to it and I withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator withdraws his amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission to be known as the United States coal commission, for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, with the expectation of not bringing it up again to-day. I do that for the reason that the settlement which is in progress in the anthracite industry would seem to require such action. There may be some things coming out of that settlement which may find a place in the bill later. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection it is so ordered.

DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF FUEL.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributer, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator allow me to state the situation? This is a House bill which was reported to the Senate this morning and which, as the title indicates, proposes to confer additional authority upon the Interstate Commerce Commission in the hope at least that we may be able to control to some extent the profiteers who are now enjoying a harvest in the coal business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I object to the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill to which I have referred.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let us see what is the status of the motion. If the motion to take up the bill is agreed to, it of course displaces the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

REGULATION OF ELECTION EXPENDITURES.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I realize the very great importance of the bill to which the Senator from Iowa refers, but I feel also that it is very important that the bill (S. 3603) to regulate expenditures in connection with the nomination and election of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, commonly spoken of as the corrupt practices bill, should be taken up and disposed of, too. It must be done if there is to be any sort of control of elections and nominations. This morning, when the matter was up for consideration, I anticipated that the Senator from Idaho was going on with his coal commission bill, and I had at least some reason to think that perhaps if anything should happen to that bill, I would be permitted to take up the corrupt practices bill. I do not think it will take very long to dispose of it. I am in a position where I shall be compelled to be away the greater part of next week, and I would like to dispose of the bill if possible. I had been hopeful that the Senator from Iowa might allow that bill to come up first.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa permit a further observation upon the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. POMERENE. If I have the floor, I yield; but I am not sure that I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. I have no objection in the world to the consideration of the important election bill referred to by the Senator from Ohio, but I have offered an amendment to that bill, and if unanimous consent is given to consider the election bill, I of necessity must discuss the amendment which I have offered and which will, I presume, lead to some debate.

Mr. POMERENE. I knew, of course, that the Senator from New Jersey expected to offer an amendment. It is the same one, I take it, which was suggested in the committee?

Mr. EDGE. Yes; and the amendment has been printed.

Mr. POMERENE. I was not aware of that. I think it would only involve a brief discussion, because it is not an involved amendment at all, either as to the facts or the propositions of legislation.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CUMMINS. If I have the right to yield, I do so. However, I have something to say about the matter.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I have this to say to my friend from Ohio. Of course, we can not measure the relative importance of measures before the Senate. Both bills are important, as we all recognize, but at the present time the coal situation presents a crisis. If that matter might be disposed of first, I think we might well assure the Senator from Ohio that the other measure will be disposed of before the present session of Congress closes. There is no disposition so far as I know, and certainly not on the part of any Republican Member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to sidetrack the bill. In fact, we are all for it and want to have it passed. We think it an important measure and that it should be considered and that we should have legislation upon the subject. But after all there is no election until the 7th of November. We are sure to pass the measure before that time and it is sure to be enacted into law before that time so as to be effective when the election occurs. Will not that suit the Senator?

Mr. POMERENE. Of course the campaigns are on now. That presents an important phase of the matter. I realize the importance of the measure which the Senator from Iowa has in charge, but I want to offer the suggestion that I be given unanimous consent to take up the corrupt practices act on the convening of the Senate in the morning. That would give all this afternoon for the consideration of the coal bill.

Mr. LENROOT. If we adjourn to-night. Otherwise it would displace the other bill.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not want to take any undue advantage and would not do that, but my belief is that within a couple of hours at the outside we can dispose of the corrupt practices act and that will leave me in a position where I can fill my other engagements.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I make a suggestion? Let us agree to adjourn, when the session of the Senate closes this evening, until 11 o'clock to-morrow. That would give the Senator from Ohio two hours at least in the morning in which to dispose of his bill.

Mr. POMERENE. If that is accompanied with the further understanding that we shall take up the corrupt practices act immediately upon the convening of the Senate, it will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. CURTIS. Upon the disposition of the routine morning business.

Mr. POMERENE. I would accept it with that understanding.

Mr. CUMMINS. That will be entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. POMERENE. Then it is understood that when we close the session of the Senate this afternoon we shall adjourn, and that we shall adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. CUMMINS. And that immediately after the routine morning business is disposed of the corrupt practices bill shall be taken up.

Mr. POMERENE. May I have unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its session to-night it shall adjourn until 11 o'clock in the morning?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourns to-day it shall adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning, and that immediately after the routine morning business is disposed of the Senate shall take up the corrupt practices act for consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. POMERENE. That is satisfactory to me.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and that Mr. FORDNEY, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Mr. LONGWORTH, Mr. GARNER, and Mr. COLLIER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12493) amending the act of June 30, 1922, making appropriations for military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF FUEL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel administrator, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I would like to state in a few words why I want to have the bill taken up. It is recognized everywhere that we are at this time passing through a tragedy which has no parallel in the past, and I hope will have no parallel in the future. The bill is not directed toward the settlement of a strike. It is not directed toward the possession of the railroads on the part of the Government. It is not directed toward the possession of the coal mines on the part of the Government. But there is a sharp, severe shortage in both bituminous coal and anthracite. Whether there will be any improvement in the anthracite situation depends upon conditions which we can not now predict, but there is being produced at this time an abundance of bituminous coal. Nevertheless there is the shortage of which I have spoken at the points at which the coal is to be consumed.

The shortage is not only on account of the suspension of the coal industry for something like five months, but it is because it is utterly impossible for the transportation companies to move the coal to the point at which it is to be consumed with sufficient rapidity to meet the demands of those who are to consume it. That gives an opportunity for those who are conscienceless enough to do it to exact unfair and unreasonable prices for the coal, and that is being done at the present time. I do not intend to single out any mine operator or mine field, but that both operators and dealers are exacting unfair and unreasonable prices for the commodity which they produce and in which they deal is an acknowledged fact. I assume there is not a Senator here who does not know that to be true from the knowledge he has of his own community. The bill is intended to give the Interstate Commerce Commission authority to prevent the extortion which is now being practiced everywhere, not by every coal operator, not by every dealer, but practically everywhere throughout the country.

I hope in view of the emergency, and it is a very grave emergency, that the Senate will agree to proceed to the consideration of the bill. For every day that passes, the undue profits which are passing into the hands of those who are willing to take advantage of the situation are immense and can never be recovered. We can never restore to those who are compelled to pay the extortionate prices the amounts which they are now paying.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I inquire of the Senator from Iowa whether the bill reaches not only the question of transportation and the operators, but if it extends to the dealers, so that it is a protection to the consumers?

Mr. CUMMINS. In some instances it will extend to the dealer. It depends upon how the dealer is doing business. I do not pretend to say that the bill will repress all the extortion that might be taking place in some of the States, but it will go very far in that direction.

Mr. SUTHERLAND obtained the floor.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to propound an inquiry to the Senator from Iowa. The Senator knows that copies of the bill are not available, and I ask the question entirely for information. Is there anything in this bill that authorizes any agency of the Government to take over or to operate any coal mines anywhere?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is nothing in either bill that authorizes any such action on the part of anybody.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, there is, of course, a considerable crisis with reference to the two great strikes which have been in progress causing a shortage of coal; it is possible that some legislation should be enacted; but I think, although the popular impression may be to the contrary, that we are in more danger of too hasty legislation than we are of too deliberate legislation. This is a very important as well as a very drastic piece of legislation which is now proposed, having no parallel, so far as I know, in time of peace. It would affect the property and the rights of a very large number of people. The bill has not even been printed; it is not upon the desk of any Senator. I do not believe that the situation is so acute that this bill should be taken up thus hurriedly, when the Members of this body are not permitted even to see a copy of it. I believe that no interest which is proposed to be benefited by the passage of the bill will be harmed by delay until to-morrow, or even later, when Senators may have an ample opportunity to study the bill and learn what is in it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. In reply to the first point which has been made by the Senator from West Virigina, I desire to say that there was a bill reported from the Interstate Commerce Committee several days ago on this subject and I intend to ask the Senate to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. Senators have had ample opportunity to ascertain what is in the Senate bill; I think the Senate bill is to be preferred; and I shall ask the substitution of that bill for the House bill before we come to a final disposition of the matter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But, Mr. President, in order intelligently to pass upon that question, Senators should have an opportunity to study, at least, to read, the provisions of the House bill. It seems to me there is no occasion for this great haste. A few hours will not materially affect the question. I think that this measure should be taken up to-morrow, in the regular order, when Senators shall have had an opportunity to study and compare the two bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in reference to the pending bill, and I suppose now is just as good a time as any to say them.

I do not suppose that there is any man, woman, or child in America who does not regret the distressed condition of the American people due to the lack of fuel supplies for the coming winter, and I am sure that everyone who can possibly aid in facilitating the production of a suitable supply of coal desires to do so. The proposed substitute bill, somewhat on the same lines as the bill which came from the other House, was reported to the Senate with that general view in mind, and under the cry that it was designed to meet the distressing condition which prevails regarding fuel supplies. Mr. President, I think before we pass the proposed legislation we might as well take stock of the situation and understand just where this bill stands.

It is known to all men that the bituminous coal strike began last spring; that it was in active operation until several weeks ago; that it has now ceased; and that there is no coal strike in any bituminous coal mine in America. It is also well known to us all that early in July, or possibly in June——

Mr. CUMMINS. On July 1.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On July 1, the Senator from Iowa advises me, the coal strike in the anthracite fields took place and we are informed on the floor of the Senate by the Senator in charge of the coal investigation bill that he now proposes to lay that bill aside because that coal strike is about to be concluded in the next day or two, and that intimation is also given by the press.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wish to make a correction there. I assumed that the Senator from Alabama was about to speak of the railroad strike and not of the anthracite strike.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the anthracite strike began in July.

Mr. LENROOT. It was before that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, in June.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It began on April 1.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think the anthracite strike commenced April 1; so that it has been in effect for five months.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thank the Senator for the information; I was not quite sure about that. The strike commenced in April, and is about to be concluded.

The strike of the railway shopmen started about July 1, last, and is still in progress. Those are the conditions—two coal strikes and one railroad strike—which resulted in the distress of the people by reason of the lack of a supply of coal. One of the coal strikes has been ended, and all of the miners are back at work. The other, we are authoritatively informed on the floor of the Senate, will be ended in a day or two and the miners will go back to work. The real problem then which confronts the country so far as the shortage of a coal supply for the people of America is concerned is a railroad strike, and that is not touched by this bill. It is not referred to by this bill.

Of course the Senator in charge of the bill may say that because of the coal strike there is a shortage of coal in the country. I have no doubt that to a certain extent that is true; that there is a less supply of coal than if the strikes had not occurred, but this bill is not going to create any more coal. We are not by the enactment of legislation going to provide a supply of coal which does not exist. If there is a shortage of coal, if there is not enough to supply the American people, then somebody is going to be short, and we can not keep them from being short of coal by any legislation which may be passed. It is true that John Smith may be short of coal now and under existing contracts Bill Brown may be going to get his coal, and we may enact legislation to take the coal away from Bill Brown and give it to John Smith, but that will not create any more coal. Only the same amount of coal will be available.

Mr. President, I can not understand, if this distressed condition exists and can be remedied by legislation, why we should have waited from the 1st of April to the 1st of September before making any attempt to relieve the situation, if it can be relieved by legislation. I think the Senator from Iowa may reply that by "orders in council" the administration has attempted to relieve the conditions in the past. The administration by "orders in council" has attempted to relieve the situation in the last few months by directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to do just what this bill provides they shall do.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not recognize the phrase "orders in council"——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is a convenient way of describing the situation.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Interstate Commerce Commission has certain powers in regard to priority of shipments and embargoes upon shipments, and those powers were invoked for this very purpose, among others, some time ago. However, it has developed that the Interstate Commerce Commission is exceedingly doubtful about its authority to proceed under existing law to embargo or to issue an order of priority bottomed upon an unreasonable exaction in the price of coal. This bill is to supply that lack of authority as believed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. That is all that it is; there is no administration invested with the authority to fix the price of coal or to say whether or not a price is reasonable.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, that is just exactly what I have to say about this bill. Here we have been through a summer when the country faced strikes in practically all the coal districts of America except one. Knowing that there was going to be a shortage of coal, the administration, by its orders, directed the Interstate Commerce Commission to use its power of giving priority in shipment, and, more than that, announced to the country by proclamation, by orders, and through the newspaper press, that it had authority to give priority in shipment; and there is not a line in the bill now pending before the Senate that confers on the Interstate Commerce Commission any additional power to give priority above what it has to-day under the so-called Esch-Cummins law. There is not a power conferred in the bill I hold in my hand, that you ask us to pass, more than is conferred in the law to-day. I refer to the railroad enactment of 1920, known as the Cummins bill, which my friend across the aisle had the honor to introduce, and which bears his name; and he knows just what I say—that the bill which he now champions confers no power greater than that conferred in the bill which was passed in 1920.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it the Senator's view that the Interstate Commerce Commission, under the existing law, can give a priority to one individual based upon the proposition that he will sell his coal at a less price than another individual will sell his coal?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not understand that the bill before the Senate gives that power. If there is anything in the bill before the Senate that gives that power in direct terms, I fail to find it. I will say to the Senator what is in this bill and what is in the present law.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to frame my question a little differently, then, before the Senator does that. Under existing law, does the Senator think that if an operator is willing to sell his coal at a reasonable price, he can be given priority over another operator who charges an extortionate price?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The administration said that in its orders in council. It said it all summer. It said it up to this good hour. I do not have to go to any higher authority on that subject than what has already been proclaimed.

Mr. LENROOT. No; but I should like to know the Senator's opinion about it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My opinion will not affect the situation. I am reviewing the situation as expressed by those in authority. I think the present law is a very good law. I approved of the action of the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee when he put this provision in the law. He authorized the Interstate Commerce Commission to give priority in shipment whenever a national emergency arose, so that they could relieve the people of the United States by giving priority in shipment. I have no complaint to make against the chairman of the committee or the committee or the Congress or the law in that regard. That provision was put into the law to meet emergencies, and for no other purpose.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. From what the Senator says, then, the general terms incorporated in the Esch-Cummins Act include these terms, and confer the same power that they are intended to confer. Is that right?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Absolutely. If there is any difference, and the Senator can point it out to me, I should like to know what it is—I mean so far as the Interstate Commerce Commission is concerned. Does the Senator see any difference?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I am quite inclined to agree with the Senator; but the Interstate Commerce Commission think they have not the power conferred by this measure, and that is the reason for the formulation of the measure.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The only trouble with the Interstate Commerce Commission is that we have loaded them and loaded them and loaded them. When anything came up that we wanted to do we have dropped it into the basket of the Interstate Commerce Commission, until we are overworking them and they want to throw off the load we are putting on them. That is about what the real question is.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The Senator was a member of the committee that aided in the formulation of the Esch-Cummins Act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have just stated that I approved of it.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The Senator approved of it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. And when the Senator approved of it he thought that it conferred the power that this measure confers?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I will be candid. It said "emergencies." I did not analyze the emergencies, and I do not know now that I can say that at that time I was thinking of a coal strike, but I realized that emergencies might come in the transportation of products in the United States, and I was willing that this power should be given in emergencies. It might have been war; we probably had war in mind more than anything else at the time of the enactment of the law; but we said "national emergencies," and of course this is either an emergency or it is not. If it is an emergency, the power exists. If it is not an emergency, there is no reason for passing this bill.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. We are proceeding on the theory that there is an emergency, and that when we passed the present general law we intended to cover an emergency. The Senator thought, and I thought, and we all thought, that we were covering all cases of emergency that might arise. If we intended to do that, and yet the Interstate Commerce Commission think that we have not done it, why do we not do it by passing this bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Interstate Commerce Commission evidently do not think any such thing, because if they had thought that they would not have been exercising the power all summer. I agree with the Senator from my information, although I have talked to none of the commission, but from what I have heard generally I understand that the Interstate Commerce Commission are not desirous of exercising this power in this particular way, but the idea that they do not believe they have the power is controverted by the facts. It is a reflection on the commission to say that they do not believe they have the power after they have exercised the power for three months this summer.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am gratified, of course, to hear the Senator from Alabama speak well of this particular part of the railroad act. but——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agreed with the Senator in committee on it. He knows that, and has known it for two or three years.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suppose that part of it, however, is a legal question. I do not believe that the Interstate Commerce Commission has the power to do what this bill authorizes that commission to do, and I dissent from the conclusion which the Senator from Alabama draws from the priority orders and embargo orders which the commission has already issued. It has not exercised this power. The fuel administration asked it to exercise this power; and while I am told—this is mere information—that certain members of the commission, possibly the majority of the commission who were then here, believed that it had the power, upon further reflection it has reached the conclusion that it has not the power, and I agree with the commission in that respect. I do not believe that the commission has the power to lay an embargo against a coal operator because he is selling his product at an extortionate price. I think that is just the power that this bill gives to the commission.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just a moment, and then I will yield to the Senator. I am sorry to hear the Senator make such an admission, because his statement is an admission that under the orders this summer the fuel administrator and the Interstate Commerce Commission, in attempting to give priorities, have been doing unlawful acts.

Mr. CUMMINS. The commission has not done anything of that kind. The so-called fuel administrator attempted to get an agreement with the coal operators which would provide that they should sell at a fair price. and attempted to fix that price. The Interstate Commerce Commission never had anything whatever to do with the price.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, of course I know they have not anything to do with the price. Under this bill they do not have anything to do with the price. There is not a line in this bill that gives the Interstate Commerce Commission or the fuel administrator power to say to a mine in Pennsylvania or Ohio, "You must sell coal for $5 a ton, or you violate this act." They do, however, say to those mines, "If you do not sell coal at $5 a ton," or whatever price they fix, "no cars are going to move onto your sidetrack to go to your tipple," and that is what they did this summer.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Absolutely.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am sure the Senator is wrong about that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The cars moved under their direction, and they very conveniently did not move in the direction in which they did not want them to move, and they conveniently moved in the direction in which they did want them to move, and everybody recognized that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know; but the Interstate Commerce Commission has not attempted to prevent the loading of cars because the person who was loading them is selling or is about to sell the coal at unreasonable, extortionate prices. That has not been done; and, if I understand the orders of the commission correctly——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not charged that it has been done. I have not charged that anything of the kind has been done. In fact, I admit that it has not been done; but I do say that they told the man who wanted to sell his coal, "You can have cars at the end of your tipple if Mr. Hoover approves of it."

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say that any number of cars have been sent to mines that have been charging an extortionate price, and the coal has been shipped and is being sold to-day at extortionate prices in every city in this country.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That was after the other mines could not supply the demand.

Mr. KELLOGG. No; it was not after that. It has been going on all summer.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And the congested condition was such that they had to move that coal; but if that condition continues there is nothing in this bill that gives anybody the authority to fix the price of coal, is there? I do not see anything in this bill permitting them to fix the price of coal, but it does give them a right to say whether or not cars shall go to the end of the tipple.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I am interested in knowing whether the Senator on the floor or the Senator who is in charge of the bill believes that the Federal Government has authority under the interstate commerce act to undertake to employ that authority so as to regulate prices? If they have any such authority, then they can regulate the price of everything in this country by the simple device of refusing to a citizen a car in which to move his goods.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Only, I will say to the Senator, when there is an emergency.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Oh, yes; only when there is an emergency. What constitutes an emergency? There is no war proposition here. Of course, I think, and I believe most men who have read the Constitution of the United States think, that we stretched the war powers to the very limit during the late war. There is no war now; and has the Federal Government the authority to put in the hands of an agent the right to say that "there is an emergency, and therefore, because there is a shortage of a particular article, we will divert cars from the man who is charging more than we see fit to say is a fair price and close his mine, or close his farm or close his elevator or close his shop"?

If we have that power, then Congress can regulate the price of every pound of steel that goes from a steel mill, every bushel of wheat that is shipped in the United States, every foot of lumber that is shipped; and, without continuing the illustration, we can have the Interstate Commerce Commission sit down and say that no goods shall be shipped the price of which is above the scale of prices which we have fixed, and then attach a scale of prices that covers everything that is to be shipped. Does the Senator who sponsors this bill believe that we have any such authority? And if we have, will he define the difference between this Government and the most autocratic, the most despotic government that has ever existed on this earth?

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall be very glad, if the Senator from Alabama will permit, to answer that question briefly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not care to lose the floor, but I will be glad to yield if I can do so without losing the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. The question can not be answered either in the affirmative or in the negative, it embraces so many different propositions.

I have no doubt whatever about the right of Congress, if we have a starving community in one part of the country, to say that there shall be no cars loaded for any other purpose than to transport food and no cars carried to that community except cars loaded with food. I have no doubt whatever about that, under our power to regulate commerce among the States. When you grant the existence of such an emergency as I have described, I think we have the same authority, if we care to exercise it, to say that only those operators who are willing to sell their coal to a community without coal at a fair and reasonable price shall be permitted to transport coal to that community. I believe that we have that authority under our power to regulate commerce among the States.

I, for one, would not be willing to give the Interstate Commerce Commission the latter authority as a permanent authority. I would not be willing to give the commission the authority which is provided for in this act as a permanent authority.

I agree with the Senator from Alabama in the position he took in the committee, that if this authority is given, it must be limited to this emergency, and that the President should have no power to revive it. The President ought not to have the power to determine whether an emergency exists or not. That, I think, is for Congress. But I am willing, and I think every man ought to be willing if he believes it to be within our constitutional authority to meet this emergency in the way we propose to meet it in this bill.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama will permit me a word, I think the Senator has answered my question. He affirms that the interstate commerce powers of the Federal Government can be employed to fix prices, by our directing the railroads to refuse to haul any article unless it is sold at a certain price. He says that Congress ought not to confer that power upon any board, unless Congress thinks there is a real necessity; but he affirms the existence of the power. Of course, it is only one step from that to say that the people of the United States are entitled at all times to have reasonable prices, and that nobody should be allowed to ship a single thing at any time unless he sells it at a reasonable price, and thereupon to authorize some board to decide what is a reasonable price, and deny the highways to every man who does not conform to that price. If that power exists in the Federal Government, we may be just as certain as we are that there is a sun shining somewhere that some day there will be a Congress which will employ that power to control prices.

If the interstate commerce power goes that far, then it goes further than anybody dreamed of a few years ago. I am not discussing the question; I am simply pointing out the question. I am glad to know that is the Senator's view—I am not glad to know it is his view, but I am glad the Senator has so clearly expressed the view he entertains.

We understand, then, that this is a price-fixing bill, pure and simple, and that the powers of the Federal Government to deny or to grant cars are to be employed to fix prices on coal while there is an emergency; and that power, of course, we can declare at any time, whether there is an emergency or not. There is nothing in the Constitution of the United States about emergencies.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it is not my understanding that this is what would ordinarily be termed a price-fixing arrangement. The commission has no authority to fix generally the prices of coal. It must act upon the individual carrier, and because it must act upon the carrier it can not act upon any person. It all relates to transportation, and when the Interstate Commerce Commission says to the carrier that the A B company is selling its coal at $12 a ton at the mouth of the mine, whereas $3.50 a ton would be a fair price, it says to the carrier simply, "You must not serve that mine."

Mr. REED of Missouri. Establishing a mere subterfuge to get at the thing; but the purpose of the subterfuge is to fix a price, and if we possess that power and start to using it, we may as well understand that we will have opened a door through which may come a flood of trouble. Let me say this, so that I may not be misunderstood: Nobody views with any greater contempt or concern than I the attempt of any man to extort prices because of a shortage; but I think it is a matter which can be handled without violating the Constitution of the United States.

The Senator from Iowa, who is a very distinguished lawyer, thinks we have the power to withhold cars for the purpose of fixing prices. I would like to see that written into a law, on the face of the law, and put up to the Supreme Court to see what they would do with it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I do not think the author of this bill has any such idea, because the very purpose of the bill is to adopt a subterfuge, as the Senator from Missouri denominates it, to avoid that very legal proposition.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. That is exactly what they are doing now; they are fixing prices in this illegal way and without any authority. They decline to let us have cars in which to haul coal, although we have a contract for coal at $1.90 a ton. To-day we are offered coal at $4.50 a ton, and we can get cars in which to transport that coal at $4.50 a ton.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood that situation to exist, and that is the reason why I stated what I did—that in certain cases throughout the country, where men had contracts for their coal at less than $2 a ton, under these orders in council their supply of coal was stopped, and they were unable to get it, and now they are told that they can get the coal at a higher price. I asked the chairman in the committee if he intended by this bill to void contracts which had already been made.

Mr. KELLOGG and Mr. LENROOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield first to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I want to ask the Senator if he thinks that when there is a shortage of coal in the country, and the coal on hand can not be transported to an extent greater than sufficient to keep moving public utilities and railroads necessary to furnish food for the people, that others should be permitted to bid any price and have all the cars they want?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not said anything of that kind. If the Senator will allow me to get through, I will say what I really think; I have been very much interrupted.

I regret this distressed condition. I do not want any profiteers to mulct the people of the United States. I think it should be avoided if it can be avoided legally and properly, although I know you can not by legislation make 2 tons of coal where only 1 ton exists. I am not objecting if you try to relieve the situation in a proper way. What I am talking about is not what Senators say their objective is. I am not differing about their objective. I am differing about their method of approach.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, to what orders in council did the Senator refer when he said that purchasers having contracts for coal were denied the right to get it at the contract prices, but were permitted to get coal a higher prices

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do no say that the orders in council amounted to that, but the effect of the orders in council was that, and I have heard of a number of instances. My friend from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] testified about one just a moment ago. If the Senator from Wisconsin wants him to, the Senator from South Carolina can tell the name of the party concerned.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very sure there has been nothing done by anyone in connection with the Government, voluntarily or otherwise, which had any such purpose or any such effect.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will not charge to the Government a purpose, because I can not prove that, but I will charge to the Government the effect, and my witness is right here. The Senator from South Carolina gave me the names of the persons, and I have heard of other instances. The Senator named the people to me the other day to whom that very thing happened. So I am not lacking a witness as to the result.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator understands there is no power vested——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know there is no power. There is no power provided in the pending bill. There is no power now, and there will not be any when the pending bill is passed, but those people thought there was power, and acting under what they thought they obeyed it.

Mr. CUMMINS. The only way in which the condition suggested by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] could be brought about was when a coal operator was willing to violate his contract.

Mr. DIAL. I beg the Senator's pardon. The operator is willing to carry out his contract.

Mr. CUMMINS. Why did he not carry it out?

Mr. DIAL. They will not give him the cars to carry it out.

Mr. CUMMINS. There are not enough cars to carry all the coal that is being offered for the market. You can not make five cars do the business of twenty.

Mr. DIAL. I had two conferences with the operator yesterday, and he is anxious to carry out his contract, but they will not give him the cars.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to get this straight. Does the Senator from South Carolina say he knows of a case where the operator can get cars if he will charge $4.50 a ton, but he can not get cars if he will charge $1.80 a ton?

Mr. DIAL. I did not say he could get cars if he did charge $4.50 a ton. That is not the condition. But by the priority orders they send the coal out. They do refuse to allow the operator to fulfill his contracts with us, and they do furnish cars on priority orders and send them elsewhere, where they do get $4.50 a ton.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, that may be.

Mr. DIAL. They arbitrarily issue these priority orders.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED of Pennsylvania in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield. I am only nominally occupying the floor.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I understood the Senator to say that there is a contract for the coal at $1.90 a ton?

Mr. DIAL. That is correct.

Mr. REED of Missouri. And the man who produces the coal can not get the cars to haul it?

Mr. DIAL. That is correct.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But at the same time the man who wants the coal can get coal at $4.50 a ton and cars will be provided, but it comes from some other mine?

Mr. DIAL. Oh, no; it comes from that very mine. The Interstate Commerce Commission will not let him have cars to carry out his contract with us, but will let him have cars to take the coal at a different price and carry it somewhere else.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is because of the character of the industry. The Interstate Commerce Commission has classified the industry and the order in which preferences shall be given. It has attempted to require coal to be distributed to those points absolutely necessary for human life and for transportation. It has the power now to say that an iron and steel manufacturer shall not have coal until the wants of an electric light company, serving a municipality, are served. That is common humanity. That is the law now and has been the law for a long time and ought to be the law for all time.

Mr. DIAL. A Congressman told me just last night that one of his constituents had a contract for a set price, possibly $2 or $2.50 a ton, and that the coal dealer notified him that he would not let him have the coal on that contract but would let him have it at a price something over $5 or perhaps $6 a ton; that if he would pay him for it at that price he would let him have it, but would not let it go on his contract.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say to the Senator that shippers out on the Lakes, where there is no coal at all, have contracts for 6,000,000 tons and could not get the cars to fill the contracts.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want Senators who cross-question me not to be mistaken about my viewpoint with reference to the bill. I am not resisting the question that the emergency ought to be taken care of if possible.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I am very much interested in having the Senator's opinion as to how it can be taken care of.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Stop the railroad strike and you will relieve them, but that is what you have failed to do. That is what you should have done, and what you are starting to do just to-day. The railroad strike started on the 1st day of July, and on the 1st day of September the Attorney General of the United States takes out a restraining order to control the situation. The Senator from Indiana knows that just as well as I do. Therein lay the trouble. Of course the mining troubles have been more or less serious, but they have not caused the trouble and are not causing it now. As I said, by the bill we are not going to make two tons of coal out of one, but what is needed is to get to the right place the one ton of coal that you have, and you are not getting it there.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I am very familiar with the Senator's idea about how the railroad strike ought to be stopped, because we have discussed that question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator's administration has started to-day to do something.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. But we can not stop the railroad strike.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You are starting to-day.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. It can not be stopped in the way in which the Senator from Alabama suggests that it be done.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But your Attorney General has started to-day. He has taken out an injunction in Chicago to prevent interference with the operation of trains and with the operation of interstate commerce, and he is beginning to act. That is what I said a while ago. The coal strike started in April, the railroad strike started on the 1st day of July, and on the 1st day of September we are told that we must pass this bill within an hour because there is an emergency. On the 1st day of September the Attorney General of the United States begins to pursue a method to stop the railroad strike.

Now, I am not going to resist the Senator from Iowa in his effort to take up the bill after I have discussed it a little while.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the very point. I had hoped that the Senator would allow the bill to be taken up for consideration. I expected to give my views with regard to the powers given to the Interstate Commerce Commission in the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am perfectly willing to have the Senator to do that, but the Senator discussed the bill when he proposed to take it up. I supposed he was through, and I desire to discuss it without intending to trench on the territory of the Senator from Iowa at all. Now that I have begun it I desire to finish.

Mr. REED of Missouri. May I inquire why the bill has not been printed and given to Senators as usual? I understand there is but one copy of it here.

Mr. CUMMINS. I said, while the Senator from Missouri possibly was not in the Chamber, that I intended, immediately after bringing up the matter, to offer the Senate committee bill, which has been printed, as a substitute for the House bill.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But we would like to have the House bill so that we could see what it is proposed to strike out.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no Senator here who, I think, would not clearly and very quickly see the only points of difference between the House bill and the Senate committee bill, because they are not difficult to point out.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I have gotten far away from what I intended to say about the matter, because I have yielded my time. I was very glad to yield to other Senators. I am not standing here in opposition to those in authority trying to relieve the coal situation. I am not going to do that. But I am not going to say that they are meeting the situation with the bill when I do not think they are. They did not meet it this summer by orders in council, and there is nothing more in the bill that is now presented to the Senate than was in the orders in council this summer, except an appropriation of $250,000. This is exactly the same thing to be carried out on the same terms with the same force. Except that by law the coal shortage is recognized as an emergency, there is nothing in the bill that differs from the emergency and the power under an emergency proclaimed in the Esch-Cummins railroad law.

The Esch-Cummins railroad law said that they might use the power to prescribe priorities in shipments when an emergency existed. The pending bill gives them the right to exercise their power of priority in car service, embargoes, or other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier or region, municipality, community, person, copartnership, or corporation in case of any emergency in the fuel line. What do all those other words mean? Nothing; not a thing. They might just as well not be written as to be here.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Senator read only a part of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I shall read it all. I read from the House bill, but so far as this part is concerned it is the same as the Senate committee bill. The only difference between the House bill and the Senate committee bill is that the House bill seeks to create certain criminal features that are not in the Senate bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am referring to the last part of the paragraph which the Senator did not read.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will come back to that and read it. Section 5 of the House bill and section 2 of the Senate committee bill are the same.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not quite.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Substantially the same. Here is what they say. It may as well be put in the RECORD. This is all there is in the bill that confers any power of action:

The Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized, and is hereby directed, to receive and consider the said recommendation of the Federal fuel distributor and in its discretion to issue such order or orders for priorities in car service, embargoes, and other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier or region, municipality, community, person, copartnership, or corporation, and to take any other necessary and appropriate steps for priority in car service and for the equitable distribution of coal or other fuel so as best to meet the emergency, prevent extortion in price charges for coal and other fuel, and promote the general welfare.

Now, the fuel-administrator provision in the House bill, which is the same as the Senate committee bill under a differently numbered paragraph, simply provides that the Federal fuel distributor shall ascertain certain facts. I shall not take up the time of the Senate to go into the details of all the facts, but the facts are as to the supply of coal and the usual price charged and as to what class of persons require the coal for consumption; but when he gets that he lays those facts before the Interstate Commerce Commission. Now, I think if the Interstate Commerce Commission were given the money with which to function when they are given the power under the existing law to ascertain whether or not an emergency exists in any line, if they are compelled to ascertain whether an emergency exists, as they are compelled to do under the existing law before they grant priorities, if they had the money with which to function they would have the power to ascertain the facts in regard to an emergency.

So the power which is given to the Federal fuel distributor is, in my judgment, already in the Interstate Commerce Commission if they have the money to pay for the proper investigation. But there is no power in the Federal fuel commissioner. He is given no power. He can not fix a price; he can not order the distribution of coal under the provisions of the bill. He may be the generalissimo of your army in the end and do the directing.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree with that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator says he agrees with me that he has no power, none whatever. He has no more power than he has been exercising all summer without any legislation. He had some money and he had a right to make a private investigation of the facts in regard to fuel conditions, and he made it and reported on those facts. He did not have any law for it, but he did it. I am not complaining of his acts. He had the right to do it if he did not disturb the acts of other people and I have not heard that he did. He made his report.

Now by law he is to be authorized to make an investigation and report, but he is given no power whatever. The only power in the bill to control the situation is contained in section 5, which I have just read, and it merely authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to receive and consider, not to act upon, but to receive and consider the recommendations of the Federal fuel distributor and "in its discretion to issue such order or orders for priority in car service, embargoes, and other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier or region," and so forth, in regard to the fuel situation. What I said, and this bears me out, was that there is nothing in that language which gives any more power to the Interstate Commerce Commission than there is in the existing Esch-Cummins law.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield for another question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I feel that I have already trespassed too much upon him.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all. I am glad to learn the Senator's viewpoint. If I am wrong about this matter, I should be glad to find it out.

Mr. CUMMINS. The section of the bill which the Senator from Alabama has just been considering, eliminating intervening phrases which are not applicable to this question, provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have the power to issue priority orders and to lay embargoes to prevent extortion in the sale or disposition of coal. That is the only new language that is put into this proposed law as compared with the existing law; and if that will not accomplish the purpose then, of course, the law would be of no value.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But it does not say that, according to my construction. It is true that it does say that the existence of an emergency, a part of the emergency being exorbitant prices for coal, is the reason the commission may impose an embargo; but what is the embargo they can impose? The only embargo they can impose or which they have any power to impose is to say that no freight cars shall go across a certain track. That is the only embargo that they can levy, and that is an embargo which they have the power to provide now under the Esch-Cummins law, just exactly that same power. The Esch-Cummins law says they can use this power in an emergency. Of course, I do not think this particular kind of an emergency was contemplated; we were looking more to war emergencies; but the language covers any emergency. So, if there is a shortage of coal in the United States, as there is, and people are in danger of being frozen to death, I do not think it is necessary for us to pass a statute to tell the Interstate Commerce Commission that an emergency exists. We have known that this emergency existed for two or three months, and the Interstate Commerce Commission have known it. They do not have to be told by law that it exists. Every man, woman, and child in America knows that the emergency exists.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I call the Senator's attention to lines 20, 21, 22, and 23, on page 2 of the bill. I will quote the words:

and to prevent upon the part of any person, partnership, association, or corporation the purchase or sale of coal or other fuel at prices unjustly or unreasonably high.

I think that is a power that is not found in the Esch-Cummins law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was referring to the House bill. The Senator from Minnesota refers to the Senate bill, which I will come to in a moment, but I do not think they materially differ.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Will the Senator from Alabama permit an interruption?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I think that that part of the sentence, I will say to my friend from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], relates back to the power previously granted by the first part of the sentence, which reads:

and other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier, or region, or person, or corporation, and to take any other necessary and appropriate steps for the priority in transportation and for the equitable distribution of coal or other fuel so as best to meet the emergency and serve the public interest, and to prevent upon the part of any person, partnership, association, or corporation the purchase or sale of coal or other fuel at prices unjustly or unreasonably high.

This is all to be done by priority orders. The clause quoted by the Senator from Minnesota relates back to the first part of the sentence. If the Senator from Alabama will permit me further, in reading that particular section I myself was at first somewhat confused because the words which the Senator from Minnesota read taken in and of themselves have no relation to priority orders and confer an authority which I scarcely think our Constitution would warrant, but the words refer back to the power to issue priority orders.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I presume the Senator from Minnesota meant that the words referred back to the preceding clause, because I think we are all agreed that the only power that is given under this bill to the Interstate Commerce Commission is the power to regulate the movement of trains, but I wish to say that if this were really a direct attempt to fix prices I think it would be clearly unconstitutional.

We are all familiar with the recent decision in regard to a law enacted by Congress only a few years ago which attempted to provide a limitation as to the age at which children might be employed in industry and to enforce the regulation under the power granted by the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution. The Supreme Court said that we could not do that; that we went beyond the domain of the power conferred upon Congress by the Constitution when we sought to go into the States and to provide limitations as to the age at which a child might labor in a factory. The same logic would lead to the same conclusion if we should undertake to say at what price the product of labor in factory or in a mine might be sold.

There is no distinction between the two instances in my mind, but whoever drafted this bill evidently had that decision in mind and attempted to avoid it. There is not one line in this bill where the direct authority is given to fix prices. There are some criminal features in the bill, but they do not extend to the question of fixing prices; they go to the question of whether a man tells the truth in any representations made to the fuel distributor. There is, however, nothing in the bill to prevent any man in the United States who has coal for sale demanding $50 or $100 a ton for it.

I am not criticizing the author of the bill for leaving it in that shape, for if he had sought to confer that power there he would, under the decision to which I have referred, have destroyed the effect of his bill; he would have made it unconstitutional. But this bill seeks to accomplish the same thing by leaving it in the hands or in the minds of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine what is a fair and reasonable price. If the operator of the mine does not sell for what they determine is a fair and reasonable price, the commission will not give him cars to ship his product. That is all that there is in the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is all there is in it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is no difference between my position and that of the chairman of the committee in that regard; but what I am saying is that it will not be effective and it will not accomplish the result desired.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to read while we are considering that matter the language contained in the Senate bill, which I think is a little better than the language of the House bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I prefer the Senator's bill, I may say, and I will vote for his substitute.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it leaves no doubt with regard to the authority conferred. Whether it be constitutional or unconstitutional can be determined hereafter. Section 2 of the Senate bill reads:

That the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission * * * are during the aforesaid emergency enlarged to include the authority to issue in interstate transportation of coal or other fuel orders for priorities, embargoes, * * * to prevent upon the part of any person, partnership, association, or corporation the purchase or sale of coal or other fuel at prices unjustly or unreasonably high.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. That means, does it not, by priority orders?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is what it says.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Precisely.

Mr. CUMMINS. The language does not admit of interpretation, for it says that the authority of the commission is enlarged to include the power to make a priority order or establish an embargo "to prevent upon the part of any person," and so on, "the purchase or sale of coal * * * at prices unjustly or unreasonably high." There may be an interpretation of the present law that would give that authority, but I do not think so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not say that the present law gives the commission the right to fix prices; the Senator misinterprets me. I say that there is nothing in this bill that gives any power that is not already contained in the present law, and the present law provides that when an emergency exists the commission may exercise the right to impose embargoes so far as train service is concerned. I am not quoting the language accurately, but that is the substance of it. It gives the commission authority to provide priorities in shipments. I do not say it uses the word "embargo," but it uses the language "priority of shipments." However, I have the law now before me, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] having kindly brought it to me, and I should like to read it into the RECORD. I read from the act approved February 28, 1919, entitled:

An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes."

The act is called the "transportation act of 1920," but is generally known as the Esch-Cummins Act. Section 15 of that act reads as follows:

(15) Whenever the commission is of opinion that shortage of equipment, congestion of traffic, or other emergency requiring immediate action exists in any section of the country, the commission shall have, and it is hereby given, authority, either upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, at once, if it so orders, without answer or other formal pleading by the interested carrier or carriers, and with or without notice, hearing, or the making or filing of a report, according as the commission may determine: (a) To suspend the operation of any or all rules, regulations, or practices then established with respect to car service for such time as may be determined by the commission; (b) to make such just and reasonable directions with respect to car service without regard to the ownership as between carriers of locomotives, cars, and other vehicles, during such emergency as in its opinion will best promote the service in the interest of the public and the commerce of the people, upon such terms of compensation as between the carriers as they may agree upon, or, in the event of their disagreement, as the commission may after subsequent hearing find to be just and reasonable; (c) to require such joint or common use of terminals, including main-line track or tracks for a reasonable distance outside of such terminals, as in its opinion will best meet the emergency and serve the public interest, and upon such terms as between the carriers as they may agree upon, or, in the event of their disagreement, as the commission may after subsequent hearing find to be just and reasonable; and (d) to give directions for preference or priority in transportation, embargoes, or movement of traffic under permits, at such time and for such periods as it may determine, and to modify, change, suspend, or annul them.

Then the next provision relates to time of war, which does not exist to-day.

There are the civil provisions. They relate to the commerce of the country. I should like to know if the movement of coal is not a part of the commerce of the country? The law expressly gives them the right to institute an embargo; and what does an embargo mean? To prohibit anybody desiring to move an article of commerce from having a train in which to move it. It gives them the right to give priorities in shipment. There is not one thing either in the Senate bill or in the bill passed by the House that is not included in the Esch-Cummins law, which I hold in my hand, so far as power is concerned. The only difference is that in this bill an emergency is defined to be a lack of fuel in the country, and the Esch-Cummins law says "in an emergency" without defining it.

I say it is idle to define a lack of coal in the country as an emergency, when every man, woman, and child in America knows that it is an emergency when people do not get it freely. So this bill does not add a particle of power to the present law, and it does not give a particle of power to this fuel distributor. All he needed was some money. We can give the money to my friend, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], without any power, and he will ascertain the facts for the information of the commission just as advisedly as this fuel distributor after we pass this bill; and, in fact, as I said, the fuel distributor, Mr. Hoover, under orders in council—he did not have the authority of law, but he had some money, and he had the approval of the administration—went out and ascertained the facts himself this summer, and I am not criticizing him for doing it. I am not saying this by way of criticism of him. I am merely saying that he did do it, and nobody objected to his doing it, and that he can not do a single thing under this bill more than he has already done this summer.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption? I took the position awhile ago that I agreed with the Senator about the power, but the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]—whose judgment I am always prone to accept on matters of this kind—takes a different view; and I want to ask the Senator from Iowa whether the Interstate Commerce Commission have not said that they do not possess this power under existing law? That has been my understanding.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not believe that the commission has declared in a formal way what its power is with respect to this subject; but I know informally—it can be easily verified by referring to the hearings and the testimony of Mr. Aitchison before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce—that the majority of the commission have grave doubts, at least, with regard to the power of the commission to lay an embargo simply because the mine operator or the dealer in coal is exacting unreasonable and extortionate prices; and I know that the commission will not exercise that power unless we give it in the way in which it is provided in this bill.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. There is just the point, I want to say to my friend from Alabama. I was perfectly satisfied that the commission had all the power we seek to grant by this special measure, as is the honorable Senator; but my understanding was—and I got it from the chairman of the committee—that the Interstate Commerce Commission held a different view and would not undertake to exercise these powers, because they thought they did not have them. Inasmuch as the Senator believes they have them, and I believe they have them, why do we not give them to them?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not said yet that I was going to vote against this bill. I told the chairman of the committee a while ago that I was going to vote for his Senate amendment as a substitute for the House bill. I think it is a better bill in some respects. There is not much difference; but, at any rate, the Senator from Iowa puts a limitation on it.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. If the Senator will permit me, my objection to the bill is not the one that he has raised so much as that we do not get at the dealers.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How are you going to get at the dealers?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Well, there you are; and yet, if the dealer is the man that is putting up the price, if he is the man that is profiteering, or if a speculator gets hold of the coal, there is no way in which you can get at it by a priority order, except in special instances.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. So far as this case that I referred to a while ago is concerned, this child-labor case, United States against L. Cohen Grocery Co., in Two hundred and fifty-fifth United States Supreme Court Reports, there is your red flag. You can not pass that case in interstate commerce.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I want to remark upon the observation just made by the Senator from Indiana. I do not want the impression to get out that this bill will not reach some dealers.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I said, "except in special instances."

Mr. CUMMINS. I think probably in the majority of instances. That is, the dealer who is shipping coal from one State to another will be reached by this bill just as completely as the operator will be reached; but when a dealer gets coal in a city or town, and then begins to sell that coal to the consumer at an unfair price, I do not believe that this bill will reach him, and I do not believe that the Federal Government ought to attempt to reach him. If the State is so careless of the interests of its citizens as not to supply that remedy, then there can be no remedy.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that so far as a dealer is concerned, if he is a shipper, this bill can reach him by not letting him have the cars to ship his products; but that is the only way in which it reaches anybody.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the only way.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is no power in either one of these bills to affect anybody that tells the truth. There are some powers in the House bill—not in the Senate bill—to prosecute a man criminally if he misrepresents facts; but in neither bill is there any power at all except the power given the Interstate Commerce Commission to withhold cars for the shipment of fuel unless the man acts within reason. I say that there is nothing in the bill that is not in existing law, the Esch-Cummins law, except this: The mere question of appointing a fuel commissioner to ascertain a fact does not do anything. The Interstate Commerce Commission could ascertain the facts as to whether or not a necessity existed if they had the money to pursue the inquiry. There is nothing in this bill but an appropriation of $250,000 in addition to existing law. That is all that there is in it; and I want to say this:

I believe that there ought to be priority of shipments in this country, as far as coal is concerned, to people who are suffering. If there is any class of people in this country who are likely to suffer because they are not going to get coal, I am in favor of dividing up the coal of the country, if we can, and taking care of them. I should dislike very much to see the power given in this bill to favor one industrial enterprise over another, to say that John Smith can run his business because it is more important than that John Brown should run his. I think when you take that position you have gone beyond the scope of the emergency which exists, and will probably do innocent people a good deal of harm. You will have a chance for the exercise of favoritism where there is no real emergency.

The emergency that exists in this case is the fact that the transportation system of the United States broke down because of a railroad strike. If it had not been for the railroad strike, this condition could have been largely taken care of this summer. I know I can say this: Although there has been a strike in the mines, most of the mines are in operation now; but there are some mines where there has been no strike. I know that in the State of Alabama there has not been any strike in the mines and the operators in the State of Alabama have not been charging any exorbitant prices, because they agreed with Mr. Hoover and the orders in council on the price for which they should sell their coal, and it is admitted that they lived up to it to the letter; and yet every day now, and for weeks past, I have been getting telegrams asking me to try to get their cars moving. The fronts of their mines are choked with cars, and when they are filled they are not moved away so that they can put in other cars. They are not moved out of the district to the people who want coal, and the production of coal has been cut down in a district that was ready to produce coal, anxious to produce it and ship it to the people of the United States, not because the miners were not digging coal, not because the operators were asking exorbitant prices—for they accepted the orders in council, passed by your administration, as to what they should sell for—but because the railroads did not function and were unable to put their cars at the end of the tipple so that they could move the coal; and right now that condition exists. It has existed all summer to a greater or less degree, and it exists now.

I had a letter this morning from one of the largest producers of coal in Alabama, complaining that he could not get his cars moved to the place of their ultimate destination, in accordance with the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and in accordance with the orders that you put in this bill.

Mr. President, all I have risen to say is that I am not here to resist any remedial legislation that may relieve the people of the United States from a distressed condition; but I am not going to vote for this bill and tell the people of the United States that I am granting them relief when there is no relief in the bill. There is nothing in this bill that we have not had in the law all summer, and there is no use in trying to fool anybody about it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just one sentence: The difficulty so far as the strikes are concerned is ended. We have some shortage of coal, but the miners will go back to work and get out the coal as soon as they can. Most of them are back at work. The difficulty that is confronting us is the movement of cars to carry this coal to the people of the United States, and there is not one line or one syllable in this bill that affects that situation, and no legislation has been brought before the Congress that affects that situation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I wanted to ask the Senator what his remedy was—what suggestion he had to offer as to a remedy?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state it to you very candidly. Both Senators—the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Michigan—served with me, or I served with them, on the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate when the Esch-Cummins bill was passed. We put in that bill a provision for a labor board to determine what was a fair and just and reasonable wage on interstate railroads, and what were fair operating working conditions for the men. We put teeth in that bill, as we reported it to the Senate. We had the teeth in the bill to make it operative, and I stood with Senators on the other side. It was their bill. There were some on this side like myself who gave them the opportunity to pass it, or it would not be a law to-day; but when they carried it to conference, they eliminated from the bill the provision granting power to make it effective and brought back an empty shell.

That is what is the matter with this situation. If they had kept the power in that bill we would not have had the transportation system of the country tied up to-day.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What power, and how could it be exercised, and why does the Senator think it would cure the trouble now if it had been kept in the bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because the power to enforce the decree of a court is the only thing that makes the decree of a court of value in the first instance, and when that bill was reported all four Senators sitting before me declared that it should be unlawful for men to enter into combinations to overthrow a decree of this labor board; but they brought it back from conference without that language in it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I agree absolutely with the conclusions of the Senator from Alabama. If the railroad bill had become a law as it passed the Senate there would have been no railroad strike, in my opinion, and if there had been an attempted strike it would not have been effectual; and I am just as much in favor of that provision now as I was then.

The bill went to conference, and for two months or more the Senate conferees attempted to maintain the Senate provisions in that respect. The House was adamant upon that subject, and, although I am now betraying a secret which possibly is not generally known, it was not until the information came to the Senate conferees that if the bill passed with the antistrike provision in it it would be vetoed that the Senate conferees yielded to the House demands and allowed the bill to pass without the provisions in it which I think are absolutely necessary to any effective railway regulation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, there is no difference between the Senator and me, and the Senator gives me a piece of information I did not know before, and I do not think the country knew it before.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to be fully understood about this matter. I had no information from the then President of the United States, but information came from sources which at least excited a great deal of doubt in my mind before we finally yielded. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] was on the conference committee. He knows how hard it was for us to yield, and with what reluctance we yielded.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not saying this in criticism of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I have not said a word to-day that was intended as personal criticism of him, and I am sure he knows that. But I am talking about a fact. We are facing an issue here now. There is a distressed condition in the country. We are not dealing in theories; we are facing facts.

The Senator from Iowa may have been compelled in 1920, by the attitude of the President and the position of the conferees on the part of the House of Representatives, to surrender; I do not say he was not. But I do say that when he surrendered he left the door wide open, and failed to put up the only barrier in front of a great transportation strike in this country which could save the people of the United States from the dire conditions which are confronting them to-day.

I am not saying this in criticism; but I do say that the President of the United States has asked us for relief for the people of the United States. The Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the great committee that has these matters in charge, does not differ with me one iota in the position I am taking, and he says so.

I say it is idle to take this bill to the country and say we are going to grant relief to the American people. Senators know that we intended to put a just and fair court in the place of a strike.

It is idle for me to say that when you establish a court you are invading somebody's rights. A court can take me before it and try me for my life. The great life of the American people is at stake. When the fuel to keep them warm and the food that must go into their mouths to save them from starvation are at stake, is there any reason why you can not have a court that shall try the question as to what is a just and reasonable wage for any man? The court can take your property and your life. Do you hesitate to say that for the protection of the American people you will not establish a court which will stop this evil by determining what is a just and reasonable wage for men engaged in transportation?

For the reasons the Senator has given, there has been created a court without authority to enforce its decrees. How long would the decree of the District Court of the United States in any State of the Union last and be respected if the United States marshal did not stand with the authority to enforce it; and if anybody resists the authority of the United States marshal the whole Army of the United States stands behind the decree of the court to enforce its judgment? How long would the decisions of the highest court in the land, yea, more, the highest court in the world, the Supreme Court of the United States, be respected or stand as the law of this land if it did not have the power within itself to enforce its decrees? How long do you think this labor board, which stands as a court to determine these wage questions in order to avoid a strike, can stand and have the respect of anybody without power to enforce its decrees? It has already lost the respect of the operators and the employees. They have both spat upon it, and refused to obey its orders. How long will it continue to have the respect of the American people unless we say, by legislation, that its orders and decrees shall be enforced by the power of this great Government? If we do that, it will command respect.

I do not know what the President's position in this matter is; but that is not our affair. We can do our duty. We can pass legislation which will give force to the decrees of the court, and then, if the President does not sign the bill, the responsibility will rest with him, and not with us. That is what is needed in this case. It is not the power given to the Interstate Commerce Commission in this bill; it already has that. It is not the fact that there are some profiteers in the United States. That is not what the American people are suffering from. They are suffering, first, from a lack of coal, but primarily, and above all things, from the inability to move to the man who needs it the coal we already have in the country to-day.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator knows that the President, as a member of the Senate, voted for the clause in the Esch-Cummins bill which passed the Senate, which provided that conspiracies to interrupt interstate commerce in violation of the orders of the labor board were illegal.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course I do.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator knows I voted for it, and supported it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly. I had no doubt whatever about the attitude of the President of the United States in this matter until this afternoon, when the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, perhaps when the Senator from Minnesota was not present, stated on the floor that it was because of the possible attitude of the President of the United States that he had to yield when the matter was in conference.

Mr. CUMMINS. That was the President of the United States in 1920, Woodrow Wilson.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as I have been referred to in this connection, I want to say that I realize that after a period of two years a man's memory may be somewhat hazy, but not until perhaps yesterday or the day before had I learned—and I think my information came from the Senator from Iowa—that it was due to the position of the President of the United States that the Senate conferees had to surrender their position.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I had no communication with the President at that time, directly or indirectly, but during the long period in which the conference committee considered the bill in 1920 two things happened. The Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Ohio will remember that the Senate provided a labor board consisting of five members, all of whom were to represent the public, to be appointed by the President, a board with substantially the same jurisdiction which the labor board as now constituted exercises. That was the bill as it passed the Senate. That bill also provided that it should be unlawful to enter into a conspiracy or by concert strike in order to coerce employers in disregard of the decisions of the labor board, or with respect to any dispute of which the labor board had jurisdiction. After we had threshed that out in conference for weeks and weeks, gentlemen whom I shall not name, but who were high in the confidence of the labor people and of the railroad administration, indicated to me that unless we yielded upon those points the President might find it difficult to sign the bill. I have never had and did not have any direct information upon that subject. But the Senator from Ohio will remember that it was at the very last moment that we changed the composition of the labor board, providing three members to represent the public, three to represent the railroads, and three to represent the men.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not think the Senator from Iowa understood what I intended to say. I agree with him that the Senate conferees were obliged to surrender their position with respect to the penal provisions, and we came to that conclusion after perhaps seven or eight weeks' work in conference. We came to the conclusion that we had to surrender or there would be no legislation upon the subject.

But what I intended to say is that it was not until perhaps a day or two ago that I learned that the impelling cause was the position of the President with respect to a possible veto of the bill. I realized that the views of the House conferees were such that it was impossible to get an agreement to the Senate provisions. That is all I intended to say upon the matter.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is quite right so far as being compelled to accept the views of the House upon these points or get no bill. The President had said that the railroads would be returned to their owners on the 1st day of March or the 28th day of February. It was absolutely necessary to have legislation upon the subject. Whether I was well advised or accurately advised I do not know; but I do know that I was advised that even if the House were to agree to our provisions, it would be doubtful whether the bill with those provisions in it would receive the approval of the President.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the Senator is speaking of a matter about which I know nothing, and this evening is the first time the information ever came to me.

Mr. CUMMINS. And it is not at all material to this controversy, I may say.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No, it is not, and I did not say what I have said this evening in regard to the matter at all in criticism of the Senator from Iowa or the House conferees. I know the distressed condition which was facing them in regard to the legislation they had in hand. I am not saying anything contrary to that.

But what I do say with reference to the pending bill is that nothing is being done in passing the bill to relieve the situation. Senators may talk about profiteers, and there may be some. There are usually that kind of men whenever we go into the lines of commerce, but they do not represent the great body of men in any class of business. They do not represent them in the coal business nor in any other business. There are some unlawful men everywhere in life, and some greedy and some grafting men, but they are few, and that point does not go to the real keynote of the situation. The issue confronting the American people in the shortage of fuel to-day is the motive power to move the coal we have to places of consumption. If we had that power we could move the coal. There would be enough coal in the country to keep the people of the United States from freezing. There might be some great factories which would suffer, but there is enough coal to keep every man in the Northwest from freezing if we move the coal; but if we do not move the coal within the next 30 days they will freeze.

There is but one way in which to move that coal, and that is for the Government to function in regard to the railroad strike. No matter what may have been the difficulties which confronted the chairman of the committee or his party or the members of the committee two years ago, no matter whether those conditions confront them to-day, I say the responsibility rests upon them before this Congress adjourns to bring in legislation that will meet the condition of the railroad strike, and that they can not go to the country and say that the fuel administrative bill, which amounts to nothing, meets the situation.

I have served on the committee with the Senator. He commands control of the committee. If the Senator is willing to bring in a bill that will meet the strike conditions so the American people can have real relief he can count on the sustaining power of my vote and my voice, but until he does so I am going to say to the American people just what I believe, and that is that the bill now pending before the Senate effectuates nothing in the situation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I take just a moment in response to the last suggestion of the Senator from Alabama? I am in favor of antistrike legislation with respect to every industry wherein the Government undertakes to do justice to the employees by establishing fair and reasonable wages. I am not in favor of antistrike legislation unless the Government attempts to substitute something better than the strike. As chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I intend to introduce bills of that character at the coming session. It is impossible to control the present strike by any such legislation. I think it would be futile, and worse than futile, to attempt to engage the attention of the Congress to that subject at this moment. We can not, by passing an act at this time, make unlawful what was lawful on the 1st day of July of the present year. I hope that no such effort will be made, and I am sure none will be made. I shall join the Senator from Alabama with all the energy and strength I have to bring about legislation that may in the future prevent a recurrence of the disastrous situation which now exists.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, I am glad to hear the Senator say that next December he intends to advance legislation of that kind, but the Attorney General of the United States to-day has said that the matter is unlawful. He has asked for an injunction to relieve the situation. I do not see that there is any reason in the world why we should hesitate a moment to give to a court, which we ourselves created, the power to enforce its decree. Why do we have to wait until after election? Why wait until after the strike? There is no occasion in the world that I can see. Now is the appointed time, and in the distressed condition of the American people we are very much more likely to have the public sentiment behind a Congress that would write into law the legislation which the Senator proposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not waiting for an election. I care nothing about that. But the way in which we tried to prevent such situations as this in the transportation act as it passed the Senate was by making it unlawful to do the thing which the shopmen have done. The Senator from Alabama knows that we could not by passing any law now make it unlawful to do what the shopmen did.

So far as the equitable relief is concerned, the Government of the United States is simply seeking an injunction to restrain those who are involved in the matter precisely as nearly all the railroads of the country have sought injunctions for that purpose. They can do no more than to enjoin those who are preventing the operation of mail trains, those who are interrupting the flow of interstate commerce, from interfering with these operations.

It is true that the bill does not pretend to add a single car to the service or a single engine to the service. That is a different phase of this very complicated and perplexing problem. I have my views about the way in which it should be met. The Senator from Alabama has his views, and I think if we were to take the opinions of all the Senators we would find a very wide divergence of views with regard to the best way of adding engines and cars to the equipment of the railroad companies. The railroad companies are doing everything in their power to meet the emergency—I mean physically. They are not agreeing with the shopmen. I have not agreed with the railroad managers with regard to the matter. I have not agreed with the shopmen at times when they have declined propositions which have been made by certain of the managers. But that is not the question now before the Senate. I hope we shall find some way to add engines and cars that are now disabled.

But the pending bill is for the purpose only, during the time when we have no engines or an insufficient number of engines, during the time when our equipment of cars is insufficient to meet the needs of the public, of preventing the people who sell coal from selling it at an exorbitant price. They are charging $22 a ton in my State for coal shipped from other parts of the country into my State. They are doing it in Wisconsin and they are doing it everywhere that coal is needed. Why should we not do all we can to prevent that imposition upon the people of the country?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I was going to offer a suggestion and ask the Senator's views upon it. The Senator states that they are charging $22 a ton for coal in his State. That, I take it, is not the price at the mine.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not mean they are charging $22 a ton for the coal at the mouth of the mine in my State.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Is the price of $22 per ton, which is paid in the Senator's State, paid to the mine or is that the price which is paid to the retailer?

Mr. CUMMINS. That means that the retailer paid some mine operator about $12 a ton at the mouth of the mine for the coal.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Outside of the Senator's State?

Mr. CUMMINS. Outside of the State.

Mr. REED of Missouri. And then $10 is added afterwards. Now, is this not the fact—I ask the Senator from his experience for information about it—that in the greater number of instances these high prices result from the retail dealers or the wholesalers adding to the price and taking advantage of the people's necessities?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think to a considerable extent that is true.

Mr. REED of Missouri. This bill will not touch that?

Mr. CUMMINS. Not at all; that is, it would not affect the retail dealer who sells to consumers, but I assume that if the States are at all careful of the interests of their citizens they will take care of that part of the problem.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I simply wish to make one statement. In an investigation which was conducted by the Manufactures Committee over a year ago it was very clearly demonstrated that the household consumers, and even the manufacturing consumers, in some instances, in certain of the States, were being charged outrageous prices. I recall there were figures from towns in Wisconsin and towns, I think, in Iowa, and, possibly, in Minnesota, which demonstrated that the consumer was paying $15 and, I think, $20 a ton for a short time for coal. At the same time the figures also demonstrated that, speaking broadly, the mines had not increased their prices to a very great extent. There were small mines opened up which charged whatever they could get for spot coal, but their output was only a small part of the production. There was a considerable quantity of coal that was gotten hold of by speculators who bought up the spot coal and advanced the price to retailers. However, the result of the investigation left the conclusion very clear in my mind that 90 per cent of the increases in the price of coal—I mean the large, abnormal increases—occurred after the coal had left the mines, through the high profits charged by certain wholesalers, plus those of the speculators who cornered the free coal in the market, and then plus the energetic price raising of the local distributer.

All of us are alike anxious to remedy this condition, so far as we can within the just powers of Congress, but here is a bill which proposes to fix the price of coal at the mine, and to deny the mine owner who charges a larger price than that which is regarded by somebody—the fuel commission or some other board—as just, the right to ship his coal at all.

With the purpose of this legislation to afford relief I am in most hearty accord, but I wish to call attention to two or three facts which we can not ignore. First, the bill will not for a moment stop the speculator from operating. He can buy coal at the mouth of the mine. If the price fixed, we will say for illustration, is $3, the mine can sell it to the speculator for the $3, and may sell it in good faith, and if he can then buy up the coal he can charge whatsoever price he desires, and can ship it or have it shipped by the mine to the State of Iowa where he will receive it and then charge the retailer or the ultimate consumer an outrageous price for it.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from Missouri is a good lawyer, as is the Senator from Alabama, but his argument is in the nature of a plea in abatement. It has always been the rule in such cases that the man who made a plea in abatement should show a better remedy. It is the basis of the common law that for every wrong there is a remedy. The Senator from Missouri now proceeds to indicate what is likely to happen; he specifies the details of the emergency. Now, I ask him is there any remedy for this situation, or what suggestion does the Senator offer to remedy it?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota evidently thinks because I am pointing out the defects of this bill that I am against trying to do anything; but if I shall succeed in pointing out the defects of the bill, possibly we may then find a way to remedy them. I am pointing to the fact that the effect of this bill begins and ends at the mine.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Missouri has stated, as I understood him, that under this bill a man might buy coal at the mines for $3 a ton, ship it to the State of Iowa——

Mr. REED of Missouri. Have it shipped there to him by the mine.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well; have it shipped there to him, and then sell it at an exorbitant price. If he is not engaged in interstate commerce, the State of Iowa can regulate the price, can it not, and if the transaction is one in interstate commerce this bill will take care of the situation, will it not?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not know whether or not the State of Iowa can regulate prices; I do not think the State of Iowa, by any direct process, can regulate the price of an article which a citizen has for sale. But let me proceed step by step and perhaps we will not be so far apart when we all get through. I am pointing to the fact that the only regulation in this bill is the denial of cars to a mine which charges more than a certain price.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. It is not only to a mine but to any person who buys or sells.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Well, we intend it to apply to the mine.

Mr. LENROOT. I am speaking of the terms of the bill.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not care what terms we read into the bill. The easy way to avoid that suggestion is for the man to buy it at the mine and at the price of the mine owner and then have it shipped to another State. Does anybody claim that this bill would deny that man the right to sell that coal for whatever he could get or deny him cars in which to ship it?

